J. B.—The books which at first were the text-books of the Irish Church question, seem now somewhat out of date. The discussion has got past the stage at which books are of much value; and you had better study carefully the debates in both Houses upon the Suspensory Bill of last year, and the measure brought forward this session. There is, however, a useful little pamphlet in defence of the Church—"Facts Relating to the Present State of the Church in Ireland," by Dr. A. T. Lee (published by Rivington's); while the writings of Dr. Maziere Brady are, so far as we know, the best on the other side.

THE state of the Nisi Prius business is positively alarming. In the three courts in Middlesex the aggregate number of causes at the commencement of the after term sittings was no less than 395. Of these upwards of 200 are marked to be tried by special juries. Now, if all the eighteen Judges had attacked this mass of business, each would have had twenty-two cases to get through in the allotted fourteen days. As it is there are but six of them actually trying causes, which gives each one an average of sixty-six to try, and in the Queen's Bench the disposal of the first cause, which is going on at the time we write, has already absorbed four days. Therefore, taking the above average, the learned judge has sixty-five causes to try in the nine following days. If he disposes of a dozen it is as much as he can do, withdrawals and settlements being put aside, and it is terrible to contemplate what will happen next November when the arrears are augmented by new causes.

The great waste of judicial power is in the Exchequer Chamber. That court has been sitting during the past week, taking away six judges from the Nisi Prius courts. We say taking them away, but if they were available it is difficult to see where they could sit. If they were available, perhaps some attempt might be made to accommodate them. The first step, therefore, is to release them from their present appellate duties. That this must soon be done is obvious. It is far more important to the Profession that causes should be tried with dispatch than that there should be an intermediate court of appeal.

INSTEAD of committing to the Election Judges the business of bankruptcy and pensioning off the present commissioners, as was proposed by the Bill now in committee, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL has yielded to the general feeling of the House, that having so able and experienced a bankruptcy lawyer as Mr. Commissioner BACON, it would be a waste of judicial power to banish him and put into his place a Judge, or, rather, one of those Judges, altogether unlearned in bankruptcy law. The amended Bill provides that the first Judge in bankruptcy is to be taken from the present commissioners, with the full understanding that Mr. BACON is to be preferred. The new Judge is to take rank with the other Judges of the Superior Courts.

It has been remarked both in and out of the House, that during the present session the ATTORNEY-GENERAL has risen as much above the level of his former estimation as the SOLICITOR-GENERAL has fallen below it. Sir ROBERT COLLIER has won golden opinions from both sides of the House. Sir JOHN COLERIDGE has lost them in the same proportion. The explanation of this unanticipated result of the Ithuriel spear of office is, that official duties do not demand oratorical skill so much as debating power, readiness of reply, and tact.

The jury system does not appear to work very well in the County Courts. On the 4th inst., two cases were heard in the Chester County Court. In the one case a verdict for 10% was given in an action for false imprisonment, where the Judge thought that a guinea to a charity would have been sufficient. On a new trial being asked for, it turned out that the plaintiff's brother-in-law had been on the jury. In the other case, which involved the construction of a will, the jury were unable to agree, and the explanation given by the foreman was that one

MR. TAYLOR, who is carefully cultivating the character of grievance-monger and constituting himself the critic of Magistrates' Courts in general, has again met with a well deserved rebuke in the House of Commons. He preferred a complaint against the EARL OF RADNOR and a Bench of seven Magistrates at Salisbury, for having fined two young women 20s. each for stealing what he called a handful of greens from a field; and he added that the noble Earl and his colleagues had caused a reign of terror in the neighbourhood by their severity in this and other cases.

What were the facts? They were stated by the HOME SECRETARY, amid the cheers of the House, which thus marked its disapprobation of the calumniator. There had been repeated robberies of the same kind; the farmers and the labourers who held allotments had night after night their cabbages stolen. A watch was set, and the prisoners, aided by a younger child, were caught in the act of stealing them. Instead of a handful only of greens, the quantity taken exceeded one hundredweight, and filled two sacks, from the size and weight of which it was manifest that the purpose of the thieves was to have hidden them until their parents, who had set them to the work, could remove the plunder from its hiding place. The offence had been so often repeated that it was necessary to make an example; therefore, they dismissed the youngest of the party, and convicted the two eldest, who were of an age to know perfectly that they were committing a crime. The law, not the magistrate, inflicts imprisonment for nonpayment of a penalty. The fine in this case was designed to reach the parents, and the Bench were unanimous in their judgment.

Thus explained, there is no person who will not say that the sentence erred in being too lenient rather than too severe. The cottager is as much entitled to the protection of his cabbages from thieves as is Mr TAYLOR to the protection of his watch or spoons. The necessity for the exposure of vegetables where they cannot be guarded night and day is a reason for punishing the plunder of them with greater, not with less, severity. The rich man can surround his garden with walls; the poor man must be content with a hedge or a rude paling; but is he, therefore, to have no redress against thieves who leap the fence to carry off his cabbages? But Mr. TAYLOR cares nothing for this, so that he can find in it a text for attacking a magistrate; and, however reckless of truth are his complaints his purpose is served. He knows that to one who reads the answer, a hundred will read the accusation, and that if he but throws dirt enough some of it will stick. Probably he forgets that he soils his own hands in the process.

THE limits of liability of railway companies as carriers of passengers have been very elaborately and accurately reviewed and defined by the Exchequer Chamber, in the case of Redhead v. The Midland Railway Company, very fully reported in the last number of the LAW TIMES Reports (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 628.). The result is lucidly stated by the reporter in the head-note, and it is important alike to the public and to the companies that the real nature of their responsibility should be clearly understood, which certainly has not been the case hitherto. It is now distinctly laid down by the Judges that no contract either of general or limited warranty of safe conveyance is undertaken by a carrier of passengers. The contract and obligation is only to take due care, including in that term the use of skill and foresight; and negligence alone is a breach of this contract. "Due care" means, however, a high degree of care, and throws upon carriers the duty of exercising all possible vigilance to see that whatever is required for the safe conveyance of their passengers is provided and kept in proper order and repair. But this duty will not make carriers responsible for injuries to passengers arising from a latent defect in the machinery they are obliged to use, and which no human skill or care could have either prevented or detected.

It was further intimated, but not expressly decided, that even in the case of common carriers of goods, there is no warranty on the part of the carrier that his carriages are road-worthy.

DEFENDANTS OUT OF THE JURISDICTION.

It may, perhaps, be in the recollection of our readers that in 1868 a case (Allhusen and another v. Melgarco) came before the Court of Queen's Bench, in which the Court decided that unless the whole of a cause of action for which leave was sought to proceed against a foreigner residing out of the jurisdiction arose within the jurisdiction, leave could not be given to proceed against him under sect. 19 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1852. The case is reported very shortly in our reports (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 323) but more fully in 37 L. J. 169, Q. B.

The facts were that both the plaintiffs and the defendant carried on business at Newcastle-on-Tyne, but that the defendant resided in Spain. In January 1866, a contract was made between the plaintiffs and the defendant for the delivery at Newcastle of the plaintiffs of a quantity of manganese during certain months of the year 1866. A further contract was subsequently made in Spain for extending the contract to a further supply, and the defendant having made default in delivering a portion of the manganese, the plaintiffs brought their action, and issued a writ in pursuance of the section cited above. The defendant did not appear, and a summons was taken out before the Master by the plaintiffs for leave to proceed in the action. This summons was dismissed, and Baron Martin, on appeal, confirmed the decision. The plaintiffs went to the court, when the decision of Baron Martin was upheld, Mr. Justice Blackburn saying, "The whole principle of our decision may be summed up by saying that a cause of action arising within the jurisdiction means that all things constituting the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction."

We now learn that the plaintiffs were advised to commence proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas. They accordingly did so, and Mr. Justice Willes made the order which had been refused by the Master, Mr. Baron Martin, and the Court of Queen's Bench. On granting the order, Mr. Justice Willes made the following notes:—"I make this order according to the practice followed since the Act passed, and according to the construction of the Act which I have reason to believe was intended. The cases affecting the jurisdiction of the inferior courts are, I think, quite inapplicable. The Superior Courts had jurisdiction in such a case before this Act by proceedings in outlawry. They have such jurisdiction now on the subject matter confessedly. If the defendant chooses to raise the question, he can do so by motion, or perhaps by plea in abatement. I do not feel myself at liberty to depart from the usual practice without a decision of the court in which the process is, viz., Common Pleas." It is important that the existence of this construction of the Act should be known to the Profession, and, to show the practical benefit which has resulted, we may state that the plaintiffs have by proceedings under Mr. Justice Willes's order, obtained the certificate of a Master of the Common Pleas entitling them to judgment for 5700*l.* as damages for the breach of contract.

Had the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench prevailed, it is obvious that it would have been a direct encouragement of fraud. For example, either of the class of persons contemplated by sects. 18 and 19 of the Act of 1852 might enter into a contract abroad to deliver goods to the other parties to the contract in this country, and subsequently, finding that the market had gone up, refuse to complete the contract except at the market price, and there would be no remedy because the whole cause of action had not practically speaking arisen in this country. In Allhusen's case we are informed this actually happened, and the plaintiffs were compelled to give 30*s.* per ton above the contract price for many hundred tons actually sent to Newcastle by the defendant, but refused to be delivered to the plaintiff except upon payment of the advanced price. Mr. Justice Willes having been the chief framer of the Common Law Procedure Act, must of course be taken to have given it its correct construction.

REMOVAL OF NUISANCES.

A RECENT decision has surrounded with more perplexity than ever the administration of this most perplexing law. In the case of The Guardians of the Hendon Union v. Bowles, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 609, the facts may be stated briefly thus: A large number of houses drained into a covered drain, the contents of which made their exit on the land of A., so near to the highway as to become a nuisance. The owners of the houses having a right so to drain, A. had no power to prevent them. The Board of Health applied to the justices for an order upon the owners and occupiers of the houses to remove the nuisance thus produced. It was proved that no nuisance existed upon the premises of the defendants; their drain was properly sealed, nor did its contents in any manner cause a nuisance, until they were discharged into the open ditch in the field of A. The justices were of opinion that, inasmuch as no nuisance was found on the premises of the defendants, they had no power to make an order upon them to remove what did not exist there, and that they could not order them to remove a nuisance upon the premises of another person, into which they had no right of entry, and where to touch even the sewage would be a trespass on their part. The justices were further of opinion that the order must be made, if at all, upon the person on whose premises the nuisance is found; that it was his duty to remove it, either by prohibiting the parties draining into his field from so doing, if they had no right so to do; or, if they had such right, then to prevent the nuisance by carrying the offensive matter through his land by a covered drain. It was also the opinion of the justices that, where a great number of houses drain into a common sewer, it would be impossible for them to ascertain by which of those houses a nuisance at the outflow of that sewer was caused. Against this decision the Board of Health appealed, all parties having concurred in a desire that a point of so much importance should be determined by a Superior Court. With this view, the case was prepared that is set out in the report. Mr. Serjt. Cox was the chairman of the justices by whom it was decided, and the case was settled by him and the parties with the express purpose of procuring an explicit decision of the court above upon the simple question, whether an order for the removal of a nuisance should be made upon the person on whose premises it actually exists, or upon the persons, if any, who produce the offensive matter, however distant they may be, and although their premises contain no nuisance whatever. But, notwithstanding the care thus taken by all the parties interested to secure, as they hoped, a decision that would guide them in the administration of the law of nuisances, it will be seen that the Court has avoided the principal question—indeed, that alone for which its opinion was sought, and which, therefore, still remains to perplex alike the parish authorities and the justices.

CAB LAW.

In Cave v. Storey, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 618, the Court of Exchequer decided that a railway-station is not a public place within the provisions of the Hackney Carriage Act, and consequently that a cab there is not bound by the provision of the statute which requires the driver, under a penalty, to take any passenger who requires the use of it. It is a familiar trick with Cabbies not to see certain customers when there is a chance of selection, having a decided preference for a party of three or four, or for a stranger visiting London. According to this decision of the Court of Exchequer, at a railway station he is privileged to do this, and it cannot be doubted that he will make good use of the privilege of refusing to take a fare whom he considers unprofitable. A railway-station should be declared by statute to be a public place within all the statutes that regulate streets and public places. For instance: abuse, being drunk and disorderly, are offences only when committed in a public place. Should not a railway station be as public for such purpose as the street that is not nearly so much frequented?

THE CLAIMS OF THE COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

WE mentioned in a leading paragraph last week that a deputation of County Court judges had waited upon the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER to bring before him their claims in connection more particularly with the new Bankruptcy Bill. Their principal object is to obtain an augmentation of their salaries and, as a collateral matter of equal importance, an augmentation of retiring pensions.

No excuse, we apprehend, is necessary for our frequent recurrence to this question, inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the County Courts is in a transition state, and it would be most unwise that all the machinery should be altered and enlarged whilst the heads of the system remain unprogressive. We use the word unprogressive advisedly, and not only with reference to the pecuniary remuneration of the present judges. To them an increase is due as a matter of bare, naked justice. As stated in a memorandum which is in circulation, "Under the original County Court Act (1846), the judges were at first remunerated by fees according to the number of plaintiffs, amounting, in some cases, to more than 2000*l.* per annum; and, as the number of cases in all County Courts is now more than doubled, the result would have been that in some circuits the remuneration upon that principle would now have exceeded 4000*l.* per annum. The judges were also at liberty to practise at the Bar, and, of course, to act as arbitrators." The work has increased; the privileges are reduced; yet a salary is given in proportion to the state of things existing in 1846.

But the heads of the system will remain unprogressive in respect of judicial capacity so long as remuneration is stinted. We should not desire to detract in the least degree from the reputation of any existing County Court Judge, but there do exist doubts whether all are qualified to deal with the singularly complicated administration of the law now proposed to be imposed upon them. Undoubtedly they will well fulfil their duties in the infancy of the new jurisdictions, and they should be properly remunerated. But it is to be desired that the very highest order of legal capacity that can be secured should be placed upon the County Court bench. A very satisfactory result would follow the adoption of the suggestion of the deputation, namely, the increase of the salaries to 2000*l.* per annum.

IMPOSSIBLE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

IN an article on Mr. CAVE's Bill dealing with the constitution of Assurance Companies, the Poll Mall Gazette sketches out what, according to its own notions, an Assurance Company ought to be. It is not surprising that this journal, which, in a measure, has led a newspaper crusade against the commercial immorality of the present day, should err on the side of honesty and good faith. But an error of this kind is no less an error, and, therefore, renders almost valueless any observations which may be advanced having that error as their foundation.

It must be universally admitted that the failure of insurance companies has been a portentous feature in commercial life of late. As remarked by our contemporary, "The Albert Company now represents twenty extinct companies. The Eagle has purchased the interests and business of nineteen others, and the European represents no fewer than thirty-three companies which, unable any longer to support themselves, their liabilities, and their evil prospects, sold themselves as well as they could, and gave up the ghost."

This simply proves that insurance companies, like other companies, have been got up to serve the purposes of promoters; the number so got up was far larger than the public required, and the consequence has been a ruinous absorption into the few stable societies. The question is, whether this justifies our contemporary in going to that extreme to which it does go by demanding that before a company is tolerated as a public company at all it shall demonstrate impossible things, and that, when tolerated, it shall carry on business in a way which cannot fail to work a loss instead of a profit.

The following is the remarkable proposition of the Gazette:—"We have," it says, "always contended that no company ought to be allowed to take premiums and commence life assurance business until it could be certified that the capital was bonâ fide and fully paid up, that the directors and manager were not men of straw, that whenever a new risk is undertaken a sum should be immediately set aside sufficient to pay the policy at maturity, and that a clear and intelligible account of all such matters should be open to the inspection of all concerned, and should be certified to by a qualified State official."

Now, in the first place, how is it to be proved that the directors and managers are not men of straw? Are directors and managers to be compelled to open their bankers' accounts to inspection? And if they did, what would those accounts prove? Simply that at the date of the inspection so much stood to his credit. That evidence, of course, would be worthless. Then as to immediately setting aside sufficient to pay the policy at maturity, it is the business of an actuary to ascertain how little capital can be kept to meet the contingencies in order to free the remainder for profitable investment. If, immediately a policy were granted say for £1000, a like sum was invested in Consols to meet the liability at maturity, the small interest payable on those investments would render it impossible to carry on the business at a profit.

The short conclusion is that the official regulation of companies is a most difficult matter, in fact almost an impossibility. The public are in a great measure to blame for supporting young and doubtful institutions, but dishonest promoters are at the root of the evil. Until, therefore, our contemporary can invent a process for converting rogues into honest men, and giving the public sense and discretion, we fear matters will remain pretty much as they are.

ENGLISH AND COLONIAL LAW.

PHILLIPS V. EYRE.

A COLONIST, MR. JAMES BROOK, of Adelaide, South Australia, writes to us as follows on this case:—

Will you allow me space for a few remarks on this case, reported in 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 770. The decision is a most important one, and if upheld, must have a most serious effect upon the interests of British subjects who may have, or may have had, dealings with our colonies. It establishes the power of a Colonial Legislature to make a law altering altogether the character of a bygone Act" (LUSH, J., p. 776), and makes such a law binding and effective upon parties who have withdrawn themselves from colonial jurisdiction, and who base their claims upon English law, and are pursuing their remedies in English courts of justice.

It has always appeared to me (and I have made the subject of colonial law an important part of my professional studies) that nothing short of an imperial Act could effect this result. And after attentively considering the judgment and arguments in this case, I am compelled to admit myself in the position of the man "confronted against his will."

The principle of the decision, so far as I can gather, is that colonists must be considered as "foreigners" whose rights are altogether to be regulated by what is equivalent to "foreign" law.

I think I am justified in thus stating the ratio decidendi. Counsel, in arguing on behalf of the plaintiff, wished to consider the colonial legislature "on the same footing as that of any foreign country," but Mr. Justice LUSH (p. 776) said that, in order to make the analogy complete, the parties must also be considered to be foreigners, "instead of two British subjects." And, in delivering judgment, Lord Chief Justice COCKBURN says, referring to colonial legislatures, "the same comity which obtains among nations should be extended to them by the tribunals of this country when their law conflicts with ours in respect of acts done within the ambit of their jurisdiction."

This consequence would seem to flow from the decisions—once a colonist, always a colonist—always subject to colonial law with respect to what you have done, or the rights you have acquired, founded on acts done "within the ambit" of colonial jurisdiction. If the colonial Legislature can follow you and declare that to have been lawful which was unlawful at the time it was done, is there any reason why should be incapable of declaring the converse—that to have been unlawful which was lawful at the time? If it can take away a right of action, it can grant one; and colonists who have long since returned to the domicile of the mother country may yet find their interests materially affected by the ex post facto legislation of the same character as the Jamaica Act of Indemnity.

I certainly never had taken that view of the position of a colonist. The powers of a colonial legislature are derived either from charter or from an Act of the Imperial Parliament. They are subordinate and limited by the terms of such charter or Act of Parliament, and are only valid so far as they keep within the prescribed limits. I conceived, therefore, that a colonist, though living within the local jurisdiction of a colonial legislature, had, as a British subject, certain rights and privileges, for the enforcement of which he could rely upon the imperial law, as well in respect of the Acts of a colonial legislature as in respect of the acts of an individual. Where there has been no modification of imperial law by the colonial legislature, the imperial law prevails; and, in becoming a colonist, the rights and privileges of a British subject are prejudiced so far only as they may have been or may be affected by that colonial legislation to which he voluntarily and for the time submits himself.

In the present case, assuming both the parties to have been colonists, one breaks the law to the injury of the other, and the right to a remedy, thereupon, vests in the plaintiff—in this case—by virtue of the paramount authority of the law of England; not by virtue of any colonial law, or right or privilege which he enjoyed as a colonist simply, but, by virtue of his right, to English law, which, as a subject, he carries with him in every part of the British dominions, liable only to restriction or modification by the Acts of colonial legislatures, to whose jurisdiction he chooses, for the time being, to submit himself. Lord Chief Justice COCKBURN says (p. 770), "There is no doubt that a cause of action vests by the English law when a man sustains a wrong in a colony."

And assuming the colonial legislature had unqualified power within their jurisdiction, that they might have originally made the act of the defendant lawful, might have closed the courts of the colony to the plaintiff after the commission of the alleged wrong, and have deprived him of his right to damages there by other means, it is difficult to conceive on what authority they could claim to go further, and to pursue a British subject who has withdrawn entirely from the colonial jurisdiction. Is it simply because at the time the plaintiff's right first accrued the parties were living in the colony? or is it, as appears from the judgment, because the circumstances out of which the plaintiff's right arose occurred within the ambit of colonial jurisdiction, and might have been (but were not at the time) affected by colonial legislation? Neither of these grounds appear to me satisfactory, but I am unable to suggest any other from a perusal of the report.

I observe that a point with which we, as South Australians, are familiar, whether such an Act is authorised by the charter as one "for the peace, welfare, and good government of the colony," does not appear to have been raised during the argument. The question of "repugnancy" was mooted, but was summarily disposed of by reference to the recent imperial Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 63, s. 3), which was the result of action taken in this colony some few years back.

Another point seems hardly to have been argued, which may have some bearing upon this case—to what extent a governor, acting as such, can be affected by colonial law. His office and duties are regulated by imperial law.

I am glad to hear that an appeal is pending. I trust the result will be to show that a colonist in the position of the plaintiff is not in the position of a foreigner claiming rights to which he is or was entitled by foreign law only, and that he does not by becoming a colonist deliver up entirely, and without remedy or power of recall, his rights and privileges as a British subject to the control of a colonial legislature.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Friday last their Lordships (the Lord Chancellor, Lords Chelmsford, Westbury, Colonsay, and Cairns) gave judgment in the case of Partington v. The Attorney-General, in error from the Exchequer Chamber. The facts were these: In 1819 a widow lady named Shard died intestate, leaving personal assets to a considerable amount. The Crown, by Mr. Maule the then solicitor to the Treasury, took out administration to the estate, and the sum received by Mr. Maule and his successor on that account amounted to 23,884*l.* In 1823 Isabel Cook, the wife of Ellis Cook, both she and her husband being domiciled in the United States, applied to the Crown, claiming to be next of kin to Mrs. Shard. Her claim was not recognised, and she died in 1825 without taking any steps to establish her claim. In 1830, Ellis Cook died intestate without having taken possession of, or any steps to recover, the money in the hands of Mr. Maule, and without having administered to his wife. After the death of their father, the children of Mr. and Mrs. Cook applied to Mr. Partington (the present appellant) a solicitor in London, to take proceedings on their behalf, and a personal representative to Isabel Cook's estate, being necessary, James Cook, one of the children, executed a power of attorney authorising Partington to take out administration to the estates of both Isabel and Ellis Cook. Grants of administration to both these estates were accordingly made to Partington on July 23, 1855, by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. By these authority was given to administer "the goods, chattels and credits which, whilst living, and at the time of death, did any way belong to the estate." A suit was instituted in the Court of Chancery, under the title of Partington v. Reynolds (31 L. T. Rep. 7; 27 L. J. 505, Ch.), and ultimately, on June 26 1858, Vice-Chancellor Kindersley made an order, under which the above sum of 23,884*l.* with 34,124*l.* for interest thereon at 4 per cent., was paid to Partington, as the personal representative of Isabel Cook. Partington paid the money over to James Cook, in America, who gave a release for the same both in regard to his mother's estate and also as administrator in America of his father, to whom he had there taken out administration. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue claimed that the stamp duty on the letters of administration should be paid upon the entire value of the property at the date of the administration in 1855; and also that the letters of administration for the estate of Ellis Cook should be stamped at the same rate. This claim the appellant disputed, and two questions were thereby raised: (1.) Whether the stamp duty on letters of administration was to be calculated on the principal moneys only, which constituted the property at the time of the death, or also on the accumulation of interest between the death and grant of administration? On this point the Exchequer gave judgment for the Crown, and that judgment was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. (See 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 900; 10 Id. 751.) (2.) Whether letters of administration having been taken out to both Isabel and Ellis Cook, stamp duty was payable on both, and at the same rate? This was decided in favour of the Crown by the Exchequer Chamber, reversing the judgment of the court below. Their Lordships now affirmed the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber for the Crown on both the above questions, and decided, first, that duty was payable on the interest as well as on the principal, on the construction of 58 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched. 3, taken in connection with sect. 38 of the Act, and on the authority of Doe d. Richards v. Evans. 10 Q. B. 476. Second, that the same duty was payable on each administration, because there were, in fact, two grants of administration, and the duty must be paid on each, and because there were two devolutions of the beneficial ownership, and, therefore, two grants were necessary to complete the title of the claimant.

On the same day judgment was given in the case of Singleton (or Scott) v. Lord Napier. The appeal was against interlocutors of the Lord Ordinary and of the First Division of the Court of Session, pronounced in an action of declaration at the suit of Mr. John Scott, the late husband of the appellant. The question at issue related to the right of exclusive property in the two most important lochs in the south of Scotland, viz., the lochs of St. Mary's Kirk of the Lochs, in the county of Selkirk. The lochs are surrounded by lands belonging to four proprietors, viz., the Duke of Buccleugh, Lord Napier, Mr. Murray, and Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott claimed a joint right and common property with the other three riparian proprietors. Of these, Lord Napier alone opposed Mr. Scott's claim. Lord Napier contended that he had an exclusive right to the whole of the lochs and their solum, and that he was entitled to drain them and to use and dispose of the area of land which they cover as being his own property. This plea he founded on an original grant of James VI. of Scotland, in 1607, and also on prescriptive possession, quod dominus. The Court of Session (Lord Deas and Lord Ardmillan; Lord Curriehill dissentiente) decided in favour of the defender, the present respondent. That judgment was now reversed by the House of Lords (Lord Chancellor, Lords Chalmersford, Colonsay, and Cairns). Their Lordships considered that Lord Napier's title was insufficient to give him an exclusive right to the property in these lochs, because the grant of 1607 was a grant ultra vires of the Crown, and never formed part of Lord Napier's title, and because Lord Napier had failed to prove the exclusive user and possession of the lochs. Judgment was therefore given for the appellant, with costs in the court below.

The Shedden case still "drags its slow length." Miss Shedden was speaking the whole of Monday and Tuesday. On Thursday week she and her father appeared at the bar of the House, and the latter said that his daughter was too ill and weak to continue her address. The Lord Chancellor asked what was to be done where a lady insisted on pleading her own cause, occupied thirteen or fourteen days in argument, when three or four would have been amply sufficient, and then complained that much speaking prevented her from proceeding? Miss Shedden endeavoured to continue her speech, but shortly swooned, and was carried out of the House. The House then adjourned till Friday, when, at the conclusion of the above judgments, Miss Shedden again spoke till the end of the day. The Lord Chancellor, when the House rose, said that their Lordships expected Miss Shedden to conclude her case on Monday, and on that day the Lord Chancellor reminded her that it was the last day of her argument, and urged her to avoid digressions. Monday was the seventeenth day of the hearing. The Lord Chancellor, however, yielded to Miss Shedden's solicitations that she might be allowed to continue her address, observing that Miss Shedden's digressions and repetitions, and her rhetorical amplifications of matters quite obvious and simple, had caused a most unparalleled lengthening of the case, to the great inconvenience of other suitors. His Lordship added that no counsel would have been allowed to conduct an argument in the way Miss Shedden persisted in adopting. On Tuesday Miss Shedden again spoke during the whole of the day, and at the end of the sitting applied to have the papers in the case handed over in support of the application to Lord Penzance for a new trial in the Divorce Court. The Lord Chancellor said that the papers were in custody of the House, and could not be given up for the purpose named, while the suit was pending before their Lordships. Miss Shedden's argument seemed on Thursday as far from a conclusion as ever.

In future cases, where ladies appear in person, surely some modification of the use of the clepsydra might be introduced with advantage.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

The Judicial Committee commenced their sittings on Monday last, when the Master of the Rolls (Lord Romilly), Sir William Erie, Sir James Colville, and Sir Joseph Napier were present. The list contains forty-eight causes, of which thirty are appeals from India, four from Victoria and New South Wales, and even from the Admiralty Court. The case of Sheppard v. Bennett, on appeal from the Arches Court, will be heard this day (June 19).

No day is as yet fixed for the hearing of the case of the Bishop of Capetown v. The Bishop of Natal, on appeal from Natal.

On Monday the Beta, on appeal from the Admiralty Court, was argued. A French sailor on board the brig Xiste, was injured in a collision between that vessel and the Beta, and thereupon instituted a suit in rem to obtain compensation. It was contended in the court below that the Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction, but Sir Robert Phillimore overruled that objection, and judgment was given for the petitioner. Mr. Clarkson appeared for the owners of the Beta (the appellants), and argued against the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court.—The Judicial Committee, by Lord Romilly, said that the case of the Sylph, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 519, was conclusive on the point, and that the Admiralty Court had power to entertain an action in rem for personal injuries done by a ship, under the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 7, taken in connection with sect. 514 of the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104).

The remainder of Monday, and the whole of Tuesday and Wednesday, were occupied with arguments in the cases of the Karnak, the Great Pacific, the Lion, and the Maggie Leslie, and in each case the Committee reserved judgment.

On Thursday there was no sitting.

ROLLS COURT.

Several cases worthy of record have occurred during the past week. Lees v. Hibbert was a suit instituted before the passing of the Partition Act 1868, to obtain the partition of an estate at Oldham, known as the New Earth Estate, two undivided fifths of which belonged to the plaintiffs as joint tenants, and the remaining three-fifths to two of the defendants, who were trustees thereof for other persons, who were also made defendants to the suit. Part of the surface of the estate had been let on long leases for building purposes, the coal and minerals underneath being reserved. The plaintiffs now asked that a sale might be directed under the 3rd section of the Partition Act 1868, which empowers the court on the request of any of the parties interested to direct a sale of the property instead of a division, where by reason of the nature of the property, or of the number of the parties interested therein, &c., or of any other circumstance, a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds would be more beneficial for the parties interested than a division of the property among them. They also relied on the 5th section of the Act, which enacts that, if any party interested requests the court to direct a sale instead of a division, the court may, unless the other parties interested or some of them undertake to purchase the share of the party requesting a sale, direct a sale. The plaintiffs were willing to purchase the shares of the defendants, or to consent to the property being put up for sale by auction with a good price reserved upon it, as they wished to purchase it in order to get the coal. The defendants objected to the sale at present, as the value of the surface for building purposes was rapidly increasing. His Lordship said that he was quite clear that the court had jurisdiction to direct a sale under the Act, and suggested that there should be a direction for a sale at such time and in such manner as the parties should agree upon. After some discussion, it was arranged that the cause should stand over to enable the parties interested to come to some arrangement among themselves.

Re The Joint-Stock Company (Limited), Fyffe's case, was an application by Dr. Andrew Fyffe that his name might be removed from the list of contributories to the above company, on the ground that he had sold and transferred his shares before the winding-up of the company commenced. In Feb. 1866, Dr. Fyffe, who was then the holder of twenty shares in the company, sold them to one Strawbridge; the transfer was executed by both parties, and left for registration at the offices of the company on the 15th of the same month. It was not, however, registered, and the order for the winding-up of the company was soon afterwards made. Dr. Fyffe's name being on the register of shareholders at the date of the order for winding-up, he received the usual notice that he would be settled on the list of contributories. In June 1866, he attended at the chambers of the Master of the Rolls and resisted having his name placed on the list of contributories, but did not procure the substitution of Strawbridge's name for his own. Strawbridge died in June, 1867, without his name having been substituted for that of Dr. Fyffe, and during the past month the latter received notice that his name would be settled on the final list of contributories. His Lordship said that Dr. Fyffe was unquestionably entitled at one time to have Strawbridge's name substituted for his own, but that he had lost his right by delay and laches. In June 1866 Dr. Fyffe knew that his name remained on the register of shareholders, and that it would consequently be placed on the list of contributories, unless he succeeded in having it removed. But he had allowed a year to elapse without taking any steps to have Strawbridge's name substituted for his own; and as Strawbridge was now dead, and had no legal personal representative, there was no name to substitute for Dr. Fyffe's. The case was a hard one, but it was caused by the applicant's own laches, and the summons must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Re Mason's Hall Tavern Company (Limited), Orgill's case, was an application by the official liquidator of the above company that Mr. Orgill, formerly a director of the company, might be compelled, under the 165th section of the Companies' Act 1862, to repay a sum of 500*l.* which he had received under the following circumstances. The company was registered in 1866. Shortly before the registration of the company, its promoter, a Mr. Nokes, asked Orgill to become a director, to which he consented on condition that he should be provided with the necessary qualification, viz., fifty fully paid-up 10*l.* shares. Nokes agreed to this, and paid up in full fifty 10*l.* shares, for which Orgill had applied. The property for the acquisition of which the company was formed was purchased by the company for 19,000*l.* from Nokes, who had agreed to purchase it from the Masons' Company for 9000*l.*, making thus a gain of 10,000*l.* on the transaction. The 500*l.* paid for Orgill's qualifying shares came out of this sum, and it was urged on behalf of the official liquidator that the receipt of this money by Orgill, with knowledge of the source from whence it came, was a breach of his trust as a director, and rendered him liable to repay the amount under the 165th section of the Companies Act 1862, which provides that where, in the course of the winding-up of a company under the Act, it appears that any past or present director, &c., has misapplied any moneys of the company, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company, the court may, on the application of any liquidator, &c., examine into his conduct and compel him to repay any moneys so misapplied, or to contribute such sums of money to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of such misapplication, misfeasance, or breach of trust as the court thinks just. His Lordship was of opinion that no case had been made out for compelling Mr. Orgill to repay 500*l.*, or any sum, under the 165th section. He had not, in his Lordship's opinion, received any of the company's money, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust. He had received the 500*l.* from the promoter under the agreement that the necessary qualification should be provided for him, and there was no evidence that he had anything to do with the sale to the company, or with the fring of the purchase-money. The whole transaction appeared to his Lordship to have been perfectly bona fide and straightforward, and the summons must therefore be dismissed with cost.

Maltby v. Ware was a suit instituted by a Mr. Maltby, who is the leaseholder, for a term of which there are still eleven years to run, of the Bird-in-hand public-house, in High-street, Hampstead, against his neighbour the defendant, to restrain him from building a certain wall to such a height as to interfere with the access of light and air to a certain window in the plaintiff's public-house. In June 1868 the defendant pulled down the outer wall of his house, which forms one of the walls of a narrow passage running from High-street between the premises of the plaintiff and defendant, into which passage the plaintiff's tap-room window looks. The defendant began to rebuild the wall, and built it to a much greater height than before, so as to interfere with the access of light and air to the plaintiff's tap-room, and thereby, as the plaintiff alleged, seriously to interfere with his business. The plaintiff alleged that since the wall had been completed many of his customers had, on account of the darkness of the room, refused to be served in it, and insisted on being served in the parlour, which had the effect of driving away the better class of his customers, who used to frequent the parlour before. The plaintiff had obtained an ex parte injunction, and a motion on the defendant's part to dissolve this injunction had in August 1868 been refused with costs. The case now came on for hearing. His Lordship was clearly of opinion that the increased height of the wall had materially darkened the plaintiff's tap room. The defendant's case was that the plaintiff had acquiesced in the erection of the wall, and that his loss of light in one direction had been compensated by gain in another. Compensation was no real ground of defence; and it could not be said that the plaintiff had acquiesced in the wall being built, because he had assented on the defendant's representations that the loss of light would be compensated; and when he found out that these representations were incorrect, it could not be said that it was then too late for him to see his remedy. The suit was not a frivolous one, and the plaintiff's lease had yet several years to run. The plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction with costs, under which the defendant would be compelled to reduce the wall to its original height. His Lordship, after remarking how hard this decision would press on the defendant, who he believed to have acted bona fide in the belief that he had obtained the plaintiff's consent to the heightening of the wall, suggested that the plaintiff should waive his strict right, and leave it to His Lordship to settle what compensation the defendant should pay to the plaintiff for the darkening of the tap-room, which course his Lordship was of opinion he had no jurisdiction to take without the consent of the parties.

Re James Gray (a solicitor), the court was moved to suspend for a limited time the drawing up of the order, to afford Mr. Gray an opportunity of making reparation to his client, which he was earnestly desirous of doing. Some two weeks since his Lordship sentenced Mr. Gray to be suspended from practising as an attorney or solicitor for ten years, on the ground of his having filed a bill for specific performance in the name of the assignee of a bankrupt without his knowledge, and also that he had allowed a client to make an affidavit the contents of which he knew to be false. His Lordship at that time intimated that if reparation were made to the injured party he would reconsider his decision. A short report of the case will be found in the LAW TIMES May 29, p. 90. His Lordship now directed the drawing-up of the order to be deferred until after the last seal in the sittings after term; but if it reparation had been made by that time, the order should be drawn up.

The Watford and Rickmansworth Railway Company v. the London and North-Western Railway Company, was a suit instituted for the purpose of obtaining the decision of the court as to the construction of an agreement entered into in June 1862 between the above companies, for the construction and working of a branch line from the Watford Station of the London and North-Western Railway to Rickmansworth. This agreement provided that all differences arising between the parties out of the subject matter of the agreement should be referred to arbitration. A dispute as to accounts having arisen between the parties, the defendant company proposed to refer the matter to arbitration; this the plaintiff company refused to do, on the ground that the accounts in question did not come under the agreement, but arose out of transactions between the parties subsequent to the date of the agreement, the arrangement as to which had never been reduced to writing, but had been made verbally between the officers of the two companies. The defendants, in resisting the taking of the accounts by the court, relied on the 2nd section of the Railway Companies' Arbitration Act 1859, which empowers railway companies, by writing under their common seals, to refer to arbitration "any then existing or future differences, questions, or other matters whatsoever in which they then are or thereafter shall be mutually interested;" and on the 26th section of that Act, which declares that full effect shall be given by all the Superior Courts of law and equity to all agreements, references, arbitrations, &c., in accordance with the Act. His Lordship, though he considered the accounts so complained that they could not be taken by an arbitrator, nevertheless was of opinion that he could not, in the face of the objection raised by the defendants, decree an account. The words of the second section of the Act were very wide, and if the transactions as to which the accounts were sought to be taken did not arise immediately out of the agreement, the words "other matters," in the second section, were sufficiently wide to include them: so that, in his opinion, the jurisdiction of the court was excluded. The point was quite new to his Lordship; though it was quite settled that a reference to arbitration under the Common Law Procedure Act did not take away its jurisdiction from a court of equity. He should dismiss the bill, but without costs, as the defendants had not sufficiently insisted on their objection to be allowed their costs; instead of answering the bill, they should have pleaded the agreement to refer to arbitration. If the defendants would agree to waive their objection, he would dispose of the matter in chambers, but if not, the bill must be dismissed, without costs, on the ground that it was covered by the arbitration clause.

V. C. STUART'S COURT.

The past week has produced the following cases worthy of notice.

Sharp v. The Baron De St. Sauveur, in which the question was whether certain freehold and copyhold estates to which the late Baroness de St. Sauveur was entitled at the time of her death, passed under her will as realty or as personality. The estates were, by a deed, dated the 10th March 1862, conveyed by the baron and his wife to trustees upon trust to sell, exchange, or make partition of them, and, in case of a sale, to pay one half of the purchase-money to a Mr. W. L. Loveday, and the other half to the baroness absolutely for her separate use, and until the sale the trustees were to pay the rents as the baroness should by deed or will appoint, and in default they were to be hers absolutely. The baroness by her will, dated in August 1862, bequeathed to her husband for life all her landed property, situate at Ealing, in the county of Middlesex. Now, as the baron was an alien he could not hold land in England, and if the Ealing property, which was subject to the trust for sale, but which had not been sold, was to be still considered as land, the bequest in favour of the husband could not take effect. Another question was whether the testatrix, by using the words "landed property" in her will, had or had not elected to treat the Ealing property as realty notwithstanding the trust in the deed and the rule in equity that what was directed to be done shall be considered as done in reference to the conversion of the property. The Vice-Chancellor, in giving judgment, said that upon the construction of the deed the property must be treated as personal estate, for if it were not so the manifest intention of the testatrix in favour of her husband would be defeated. The expression "landed property" in the will might be considered as equivalent to "all her estate and interest in land" at Ealing, and had those words been actually used by her they would have passed the purchase-money or the right to receive the purchase-money of land subject to be sold. The baroness must be considered as having, by her will, elected to treat her unsold land as personality, and, therefore, there would be a declaration to that effect, and an order for a sale of the property and for payment of the income arising from a moiety of the proceeds to the baron during his life.

In Skidmore v. Bradford, which was a suit for the administration of the estate of a Mr. Jacob Bradford, a wholesale ironmonger at Manchester, the following question arose. Mr. Bradford had adopted a nephew, and brought him up to his business, and given him the management of one of his warehouses. In effecting the purchase of a warehouse shortly before his death, Mr. Bradford had directed his nephew's name to be entered in the contract as the purchaser, and after paying 1500l. on account, had taken the receipt in the nephew's name. Mr. Bradford had died suddenly, leaving the balance of 3500l. unpaid, and the question was whether the nephew was entitled to be paid that sum out of the assets of Mr. Bradford's estate. The Vice-Chancellor said that if Edward Bradford, the nephew, had been a mere volunteer, there was no principle on which he could have come to this court to have the testator's act of bounty completed, and this claim admitted against his assets; but if, on the faith of the representations of the testator, he had involved himself in any liability or had incurred any obligation, he could not be considered a volunteer, and the testator's assets would be liable to make good the representation on the faith of which he had acted. In the present case it had been proved beyond all doubt that the real contracting party was Jacob Bradford, that in making the purchase his object was to benefit his nephew; that the nephew knew all the circumstances; that when the contract was prepared the testator desired his nephew's name to be inserted, and that in consequence of that insertion the nephew lay under a legal obligation to pay the purchase-money. Having thus become liable to be sued and incurred the liability on the faith of the representations of the testator that he would give him the house, the case was entirely governed by Crosbie v. McDonal, where the argument of Sir Samuel Romilly had been adopted by Lord Erskine in his judgment. "Suppose a man, the frequent guest of another in the country, adjoining whose seat is a piece of ground that would add considerably to the beauty and enjoyment of the place, but an enormous price is asked; that the guest attached to the place desires his friend to contract for that piece of ground for him, and says he will pay for it, and the other contracts accordingly, and pays far beyond the value, would a court of equity permit that man to recede from his engagement? Would that not be considered as fraud in respect of the consideration—an engagement contracted at the request of another, into which, without that motive, the party contracting would not have entered?" Lord Erskine said, "The Statute of Frauds had nothing to do with it, for this was not an engagement to answer for the debt of another, but upon the faith that he would deliver her from the consequences. The defendant in that case, who was a lady, undertook to bind herself. The principle of law upon these actions is that, though upon a mere voluntary promise an action does not lie, yet if one man binds himself to pay, and does pay money in consequence of an obligation undertaken by another, the one has money which in equity and conscience ought to be the money of the other; and that is not nudum pactum." Applying these principles to the present case, he considered that the assets of the testator were liable to make good the obligation which had been incurred by Mr. Edward Bradford, and that he was entitled to have the balance of the purchase-money paid out of his uncle's estate.

Sir Roger Charles Doughty Tichborne, Bart., v. Piers Mostyn—Tichborne v. Tichborne, was a motion that the time for retaining the bills filed in these causes might be extended to the last day of Easter Term 1870. It was stated that the evidence which is being taken under a commission issued by the Probate Court could not be completed sooner, the time fixed for the return of the commission being the 12th Oct. 1869. The Vice-Chancellor made the order.

Tichborne v. Tichborne—Tichborne v. DeCastro, was a motion on behalf of the creditors of the late Lady Tichborne, for an order directing an account and payment of Lady Tichborne's debts, she having died intestate, and also for an account of her personal estate, or that a receiver might be appointed, ad litem, pending proceedings in the Probate Court. It appeared that the Probate Court had declined to appoint an administrator on the ground that as this court had appointed a receiver of the estate, there might be a conflict between the two officers in the discharge of their duties. The Vice-Chancellor said he thought the proper course for this court to take would be to give the parties leave, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver, to apply to the Court of Probate as they might be advised.

Ives v. The Shipley Local Board of Health, was a bill filed by contractors for an account of work done and moneys paid in respect of a reservoir. The Vice-Chancellor, in delivering judgment said that there were some peculiarities in this case which distinguished it from others of the same kind. The plaintiffs were employed by the defendants to construct a large reservoir according to the plaintiffs' specifications. The contract gave to the engineer the extensive and arbitrary powers usually given by such instruments, and it placed the contractor entirely under his control. The right to payment was made to depend on the certificate and award of the engineer. During the progress of the work the walls on the east and west sides of the reservoir, after being built to a certain height gave way. Great expense was occasioned to the plaintiffs in rebuilding these walls. They had been paid for the extra expense as to the east wall. But the more considerable expense for the west walls the engineer refused to include in a certificate, and the defendants refused to pay. The Vice-Chancellor then considered at some length, and said that there must be a decree declaring that the plaintiffs were entitled to be paid for the expense of taking down and rebuilding the west wall of the reservoir, and a decree for an account of what remained due to the plaintiffs in respect of the works; and in taking the account the plaintiffs were to be bound by all the certificates made prior to the filing of the bill, except so far as related to the taking down and rebuilding the west wall of the reservoir, but it must be declared that the plaintiffs were not bound by any admeasurement or certificates made after the filing of the original bill. The plaintiffs were entitled to the costs of the suit to be paid to them by the defendants up to and including the decree.

Waterlow v. Sharp, Gardner v. Sharp, was a motion on behalf of the directors of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, to vary an order made by his Honour on the 7th May, by omitting from it words describing the Rev. Samuel Kettlewell and Mr. Cadman as representatives of the mortgagees of the general undertaking of the company. The object of the application was to prevent any mistake as to the parties to be joined in the proceedings. The Vice-Chancellor said the matter had better be referred to the Lords Justices, and declined to make any order.

V. C. MALINS'S COURT.

A few cases have occurred since our last notice which should be referred to. The first was Weeks v. Jackson, which came on upon a bill filed by a master mariner and part owner of a vessel called the Kestrel, seeking to set aside an agreement and mortgage, and for delivering up of certain bills of exchange, on the ground that the defendants Jackson and Shepherd and one Strongman had joined to defraud the plaintiff. Jackson and Shepherd were joint managers of a marine insurance business, and they and Strongman, as it was alleged, negotiated for an agency for the sale in London by the plaintiff of the Preston Pans Brewery Company's beer, in respect of the purchase of which Shepherd procured a mortgage on the ship from Jackson (who, it was alleged, was his partner), and the plaintiff accepted certain bills, and executed a mortgage to Jackson at 10l. per cent., the result being that Strongman became bankrupt, and the plaintiff lost his money, about 600l., the vessel being sold. The plaintiff's case was that he was in infirm health, incapable of transacting business, and was taken advantage of by the defendants. There was evidence on both sides, the case of the plaintiff being absolutely denied, and a letter was produced bearing a date very close to the transaction, which the Vice-Chancellor thought showed capacity above the average, and he dismissed the bill with costs, making very strong observations on the course pursued by the plaintiff in bringing forward such a case.

The next case was Westbrook v. McKie, which was an old suit, relating to the property of Robert Briggs, formerly of the Island of Antigua, who by his will gave annuities and legacies, which were claimed by the Crown, on the ground of incapacity in the recipients, and also a legacy of 1000l. to a Presbyterian kirk in the island, in which the testator took great interest. It happened that at the time of his death, in 1861 (the will being made in 1838), the struggle between the kirk and the Free Church was at its hottest, and shortly after the well-known disruption occurred, and although one minister was inducted, he resigned after a year's residence, and ever since there had been only Free Church ministers. Under these circumstances, it was strongly urged that the doctrine of cy pres ought to be applied, this court having in Attorney-General v. Bunce so decided in the case of a Baptist congregation which had taken the place of a Presbyterian one at Devizes, and yet was held entitled under the most distinct gift to a congregation of "Presbyterians," sooner than that the gift should fail; and there were stronger cases. On the other hand, it was said that the doctrine of cy pres had been carried too far here, as the testator, being a Presbyterian himself, could not be supposed to intend to support the Free Church. The Vice-Chancellor, however, held that, the tenets being almost identical, differing only in questions of church government, if it was necessary to apply the doctrine of ex press it must be applied; at all events, the gift was valid.

The next case, a most extraordinary one, which has been noticed on a former occasion, was that of Pronjé v. Matthews, in which a Frenchman, who married an English lady, on which occasion a French settlement was made, claimed the whole of certain property which she had acquired in trade during a separation from her husband of thirty-one years, spent in great vicissitudes by her in France and India, where she was one of a mercantile firm. The facts were shortly these. Marrying in 1839, a few years after Madame Pronjé commenced an intrigue with one De Neuilly, with whom she went to London, and was followed by the plaintiff who was induced to forgive her: she returned with him to Paris, but, renewing her intrigue, they separated, and although she made several attempts towards a reconciliation, writing letters indicative of great ability and in the French language, they never again lived together. A child, Léon, had been born, which she admitted was not the plaintiff's, and she took him to Calcutta in company with one M. Chevrot, with whom she lived till his death: Léon coming back to France and being brought up, and educated, and provided for (by obtaining him a situation) by the plaintiff. Léon met at a students' ball a woman, alleged to be living an unchaste life and the wife of another man, and carried on an illicit intercourse with her, and Léonie (a defendant) was the issue of that connection. Léon subsequently took his paramour to London and went through the ceremony of marriage with her at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, took her to India and died there. Ultimately Mdme. Pronjé or Chevrot came back from India, bringing Léonie with her, and died at Bordeaux, being possessed of about 10,000*l.* realised by her trade in India, and saved by her; her husband was sent for, but she died before he arrived. He took proceedings in the French courts under his settlement, and obtained possession of a great part of her savings, as the "surviving consort," and now sought to recover the remainder, some of which was at the death at Bordeaux in a casket, and some in England, and formed the subject of an arrangement for a settlement, not carried out, but agreed upon, between Madame Pronjé or Chevrot, and the defendants Messrs. Matthews, whereby she provided for her grand-daughter Leonie, the heads of this settlement being set forth in the bill, and sought to be declared void, as contrary to the French settlement. The opinions of eminent French avocats had been taken; and upon those the plaintiff, on the one hand, sought to have the whole set aside, and the defendants insisted that, according to French law it constituted a moral obligation, a don manuel, or a will, and the money came within the words "the small properties of life," referred to in the code. The Vice-Chancellor, having reserved his judgment until the present time, now referred to the facts in detail, and was of opinion on the question of French law, that it was clearly the right of Madame Pronjé to do what she had done, as coming within the reasonable limit of a natural obligation. The conduct of the defendants had been perfectly correct, and the bill was a most unrighteous one, considering that the plaintiff had already obtained nearly 6000*l.* from his wife's anxious labour. The bill must be dismissed with costs.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Upon the grand jury coming into court to be discharged, they made the following presentment:—"That a respectful memorial be presented through, and by favour of the Lord Chief Justice, to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Home Department, representing the serious inconvenience and manifest inutility of perpetuating the practice of empannelling a grand jury when it is known that there is no case to bring before them, or any business to be transacted: that with few and rare exceptions all the criminal cases are now disposed of at the sessions of the Old Bailey; that those exceptional cases could be provided for under the existing arrangements; that it is unadvisable and needless to continue a complicated onerous practice, when a simpler, more satisfactory, and equally efficient arrangement can be adopted; and that, in conveying the views of the grand jury upon the subject to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the jury desire to express an earnest hope that an Act may be passed by which the evil so frequently and justly complained of may be removed." The Lord Chief Justice informed the grand jury that their presentment should be duly handed to the Home Secretary. They were then discharged.

A novel and an interesting application was made to the court on the 11th instant, at the instance of

Mr. Surenda Nath Banerjee, a native of India, for a rule for a mandamus to be directed to the Civil Service Commissioners, commanding them to take evidence of his age, with the view to his entering into the Civil Service of India. It appeared that this gentleman, having studied in the University of Calcutta, came to England, and studied here for a twelvemonth, and then presented himself for examination. By regulations which the Civil Service Commissioners were entitled, under the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, to make, it was necessary that a certificate of birth should be proved, showing that on the 1st of last March the candidate was between the ages of seventeen and twenty-one. The applicant presented the required certificate, and went successfully through his examination. It was, however, objected that he had exceeded the prescribed age, and was therefore disqualified. He offered to prove that he was within the age, the difficulty arising from the different mode of computing age in India. The court granted upon an application to strike an attorney off the roll for misconduct in his profession. Upon showing cause against the rule, the matter was referred to one of the masters, (Master Manley Smith) who having entered very fully into the matter, made a very circumstantial report to the court. It appeared that a Mr. Chitto, who was a tradesman carrying on business at Wolverhampton, being in pecuniary difficulties and anxious to compromise with his creditors, he consulted Mr. Barrow, the attorney, against whom the present application was made who (as it was alleged) advised him to get some friends to hold fictitious promissory notes for debts not really owing, and then to offer 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound. Although this was denied by Mr. Barrow, it was not disputed by him that the notes were actually given, nor that he was afterwards aware of that fact; that he went with Chitto before the creditors and endeavoured to induce them to accept the composition. These facts coming to the knowledge of the creditors, the present application was made. The master's report having been read and counsel heard, the learned judges delivered their judgment through the Chief Justice, who said that the case was one of a very serious character and of great delinquency, and if they had been quite satisfied that Mr. Barrow had concocted the scheme, they would have felt it to have been their duty to have struck him off the roll. It was a matter of every day experience that frauds were perpetrated by dishonest debtors upon their creditors by means of fraudulent dispositions of property or of fictitious debts, the result of either process being that the assets were not truly and fairly distributed, and so the creditors were defrauded. They were, however, not perfectly satisfied that the attorney actually originated the fraud; but still he had been guilty of a very serious offence in what he had actually done. He knew well that the fraud had been concocted and the notes were fictitious, and, notwithstanding this, he tried to uphold the fraud and to carry it successfully out. No doubt an attorney, when asked by a client to take part in the perpetration of a fraud ought not to betray him, but he was, nevertheless, bound to refuse to be any party to it, or to do anything towards assisting in carrying it out, for that one of the greatest securities provided against the perpetration of such frauds was the necessity they involved of the co-operation of attorneys, and happily in the great majority of cases this operated as a very great protection against such frauds. The Chief Justice further said that it would be most lamentable if this valuable security should be diminished, and that if parties had reason to be less confident of the honour and character of attorneys to whom necessarily so much was confided, and in whom so much reliance was now placed. He thought the case, therefore, was exceedingly serious, and one which, although it did not appear to require the most severe sentence, demanded, at least such a sentence as would be sufficient to mark the sense which the court entertained of it. The sentence must be one of suspension for a certain period: for the payment of costs (though the amount would, probably, be considerable) would not be a sufficient punishment. Taking, therefore, all the circumstances into consideration, the court were of opinion that Mr. Barrow must be suspended as an attorney for a year, and in addition to pay the costs of the proceedings.

On the same day the court adjudicated upon an application to strike an attorney off the roll for misconduct in his profession. Upon showing cause against the rule, the matter was referred to one of the masters, (Master Manley Smith) who having entered very fully into the matter, made a very circumstantial report to the court. It appeared that a Mr. Chitto, who was a tradesman carrying on business at Wolverhampton, being in pecuniary difficulties and anxious to compromise with his creditors, he consulted Mr. Barrow, the attorney, against whom the present application was made who (as it was alleged) advised him to get some friends to hold fictitious promissory notes for debts not really owing, and then to offer 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound. Taking, therefore, all the circumstances into consideration, the court were of opinion that Mr. Barrow must be suspended as an attorney for a year, and in addition to pay the costs of the proceedings.

In King v. Kelk, an action by a workman against the defendant for injuries sustained in consequence of the falling of a chain owing, as was alleged, to the negligence of a person in the defendant's employ, the jury, after a long deliberation, returned a verdict for the defendant, the person by whose alleged negligence the injury was occasioned not having been called as a witness by either party at the trial. This person having since come forward and given testimony in favour of the plaintiff's version of the cause of the injury, an application was made by Mr. Gibbons, on affidavits, for a new trial on the ground of surprise, and of the discovery of this new evidence, and a rule nisi was granted. On the argument of the rule the court (consisting of the Lord Chief Justice, and Justices Mellor, Lush, and Hayes), were equally divided, the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hayes thinking that under the circumstances of the case there should be a new trial, chiefly on the ground that the person whose testimony was obtained since the trial being in the employ of the defendant, was not one whom the plaintiff should have been expected to call as a witness. Justices Mellor and Lush, on the other hand, were of opinion that it would be opening a door to endless litigation if a new trial were granted on such a ground. The rule for a new trial was accordingly discharged.

On the 12th inst. Mr. Bridge moved on behalf of Mr. John Evans, that he should be re-admitted an attorney of the court. The applicant had been admitted in 1839, and struck off the rolls in 1848 for having obtained the sum of 6*l.* under false pretences, of which offence he had been convicted. Mr. Bridge stated that he had several letters from respectable practising attorneys, attesting the great legal knowledge of Mr. Evans and his fitness for the Profession. Mr. Murray, on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society, objected that there were no affidavits, but only these letters from attorneys; and that the letters were testimonials only as to the professional ability of the applicant, and not to his good conduct. The court thought that the materials on which the application was grounded, were not of a sufficiently satisfactory character; that the salutary rules acted upon with respect to such an important matter should not be relaxed, and that the application should be refused.

Mr. Day obtained a rule nisi for a new trial in the case of Robinson v. Bailey, in which a verdict was obtained against the defendant, an attorney, for 200*l.*, the amount paid by the plaintiff to the clerk of the defendant to be invested on mortgage, and appropriated to his own use by the clerk, who had absconded. It was proved at the trial that the clerk in question had often paid and been paid sums of money for the defendant, and that he had sometimes given receipts for them in his own name; but it was urged that this took place in general in the presence of the defendant, whereas the sum of money in the present case was paid to the clerk in the absence of the defendant, who had not been brought into direct relation with the plaintiff in the matter at all. The rule was granted on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and also on the ground of misdirection on the part of the judge in not withdrawing the case from the jury.

Sampson v. Mackey argued on the same day by Mr. Finlay on the part of the plaintiff, and Mr. Cooke on the part of the defendant, furnished another decision on the subject of costs and County Court jurisdiction. It was an action by an attorney's clerk for certain slanderous words, and also for trespass to the plaintiff's premises, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for 3*l.* The judge before whom it was tried, Mr. Justice Mellor refused to certify for costs, thinking the action on which should not have been brought at all. Sec 5 of the County Courts Act 1867, provides that "if in any action commenced after the passing of this Act, the plaintiff shall recover a sum not exceeding 20*l.* if the action is founded on contract or 10*l.* if founded on tort, whether by verdict judgment by default, or on demurrer, or otherwise he shall not be entitled to any costs of suit, unless the judge certify on the record that there was sufficient reason for bringing such action in the Superior Court, or unless the court or a judge at chambers shall by rule or order allow such costs." The case of Gray v. West is already decided that in an action of tort, which could not be commenced in a County Court, at the present was such an action, in which a verdict not exceeding 10*l.* was recovered, the court might grant the plaintiff his costs, even though the judge at the trial had refused to certify, and in the judgment a doubt was expressed whether the above section of the County Courts Act 1867 applied, or was intended to apply, to actions which could not be commenced in a County Court, and whether in the case of such actions the plaintiff should always have his costs if he recovered such a sum as, if this section had not been enacted would have entitled him to costs. This argument was pressed on the court in the present case; but they held that the section applied to all actions tort whatsoever, whether they could be commenced in a County Court or not, and, whilst adhering to the principle laid down in Gray v. West, that a court might allow the plaintiff his costs where the judge at the trial had refused to certify, they thought the present case not one in which their discretion should be exercised in favour of the plaintiff, and refused to grant him his costs.

On the same day some important questions copyright law were decided by the court on the argument of a case which arose out of a conviction of the applicant for infringing the copyright right of Mr. Graves in certain drawings and photographs of pictures, embracing Sir E. Landseer's "Piper and Pair of Nutcrackers," and several pictures of Millais. Sect. 14 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 (with which Act the subsequent Act of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68 is incorporated) provides that "if any person shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under colour of that Act" in the book of registry at Stationer's Hall, "it shall be lawful for such person to apply by motion to the Court of Queen's Bench, Court of Common Pleas, or Court of Exchequer, in term time, or to apply by summons to any judge of either of such courts in vacation, for an order that such entry may be expunged or varied; and that upon any such application by motion or summons to either of the said courts, or to a judge as aforesaid, such court or judge shall make such order for expunging, varying, or confirming such entry, either with or without costs as to such court or judge shall seem just, and the officer appointed by the Stationers Company for the purposes of this Act shall, on the production to him of any such order for expunging or varying any such entry, expunge or vary the same according to the requisitions of such order." The present applicant to have the entry of Mr. Graves as proprietor, expunged or altered according to this section, was convicted under the 6th section of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, which inflicts a penalty on any person who shall, "without the consent of the proprietor, repeat, copy, colourably imitate, or otherwise multiply for sale, hire, exhibition, or distribution, or cause or procure to be repeated, &c.," any painting, drawing, or photograph in which there shall be subsisting copyright. He set up no title in himself, nor any existing dispute between Mr. Graves and any other person, but considering himself a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of section 6 of the former Act, applied to have the entry in the book of registry expunged or altered, on the ground that no memorandum of the assignment to Mr. Graves by the original proprietors had been registered at Stationers' Hall, as it was contended, was rendered necessary by sect. 4 of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68. That section, after providing for the keeping of a "register of proprietors of copyright in paintings, drawings, and photographs, wherein shall be entered a memorandum of every copyright to which any person shall be entitled under this Act, and also of every subsequent assignment of any such copyright," enacts that "no proprietor of any such copyright shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act, and no action shall be sustainable nor any penalty be recoverable in respect of anything done before registration." The court (consisting of Justices Blackburn, Mellor, and Hannen) did not think it necessary to decide whether the present applicant was a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of the enactment, but were of opinion that he was not. As to whether it was necessary that the previous assignments should have been registered, the court were of opinion that that was not necessary in order to entitle Mr. Greaves to recover the penalties imposed for the infringement of his copyright; no action could be maintained or penalties recovered for anything done before the registration, but once Mr. Graves had registered there was nothing to prevent him recovering the penalties, and the Legislature never intended that all previous assignments must also be registered in order to entitle him to do so. Mr. Giffard, Q.C. and Mr. Poland showed cause against the rule obtained by Mr. Underdown and supported by him, and now discharged.

On Monday last an interesting question arose in the case of Myers v. Veitch, on the interpretation of sect. 113 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106). That section provides that "if any bankrupt shall be arrested for debt . . . he shall, on producing such protection to the officer who shall arrest him, and giving such officer a copy thereof, be immediately discharged; and if any officer shall detain any such bankrupt after he shall have shown such protection to him, except for so long as shall be necessary for obtaining a copy of the same, such officer shall forfeit to such bankrupt, for his own use, the sum of 5*l.* for every day he shall detain such bankrupt, to be recovered by action of debt in any court of record at Westminster in the name of such bankrupt, with full costs of suit." The question for the decision of the court was whether the governor of the gaol to which the bankrupt is brought after his arrest is an officer within the meaning of the words "any officer" in the section, so as to be liable to the penalty imposed by the section in case the bankrupt is detained by him after producing his order of protection. Mr. C. Russell and Mr. C. Crompton argued the question. The court (Justices Blackburn, Lush, and Hayes) were of opinion that the gaoler was not an officer within the meaning of the enactment, and therefore that the penalty could not be recovered from him; and considered that the officer referred to was the one who made the arrest.

Two actions against the North-Eastern Railway Company came before the court on the same day: the former being an action under Lord Campbell's Act to recover damages for the death of the plaintiff's wife, who was killed at a level crossing on a dark night, whilst bringing him his supper. In this case the court, whilst expressing their sense of the dangerous character of all level crossings, held that the railway company were not guilty of a neglect of any statutory duty, and made absolute the rule for a nonsuit. In the second case, a child of about fourteen was injured on a level crossing by a train, and as it was shown that the gate, whose being open was the usual signal that the line was clear, was open at the time the child was crossing, the court held that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the company, and discharged the rule for a new trial.

In Wren v. Weall and another, argued on last Tuesday and Wednesday, by Mr. Webster, Q.C. and Mr. Baylis on the part of the plaintiff, and by Mr. Quain, Q.C. and Mr. Aston on behalf of the defendant, Mr. Justice Lush had nonsuited the plaintiff at the trial at Manchester. The action was one for slandering the plaintiff's title to the patent of certain spooling machines, by writing to various customers of the plaintiff telling them that the machines sold by the plaintiff were infringements of the defendants' patents, and that if they used the machines without paying the defendants' royalties, they would be proceeded against at law. Evidence was tendered at the trial, on behalf of the plaintiff, which tended to show that the defendants' patent, which was for a complex machine, made up of about twenty-one different parts, was not new, and that the defendant himself must have known that it was not new, the declaration alleging that the words spoken and written to the plaintiff's customers were falsely and maliciously spoken and written. Mr. Justice Lush rejected the evidence as to the novelty of the defendants' patent as being in effect evidence to try the validity of the patent itself. A rule for a new trial on the ground of the improper rejection of this evidence having been granted, the question of its admissibility was now argued at length, and many cases and authorities were cited. The leaning of the court seemed to be in favour of the ruling of the learned judge at the trial, and the rejection of the evidence, but they took time to consider their judgment, the case being one, as it would seem, of first impression.

A very curious policy of insurance came before the court for interpretation in the case of Whellock v. The Home and Colonial Marine Insurance Company. The policy was effected by the plaintiff, a lighterman on the Thames, against "all such losses and damages" as should be thereinafter expressed. Then a pen was drawn through all the ordinary perils enumerated in the policy, and after a description of the goods insured, these words were added, "This policy to cover only such claims as may not be reimbursed by other underwriters." At the time the goods were lost or damaged there was no other subsisting policy of insurance, and the question arose whether the existence of another insurance was not to be a condition precedent to the liability of the defendants, or whether the meaning of the contract was that if there were any other underwriters then the defendants should not be liable except for such claims as were not reimbursed by them to the plaintiff. It was quite clear that the policy of insurance as it stood did not express the intention of the parties, and, by the rules of evidence, no parol evidence was admissible to supply the defect, so that the Court had to give an interpretation to the document as it was. After an argument on behalf of the plaintiff by Sir George Honniman and Mr. J. C. Mathew, and by Mr. C. Pollock, Q.C., and Mr. Cohen, on behalf of the defendants, the court came reluctantly to the conclusion that as the document was not in legal phrase, absolutely "insensible" in itself, it must be interpreted to mean that the existence of another policy or other policies was a condition precedent to the liability of the defendants, and, as none such was in existence at the time of the loss or damage, the plaintiff could not recover in the action.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

In the case of Johns v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, argued in the Exchequer on Friday, June 11, a discussion took place involving many interesting topics with reference to the liability of railway companies to take special precautions at level crossings, to provide for the safety of persons and property upon such crossings. The facts of the present case were as follows: The action was brought by the owner of a waggon and a pair of horses, which had been destroyed by being run over by one of the defendants' trains on a level crossing on the line between Isleworth and Brentford. The crossing did not form part of a public highway, but of an occupation road, used for the purpose of obtaining access from land on one side of the line to land on the other. It appeared that on the occasion when the accident occurred, a man in the plaintiff's service was about to cross the line at the crossing with the waggon and horses. At the place where the gate was, by which access was obtained to the crossing, a view of only a very short distance on the line was obtainable by reason of a bridge being in the way; but just by the side of the line a view of over 300 yards, and on the six-foot a view of over 400 yards, was obtainable along the line in the direction from which the train came which did the mischief. The man in charge of the waggon left it at the gate, and went to the side of the line to see if anything was coming, and there was not then any train in sight. He returned to the waggon, and started to go across the line, and immediately proceeded on to the crossing without looking again, as the defendants contended the facts conclusively showed, to see if a train was coming. He was on the side of the horses farthest from the train, which while he was crossing ran into the waggon and destroyed it, and killed the horses. The driver of the train did not whistle, nor were any precautions taken by the company to prevent accidents at the crossing. On these facts the verdict was entered for the plaintiff at the trial, leave being reserved to the defendants to move to enter a nonsuit. A rule nisi had been accordingly obtained, against which Mr. Montagu Chambers, Q.C., and Mr. Hance showed cause. They argued that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the driver of the waggon. He had looked before proceeding to cross the line to see if a train was coming; the distance which the train had to travel before coming to the spot, after coming into sight, was such as to make it very close work, and to make the crossing a very dangerous one in the case of a train coming at a good rate of speed. It was, therefore, the duty of the company to cause trains to be driven with caution, and to provide that some warning or signal should be given by whistling, or otherwise, when a train was at hand. They cited Bilbee v. The Brighton Railway Company, 18 C. B., N.S., 584. Mr. H. James and Mr. Ormerod argued, for the defendants, in support of the rule. They contended that this being merely an occupation road, the case stood on quite a different footing from the cases decided, with reference to level crossings on a highway. The company might in some cases be compelled to make occupation works, or, if they did not, then, upon the severance of land, the greater risk and inconvenience caused in crossing was a subject of compensation to the landowner. It was clear that if there had been two men employed the accident need not have happened, for one might have watched the line and seen if anything was coming, while the other attended to the waggon. It was in respect of the greater trouble and expense, caused by the necessity of such precautions, that compensation was given. Even as it was, the driver had been guilty of contributory negligence. Instead of looking along the line, and then returning to fetch the waggon, and immediately proceeding to cross, he ought again to have looked along the line just before taking the waggon and horses upon the crossing. The learned counsel proceeded by a comparison of distances and times, which it is unnecessary to give in detail, to argue that if the driver had looked just before going on the line he must have seen the train approaching. Under these circumstances, there was no necessity for the engine-driver to whistle; he was entitled to assume that people would not run into an apparent danger. Bilbee's case was quite different, inasmuch as there, owing to a sharp curve, it would have been impossible to see the train; and a person might have waited all day without being able to cross in greater safety than by crossing at once. That was the ground upon which the court laid it down that there was a duty on the company to take precautions by whistling, or otherwise. The present case was wholly different, and more resembled Stubley v. The North-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 1 Ex. 13. It would be impossible, practically speaking, for the company to take precautions wherever there was a level crossing. Some members of the court appeared to be impressed with the arguments for the defendants, and inclined to make the rule absolute, but others seemed doubtful; and ultimately, as they all thought the verdict unsatisfactory as against the weight of the evidence, the rule was made absolute for a new trial.

BREAKFAST—EPPS'S COCOA—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—The very agreeable character of this preparation has rendered it a general favourite. The Civil Service Gazette remarks:—"The singular success which Mr. Epps attained by his homeopathic preparation of cocoa has never been surpassed by any experimentalist. By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills." Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold by the Trade only in 4*lb.* 4*lb.*, and 1*lb.* tin-lined packets, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homeopathic Chemists, London."

PUBLIC COMPANIES.

BANKS.

London Chartered of Australia.—Eight per cent. dividend declared.

London and River Plate.—An interim dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum declared.

FINANCE, CREDIT, AND DISCOUNT COMPANIES.

Egyptian Commercial and Trading, Limited.—A further return of 4s. per share is announced to the shareholders.

Marine Investment, Limited.—The Vice-Chancellor has fixed the 22nd for the appointment of a liquidator, in the place of Mr. H. A. Coffey.

Otago and Southlands Investment.—A dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum has been declared.

ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

Accidental and Marine Assurance Corporation, Limited.—The liquidator's report announces that many of the past contributories have appealed to the Lords to have their names struck off the list. Should the appeal be successful there would be no chance of a further dividend; but it is hoped that the Vice-Chancellor's decision will be endorsed.

International Life Assurance Society.—The 18th inst. is appointed to settle the list of contributories.

London and Provincial Marine.—A payment on account has been made at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

Ocean Marine.—The usual interim payment of 5s. per share is to be made on the 1st July.

MISCELLANEOUS COMPANIES.

African Steamship.—At the meeting a 10 per cent. dividend declared.

Anglo-American Telegraph.—A dividend of 17s. per share declared.

Ceara (Brazil) Gas.—A further dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum declared.

City of London Real Property.—The board limit the dividend to 4 1/2 per cent.

Imperial Land of Marseilles, Limited.—Creditors must forward particulars of claims to the liquidators by the 26th inst., the 26th July having been appointed by Vice-Chancellor Malins for adjudicating upon them.

Metropolitan Ice Company, Limited.—Mr. Love-ring, the official liquidator, has made a return of 3s. 10d. per share to the shareholders, after paying creditors in full.

Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation.—A dividend of 3 per cent. for the past six months announced.

West London Wharves and Warehouses, Limited.—A meeting is called for the 23rd inst., for the following purposes:—1. To report to the shareholders the manner in which the liquidation has been conducted to the present time, and its present position. 2. To submit to them an offer of compromise made by a large proportion of the holders of forfeited shares. 3. To consider the question of the remuneration payable to the liquidators.

REPORTS OF SALES.

[NOTE.—The reports of the Estate Exchange are officially supplied in the following list. Auctioneers whose names are registered there will oblige by reports of their own sales.]

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BEERHOUSES, &C. BILL.

The Marquis of SALISBURY said this Bill, which the House of Commons had passed unanimously, practically repealed the change in the licensing law effected by the Duke of Wellington's Government in 1830. Under the old law all public-houses were licensed by the justices, but the Act of 1830, the object of which was to secure to the public the benefit of a reduction in the duty on beer, vested the licensing of houses for the sale of beer in the Excise; this change had not worked satisfactorily, and only nine years after its passing a bill for its repeal, introduced by Lord Brougham, passed this House, but was rejected by the House of Commons. A select committee of the House of Commons, which sat some time ago under the presidency of Mr. Villiers, reported that the system had proved a failure, its object having been to secure the public cheap and pure beer, and to disassociate beer-drinking from drunkenness, and to induce the establishment of a class of refreshment houses free from the disorders supposed to attend exclusively on the sale of spirits. That committee further expressed their concurrence in the report of a select committee of this House which sat in 1849, that the beerhouses were for the most part in the hands of the brewers, that they were notorious for the sale of an inferior article, that the consumption of ardent spirits had not diminished, and that the comfort and morals of the poor were seriously impaired. Now, the present Bill proposed that beerhouses, like public-houses, should be licensed by the magistrates, who would withhold their certificate in the case of any house which was the resort of bad characters, and it was notorious that in many of these places all kinds of crimes were planned. The Government had accepted the measure, but, holding that a more comprehensive Bill was necessary, they had restricted its operations to two years, so that it was merely suspensory and tentative, and Parliament could retrace its steps before any mischief could happen in the event of its not working satisfactorily. The noble marquis concluded by moving the second reading, which was agreed to.

RECORDERS' DEPUTIES BILL.

In committee on this Bill, a clause was inserted, on the motion of Lord CHELMSFORD, requiring a recorder, on the appointment of a deputy, to send forthwith to the Home Secretary a statement of the reason for such appointment.—The Earl of CARNARVON proposed a clause allowing stipendiary magistrates three months' holiday in the year, instead of six weeks.—Lord CHELMSFORD did not object to the clause on its merits, but held that it was not within the scope of the Bill.—Lord REDESDALE held that the clause was ultra vires; and on the House resuming, he explained that the Bill having come up from the Commons, that House would object to a "tack" irrelevant to its object.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE JUDICATURE COMMISSION.

Mr. NORWOOD inquired of the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it was the intention of the Government to enlarge the scope of inquiry of the Judicature Commission so as to embrace the County Courts, Quarter Sessions, and other local tribunals in the provinces. The hon. member also suggested that the mercantile and manufacturing interests should be represented on the Commission.—Mr. BRUCE replied that the Commission was issued by the late Government. He had consulted the Lord Chancellor and Lord Cairns on the subject, and they agreed in the opinion of his hon. friend in thinking that the scope of the inquiry ought to be extended. The suggestion which his hon. friend had made should receive consideration.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PLEA OF—OUTLAWRY—FORM OF.—By the death of an intestate certain personal property descended on B. an outlaw, and C. his sister. A judgment-creditor of B. filed a bill against him and C. for the administration of the estate and for satisfaction of the debt out of B.'s share. C. pleaded that B. was an outlaw, and that his property was vested in the Crown, but did not aver the enrolment of the outlawry: Held, that the plea was good: (Taylor v. Wemyss, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 599. V.C.S.)

COSTS—MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL.—Where upon a verdict being returned for the plaintiff the defendant moves for and obtains a rule nisi for a new trial, which is afterwards discharged in consideration of the plaintiff consenting to a reduction of his damages, neither party pays to the other the costs of the rule: (Hussey v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. Q. B. 612.)

CRIMINAL INFORMATION—SECOND APPLICATION—PRACTICE.—The court will not permit a second application to be made for a rule for a criminal information unless leave was reserved for the purpose on the first application from very special circumstances, such as being met by affidavits which afterwards turned out to be based on perjury: (Ex parte Munster, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 612. Q. B.)

DISCOVERY—REPORTS OF SERVANTS OR AGENTS—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT 1854, s. 50.—In an action by a passenger for compensation for injuries sustained in a railway accident, the consequence, as the plaintiff alleged, of the negligent construction of the wheels of the engine, application was made by the plaintiff for inspection of documents relating to the accident, which the defendants admitted were in their possession, under sect. 50 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854. Held, that any report or communication by a servant or agent to his principal concerning the circumstances which are the cause of litigation, whether before or after the action brought, or whether containing statements of fact or opinion, are not privileged from inspection by the opposite party, unless made for the purpose of and with a view to litigation. Held, therefore, that reports of the accident by the general manager of the company, by the inspector, the guard, and the locomotive superintendent, made in the usual course of their duty at the time of the accident, the copy of a letter written by the general manager to the Board of Trade, a guarantee of the materials of the engine wheels, and the minute books of the directors (except entries relating to the communications of defendants' attorneys), were not privileged. Held, however, that reports of scientific witnesses consulted with reference to the cause of the accident for the purpose of the action, ought not to be included in the order for inspection: (Woolley v. The North London Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 613. C. P.)

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

(Before KEATING, J.)

GUIBOT v. TYLER.

This was an action for breach of promise of marriage. When the case came on in order no counsel appeared for the plaintiff, and the names of her be retained upon the list, for there was here undoubted fraud, repudiation of the shares immediate upon its discovery, and bona fide proceedings actively prosecuted by P. to remove his name; and where the circumstances are such, it is not necessary that there should be a separate proceeding by each one of the parties repudiating, or that the proceedings actually taken by one as a representative should have been brought to a final decision before the date of the winding-up order: (Pawle's case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 589.)

COUNTY COURTS.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

RULE TO COMPEL A COUNTY COURT JUDGE TO DO HIS DUTY—NECESSITY OF JUDGE'S SIGNATURE. The court will not grant an order, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 43, to compel a County Court judge to do his duty, unless it appear that he has absolutely refused to act in some matter wherein he ought to have acted. A mere qualified or temporary refusal, as by suggesting an adjournment, with a view to an arrangement, is no ground for issuing such an order, which, being of the same nature as a mandamus, is to be governed by the same rules: Quere, whether the signing and sealing a case by the judge is absolutely necessary, and whether the rule should be addressed, as well as communicated, to the opposite party: (Irving v. Askew, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 584. Bank.)

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

THE IRISH CHURCH BILL.

THERE is a growing opinion among all moderate men in and out of Parliament that this is especially a subject for a compromise. Lord ELCHO has suggested, as the basis of such a settlement, the recognition of the fact that one considerable section of Ireland is almost purely Protestant, as other parts are almost wholly Roman Catholic, and that the law should recognise this fact and mete out a different measure to each. This was very much the basis of the plan which was submitted by the LAW TIMES some time ago, and of which the outline may, perhaps, be usefully repeated now that there is some probability of more moderate and reasonable counsels prevailing.

Our suggestion was and is as follows:—To adopt disestablishment, to permit the Protestant Church to retain its possessions and parochial organization in all the Protestant parts of Ireland, and in all parishes containing some agreed number of Protestant Churchmen, say, one-third of the entire body of the parishioners.

In parishes having a less proportion of Protestants, on the death of the existing incumbent, the fund, which by the present Bill is so confiscated, to be applied to the purpose of education in that parish, dividing the income among the schools in proportion to the number of pupils taught in each school in each year.

Constitute so much of the Church as is preserved a part of the Church of England in all respects, as if it had been a district in Yorkshire or Cornwall, the QUEEN nominating the Bishops but such Bishops not to be temporal peers.

In the parishes where the Church has ceased to exist by reason of paucity of members, provision to be made for the spiritual service of the Protestant people by the extension to them of the system of home missionaries, the country being divided into convenient districts for that purpose.

Thus right would be done to all and wrong to none. Where the Roman Catholics are in a considerable majority, they will not be offended by State favour shown to the small minority; and where the Protestants prevail, they will continue to possess their own Church as hitherto they have done, but instead of belonging as now to the Church of Ireland, they would be members of the Irish Province of the Church of England.

Just as there is an archbishop of the province of York, so there would be an archbishop of the province of Ulster.

And lest the name of "Irish" Church should offend, there would be no objection to institute the title of "The Ulster Branch of the Church of England," or any other that might be preferred.

This plan would, further, recommend itself to Roman Catholics, inasmuch as it would recognise the principle on which they rightly set so great a value, that of denominational education.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

SOLICITORS AS MAGISTRATES.—As an old subscriber to the LAW TIMES, but more especially upon principle, I fully concur in all your remarks as to excluding solicitors from the commission of the peace. Of all others they are from experience the most competent to administer the law in their respective localities. I would at once do away with the constant cry for "stipendiary magistrates," which, considering the great accession to magisterial jurisdiction by late Acts of Parliament, has become so common of late. Who, I would ask, can be more competent to administer the law than those who have made it their study all their lives? who so incompetent as he who probably never opened a law book in his life? still in his magisterial capacity he is expected to give a strictly legal construction of every Act of Parliament brought under his notice, often so intricate that our learned judges differ in the construction. Of course the magistrate must, in this dilemma, appeal to his clerk, and clerks are now pretty generally, and I may say universally, solicitors. If, therefore, the magistrate is obliged to seek the advice of a solicitor in order to administer the law, I would ask on what earthly principle is it that that solicitor should not be quite as competent to be added to the commission of the peace, as the magistrate who is thus compelled to seek his advice. It is simply an act of injustice, without any reason, to the Profession generally. Mine is a very peculiar case. I am the son of a very old established family in Leicestershire. My father was high sheriff for the county, and deputy lieutenant, and magistrate; my elder brother was also a magistrate; I am also now returned on the sheriff's list to serve as high sheriff in my turn. I selected the legal profession, and was admitted in 1830, and consequently been in active practice for thirty-eight years. I chose Warwickshire for my career, and by my own exertions now hold no less than sixteen public appointments under the magistracy and others of influence of the county. In order to keep up my family position in Leicestershire, I joined the yeomanry there in 1832, my father having been major for many years. I took the command of a troop in 1840, which rank I held till 1860, when I took the rank of major. I voluntarily retired in 1844 to make way for junior officers, and Her Majesty granted me leave to hold my rank for life in consideration of my long services, being the first favour of the kind ever granted to the regiment. My father died in 1854, when my elder brother, a clergyman, succeeded chiefly to the family estates, I, and a younger brother, to a portion. My elder brother died in 1859, when I succeeded to a further portion, and since then have been regularly summoned to serve on the grand jury at Leicester Assizes, which I have done, and shall doubtless receive a like summons for July next. I simply carry on my profession for two reasons, first, because I am attached to it; and, secondly, because I am anxious to introduce one of my sons into it; and because I plead guilty to these two very laudable acts, I am excluded by the present unjust law from taking the position of my father and elder brother in my native county, of which I think you will not approve, but aid the Profession generally in getting a repeal of that very obnoxious and insulting, and I may add anomalous provision, which excludes solicitors from the county, whilst, as your paragraph observes, they are very generally admitted into the borough commissions. Queries.

31. JUSTICES' CLERKS.—Can a non-Professional man hold the office of clerk to a bench of justices; that is, is it absolutely necessary that a person holding that office should have been articulated to and duly admitted as an attorney, &c. P.

T. R. M.

32. CONVEYANCING.—Freehold property was conveyed to A. and B. by way of mortgage, for securing the repayment of 300*l.* and interest, the security containing a declaration that the money was advanced by them as trustees on a joint account, and that, in the event of the death of either during the continuance of the security, the mortgage-money should be paid to the survivor, whose receipt should be a valid discharge for the same, without the concurrence of the executors or administrators of him who should first die. The mortgage-deed was not executed by either of the mortgagees. A. is dead, the mortgage is about to be paid off, and the question arises, whether, in consequence of the non-execution of the deed by A., it is necessary to make his personal representatives parties to the re-conveyance, for the purpose of giving a valid receipt. I believe it has been decided that it is not essential to the validity of the ordinary declaration against dower in a purchase-deed that the purchaser should execute the conveyance, on the ground that he must be held to take, subject to the provisions of the document, and it would appear that the same reasoning might be applied to the case in question. Have any of your readers met with a similar transaction, and can I be referred to an authority in point? A. T.

33. WILL.—I have a small estate to distribute under the will of a testator, in which is the following clause:—"And I declare that if any of my said brothers or sisters, or the said brothers or sisters of my said wife, or any or either of them, shall die before the distribution of the proceeds to arise from the sale of my said hereinbefore devised and bequeathed real and leasehold estates and effects shall take place, leaving issue—such issue shall take the share of his or her deceased parent." I shall feel obliged if some of your readers will assist me as to the meaning and extension of the word "issue." One of the testator's brothers died, leaving a son; that son has died leaving children. Will these latter children rank as issue (being grandchildren) of the testator's brother deceased; or will the amount be confined to and distributable only amongst the surviving brothers and sisters of the testator, and the children only of such as are dead? LAW LIBRARY.

Latin Proverbs and Quotations. By ALFRED HENDERSON. London: Sampson Low and Co.

THE compiler of this work was a solicitor. He began it when compelled by ill-health to retire from the active exercise of his profession, but, as the publishers inform us in a short note which precedes the preface, he did not survive to see the fruition of his labours, but died whilst the proof sheets were passing through the press. The volume is an exceedingly handsome one, and may be said to be without a rival in its peculiar department of literature. We observe that all the Latin words presenting any difficulty as to quantity are marked, so that it may be useful even to the unlearned. Nothing more need be said in praise for, as the cover of the book informs us—verbum sapienti sat.

THE COURTS & COURT PAPERS.

CHANCERY ORDER.

8th June 1869.

Whereas it is proper that the accounts kept by the Accountant-General of this court should be examined and compared, in order to settle the same, and whereas it will require considerable time to perfect such examination, and it is necessary that a time should be appointed for closing the books of accounts of the said Accountant-General for the purposes aforesaid, I do order that the books of the said Accountant-General be closed from and after Friday the 20th Aug. next, to Thursday the 25th Oct. next, inclusive, excepting upon the days and for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, in order to adjust the accounts of the suitors with the books kept at the bank; and that during that time no draft for any money, except as hereinafter provided, or certificate for any effects under the care and direction of this court, be signed or delivered out by the Accountant-General, or any stocks or annuities accepted or transferred by him relating to the suitors of this court; and that no purchase, sale, or transfer be made by the said Accountant-General, unless the order and request or registrar's certificate be left at his office on or before Saturday, the 7th Aug. next; and that no order for payment of any money out of the court which may then be in court, be received in the Accountant-General's office after Tuesday, the 10th Aug. next, provided, nevertheless, that the office of the said Accountant-General shall be open on Tuesday the 12th, Wednesday the 13th, and Thursday the 14th of Oct. next, for the delivery out of any regular interest drafts which may have become payable in respect of the October dividends, and of any other regular interest drafts which have become payable prior to, or during the closing of the office aforesaid. And to the end that the suitors may have notice hereof, and apply to the court, as there shall be occasion to have money paid to them out of the bank, or stocks, or annuities, transferred to them before the 20th Aug. next, I do order that this order be entered and set up in the several offices of this court.

(Signed) HATHERLEY, C.

ORDER OF COURT.

Saturday, June 12.

Whereas, from the present state of the business before the Vice-Chancellor Sir John Stuart, the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Malins, and the Vice-Chancellor Sir William Milbourne James, respectively, it is expedient that a portion of the causes standing for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor Sir John Stuart and the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Malins, respectively, should be transferred to the Vice-Chancellor Sir William Milbourne James. Now I do hereby order that the several causes mentioned in the first schedule hereunto subjoined be accordingly transferred from the book of causes standing for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor Sir John Stuart, to the book of causes for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor Sir William Milbourne James; and that the several causes mentioned in the second schedule hereunto subjoined be accordingly transferred from the book of causes standing for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Malins, to the book of causes for hearing before the said Vice-Chancellor Sir William Milbourne James. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar, and set up in the several offices of this court.

LAW SOCIETIES.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—Under the will of the late Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Clark, of Addison-road, Kensington, this institution becomes entitled to a bequest of two hundred pounds (less legacy duty).

EMPEROR LIFE AND FIRE ASSURANCE SOCIETIES.—The annual meeting of this society was held at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, on the 2nd June. The report showed that during the year 1453 proposals had been received, amounting to 490,963*l.*, and 847 policies had been issued for 240,750*l.* The claims for the year had been only 610*l.* A bonus had been given to the life policy-holders from 22 to 48 per cent. on the premiums previously paid, and a dividend was declared to the shareholders, at the rate of 5 per cent., free of income-tax, and a bonus of 1 per cent. The total amount of life and fire assurances effected is 3,525,491*l.* Advances had been profitably made on freehold and leasehold securities during the year. The retiring directors, N. J. Powell, Esq., T. S. Beck, Esq., A. J. Larking, Esq., R. Harris, Esq., and Rev. F. Trestrail were re-elected.

MARAVILLA COCOA FOR BREAKFAST.—The cocoa (or cacao) of Maravilla is the true Theobroma of Linnaeus. —The Globe says: "Taylor Brothers' Maravilla Cocoa has achieved a thorough success, and supercedes every other cocoa in the market. For homoeopaths and invalids we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage." Sold, in packets only, by all grocers.

LEGAL NEWS.

A point arose in the winding-up of the Commercial Bank of India of some interest. A shareholder had transferred his shares to an infant, and on account of the infancy the contributory had been removed by the court, and now the liquidator, by Mr. Lording, applied to substitute the former holder. The chief clerk (Mr. Church) ordered notice to be given to the former shareholder.

The Bishop of London has commenced a prosecution against the Rev. C. F. Lowder, the vicar of St. Peter's, St. George's-in-the-East, in consequence of his violation of the directions laid down in what is popularly known as "The Cairns Judgment." Mr. Lowder objects to remove his lighted candles, or to consecrate the elements otherwise than as he understands the Church to direct him, and for this he is to be prosecuted in the Court of Arches, if Sir Robert Phillimore consents to accept the letters of request, of which, possibly, there may be some doubt.

The Court of Exchequer in Ireland has witnessed perhaps for the last time the observance of a quaint custom which, in the light of coming changes, seems more strange. It is the service rendered every year by Christ Church Cathedral for the property which it holds in "frank almoigne." The Rev. Mr. Finlayson, vicar choral, and several of the choristers attended in their surplices, and getting upon the table of the court, while all present, including the members of the Bench—all, with one exception, Roman Catholics—reverently stood, they sang a hymn with excellent effect as a musical performance. The vicar choral then stood at the side bar and read the concluding prayers of the Morning Service of the Established Church, the boys singing the responses. Before the Reformation the custom was to celebrate mass in the courts on the first and last days of all the terms in homage for the lands, but at the time of the Reformation the Protestant service was substituted. The court certified that it was duly rendered.

THE WEST RIDING.—A large meeting, attended by nearly 200 West Riding justices, was held at Wakefield to fill up a vacancy in the position of chief constable, caused by Colonel Cobbe, who was appointed to that important office at the formation of the constabulary thirteen years ago, and who then organised, and has since brought the force to a high state of efficiency, having been appointed one of her Majesty's inspectors of police. Mr. J. B. Greenwood presided, and before the ordinary business began, alluded in feeling terms to the loss sustained by the untimely death of Colonel Smyth, of Heath-hall, near Wakefield, an active West Riding magistrate, and a former member for York. A resolution of thanks was afterwards accorded to Colonel Cobbe for his long and efficient services. The salary of the new chief constable has been fixed at 500*l.* a year.

The farm has been for nearly half a century in the occupation of the present tenants, Messrs. Stearne, who are under notice to quit at Michaelmas next.

For further particulars apply to Messrs. STEWARDS, Solicitors, 49, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W.C., and of the Auctioneers, Messrs. NEWSON and STANLEY, Bury St. Edmunds, and 2, Walbrook, E.C.

On THURSDAY NEXT.—Model Farm.—With Possession.—Very attractive Freehold Estate, known as High Town-house Farm, comprising 22a. 2r. 39p., in the parishes of Ratcliffe and Bretherton, and Felsham, now in the occupation of the proprietor, Mr. Robert Mirrington.

MESSRS. NEWSON and STANLEY are favoured with instructions from the Proprietor (who is retiring from business) to SELL BY AUCTION, at the King's Head Hotel, Stowmarket, on THURSDAY, JUNE 24, Four precisely in One Lot, a most compact PROPERTY, comprising a very neat and convenient farmhouse, suitable agricultural buildings, four cottages for labourers, 225a. 2r. 39p. of very productive land, in a high state of cultivation. This is one of the most complete small estates in the county of Suffolk. The house is moderate in dimensions, possesses every comfort that can be desired, and is surrounded by garden and orchard, and a well-kept, and a most desirable character. The land has been highly cultivated for many years, and every internal fence made to divide the fields into square convenient inclosures, with the facility of a road to everyone. Anyone requiring an occupation in which there is no expenditure necessary for improvements, but a certain return for good cultivation, will find this all that can be desired.

Particulars, with plans and conditions, may be obtained of H. LE GRICE, Esq., Solicitor, Bury St. Edmunds; or of the Auctioneers, Bury St. Edmunds, and 2, Walbrook, E.C.

For Occupation, Investment, or Sub-division, Suffolk.—Valuable Landed Property, near the market towns of Halesworth and Harleston, comprising altogether 52a. 1r. 21p. of productive Arable and Pasture Land.

MESSRS. NEWSON and STANLEY are favoured with instructions from the Trustees of the late John Darnell, Esq., deceased, to SELL BY AUCTION, in July, in Two Lots, valuable ESTATE, known as 11, Street Farm, situate in the parishes of Methfield, Withersdale, and St. James's, in Southelmham, comprising a comfortable farm house, with messuages, brick yard, three sets of farm buildings, and 27a. 2r. 3p. of land, all freehold, except about 80 acres copyhold. Possession may be had at Michaelmas next of 191a. 0r. 32p., in the occupation of Messrs. Godbold, and the remainder (comprising 180a. 0r. 32p.) at the late Michaelmas 1870. Also a very attractive small Freehold Farm (with possession at Michaelmas next, situate at Wingfield and Stradbroke, and known as Hill Farm, in the occupation of Mr. Henry Bullock, including suitable dwelling-house, ample agricultural buildings, and nearly 80 acres of first-rate mixed soil land in a high state of cultivation.

Further particulars of Messrs. POWELL, SON, CROSS, and KNOTT, Solicitors, 9, Staple-inn, Holborn, W.C.; and of Messrs. NEWSON and STANLEY, Land Agents and Surveyors, Bury St. Edmunds, and 2, Walbrook, E.C.

Gloucestershire, on the borders of Monmouth.—The Newland Valley Estate, a beautiful Freehold Property, situate on the banks of the picturesque and romantic River Wye, and in the immediate vicinity of the far-famed ruins of Tintern Abbey, embracing an area of 1101 acres, divided into several farms of fertile arable and meadow, with rich pasture land, having good farm-houses, all necessary agricultural buildings, ample cottage accommodation, and a residence for shooting lodges. The land is in a high state of cultivation, and the soil is of the best quality, and is well stocked with trout and other fish, and a small trout stream flows through the centre of the estate; besides which, packs of foxhounds and harriers meet within easy reach.

MESSRS. NORTON, TRIST, WATNEY, and Co. have received instructions to SELL BY AUCTION, at the MART, London, on FRIDAY, the 15th JULY next, at Two o'clock precisely, in One Lot, the above valuable PROPERTY, which is easy access from Bristol, Gloucester, Hereford, or Shrewsbury, only five hours' journey from London, within two and a-half miles of Monmouth, which is a capital market town, and eleven from Hereford. It is distinguished as the Newland Valley Estate, and is situate in the parish of St. Andrew, and the turnpike road from Monmouth to Chepstow, having a frontage to the river Wye, and adjoining the estates of the Countess Dunraven, Col. Cooke, and others. The farms are let to a very respectable tenantry, but the woodlands and the sporting over the estate are in the hands of the owner. The soil is chiefly deep loam on a sub-stratum of carboniferous limestone, and produces fine barley and root crops, while several of the meadows are improved by irrigation. The property in its entirety offers unusual attractions to the sportsman, and many elevated sites, splendidly timbered and commanding panoramic views of this proverbially lovely district, suggest the erection of a mansion and the formation of a residential estate. There is limestone of fine quality for either building or agricultural purposes, and likewise sandstone of a hard and durable nature.

The estate may be viewed on application to the gamekeeper, Richard Fulker, and particulars obtained at the Beaufort Arms Hotel, Monmouth; or of Messrs. BLAGG and SON, Solicitors, Cheshire, Staffordshire.

Messrs. AUSTEN, DE GRX, and HARDING, Solicitors, 4, Raymond-buildings, Gray's Inn; of EDWIN HEARON, Esq., Land Agent, Beaufort House, near Leek, Staffordshire; and of the Auctioneers, 68, Old Broad-street, London.

In Chancery.—Preliminary Advertisement.—To be Sold, as a going concern, the Inns of Court Hotel, a highly important and valuable Freehold Property, occupying a commanding position in Holborn, and extending to Lincoln's Inn-fields, comprising a noble lofty building, of chaste and elegant design, erected within the last three years, under the superintendence of an eminent firm of architects, at a cost of over £50,000, and fitted and finished, as regards the front portion, with every comfort and convenience for carrying on the business now in full operation and rapidly increasing. The accommodation includes, on the upper floors, numerous light and airy bed chambers, making up nearly 150 beds, dressing rooms, bath rooms, serving rooms, and sitting rooms, and a large hall, and a most principal and secondary stone staircases, paved corridors and passages; on the ground and first floors, noble offices, billiard room, smoking room, private dining rooms, bar manager's and other rooms, arranged round a grand interior court, elaborately decorated in the Lombardo-Venetian style, and paved with Maw's mosaic tiles. The Hotel, upon Sir William Lubbock's principle, worked by a 14-horse power steam engine, and is the work of the building. On the basement are well-arranged domestic offices, including spacious kitchen, servants' hall, coal and wine cellars, engine room, bakehouse, &c. The remainder of the property, situate facing Lincoln's Inn-fields, communicating with, and intended to form a valuable adjunct to the hotel, is at present unfinished, but arranged to contain a large power steam engine, and a most principal and secondary stone staircases, paved corridors and passages; on the ground and first floors, noble offices, billiard room, smoking room, private dining rooms, bar manager's and other rooms, arranged round a grand interior court, elaborately decorated in the Lombardo-Venetian style, and paved with Maw's mosaic tiles. THE Law and the Lawyers.

MR. HIBBERT intends to bring forward the question relating to the salaries of County Court Judges on Tuesday next, and on a future day will make a motion relative to the retiring pensions.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, sitting at Nisi Prius, has held that the managing body of a charity to which persons are elected by the purchase of votes, has complete jurisdiction over such persons and can dismiss them on the ground of misconduct, although a jury might not consider the offences alleged against the persons dismissed to amount to misconduct. His Lordship also ruled that misconduct is a question of degree, and that in certain cases a mere non-observance of rules might amount to misconduct.

MR. BRIERLEY'S proceedings at the Middlesex Sessions are causing scandals of the most undesirable character. He has at length been actually carried out of court by the usher. Upon this scene the Pall Mall Gazette comments in this wise: "We have little doubt that this 'carrying out' system, as applied to barristers at the Middlesex Sessions, will, if extended, greatly tend to raise the tone of the Profession generally. How many a barrister might with advantage be carried out by a stalwart usher when the browbeating of a witness has reached its extreme limit and be deposited in the nearest gutter." The sessions Bar at Middlesex should look to itself. There is no reason why a criminal Bar should not maintain as good a reputation as the Bars at Westminster and Chancery-lane.

THE opinion of the West-end solicitors in favour of the Government site for the new Law Courts is sustained in the press, and the notion seems to prevail that the Carey-street site is advocated by a clique whose interests are opposed to those of the public. The Daily News proposes a series of questions to be answered by those still doubting. Which of the two could we most conveniently reach? Which of the two could we better admire? In which of the two could we hear and see and breathe most freely? Which of the two would be the more accessible to our men of business in the City, the West-end, the Temple, and the country? Which would eventually be the cheaper of the two sites? And our contemporary thinks that when these questions have been answered in the light of the voluminous information already published, the public will find that there is no mystification about the question, and will be quite prepared to accept the Government plan.

TRADES UNIONS BILL.

A DEPUTATION of employers has waited upon the HOME SECRETARY to ascertain the views of the Government on this Bill, and to urge that the subject should be taken up by the Ministry, and not left to private members. Mr. BRUCE stated that it was impossible for the Government, amid the pressure of business now before Parliament, to undertake to legislate on a question of such vast importance during the present session. He admitted, however, that it should be met without unnecessary delay, and he expressed a hope that it may not be discussed for the present when nothing could be done, and only irritation could be produced by it. The Bill embodies the opinion of a small minority of the commission, and contains several provisions, the unsatisfactory nature of which has been shown in a commentary upon it published in these pages. When questioned upon it in the House by Mr. Serjeant Cox, the HOME SECRETARY promised immediate attention to the report of the commissioners with a view to legislation; but other claims have intervened more clamorous, perhaps, but not less important than this.

The Trades Unions have resolved to press forward the Bill drawn for them by Mr. HARRISON and Mr. HUGHES, the dissentient members of the Commission, and to take the opinion of the House of Commons upon its provisions. We have already, in a careful review of the Bill, shown in what particulars it requires amendment. To us it appears to be defective in not providing sufficient power of organisation. Our suggestion was and is that trade societies should be incorporated, as are joint-stock companies, with full powers to act in their corporate capacity; to sue and be sued; to frame bye-laws; to enforce payment of subscriptions and fines by their members, and with the same publicity of articles of association, &c., and the same responsibilities as attach to companies.
We have shown also how the penal clauses of the Bill are defective in not sufficiently defining the offences or properly protecting the public and especially the working people, non-unionists, against the annoyances to which they are subjected. As the Bill is to be debated, we will, next week, return to it. The HOME SECRETARY, on the part of the Government, has already protested against a measure of such great importance being brought forward by private members, and declared the inability of the Government to deal with it during the short remainder of the present session.

THE IRISH CHURCH ABOLITION BILL.

It is understood that a great endeavour will be made in committee of the Lords to apply a portion of the surplus fund to the provision of manse and glebes for the Roman Catholic and Presbyterian clergy. It would certainly be a far better use for the money than relieving the landowners from the charge of lunatics and criminals. Nothing would so much tend to produce harmony and contentment between the rival religions, and so to restore peace to Ireland.

THE ASSESSED RATES BILL.

MR. VERNON HARCOURT spent an hour unprofit-ably on Monday evening in denouncing a law which is already condemned, and which it was proposed to abandon. We presume that he had got up his speech some weeks ago on the assumption that the compound householder was still to be retained, and, unwilling that so much virtuous indignation should be wasted, he let it off on an occasion when it was altogether uncalled for, the object of it being then abandoned. It was another illustration of the folly of writing speeches and reciting them from memory, instead of giving utterance to the mind of the moment.

MR. GOSCHEN might, we think, have more prudently repealed the law than attempted its amendment. The Reform Acts would have made ample provision for the supposed difficulty if the compound householder clauses had been simply repealed, without more. But Mr.
GOSCHEN'S proposition accomplished the same end indirectly. The tenant is to be liable only in case the landlord fails to pay his composition, and if the tenant should be compelled to pay the rate he is permitted to deduct it from his rent. The limit of compounding is determined at a rental of 20*l.* in London, and 8*l.* in the country, where it should have been kept at 10*l.*, as originally proposed by the Bill. The landlord compounding is to be allowed 25 per cent. for his trouble and risk—a very liberal commission, seeing that he will certainly add to his rent more than the amount of the rates, and that he possesses a power by which, when the rates take the form of rent, they can be summarily enforced. That the parishes will gain largely by the new arrangement there can be no doubt, and that all reasonable security is provided for the tenant against the loss of the franchise is equally certain. So we trust that this troublesome question is fairly disposed of for ever.

PROSECUTORS IN CIVIL AND CRIMINAL CAUSES.

It seems to be generally admitted that it will soon become necessary to appoint a public prosecutor for criminal matters; and it is our wish now to suggest that when this question comes to be discussed in a practical manner, it may also be considered whether it would not be advisable to give to poor persons a right to sue

But in appointing a public prosecutor it will be well that we should act by the light of experience derived from a sister country, namely, Scotland. The Right Hon. Thomas Francis Kennedy has recently addressed a letter to the Home Secretary, in which he points out what he deems a defect in the Scotch system. "My point is," he says, "that I object to all the initiatory proceedings and inquiries of the Lord Advocate, his deputies, and all procurators fiscal, being conducted in secret—not coram publico, that they are in truth secret inquisitions, without practical responsibility to anyone, inasmuch as if inquiries are made no reply or satisfaction will be given; and if information is sought, it is of the essence of the system that it should be denied; and I do not complain that it is denied, while the system of secrecy is maintained; but it is to the existence of that system that I object."

Now, in our opinion, secret preliminary inquiries are not, in themselves objectionable, but we quite agree with Mr. Kennedy that it would be desirable that ultimately those preliminary proceedings should be made known. He points out that in many cases the inquiries do not terminate in any result. "The region," he says, "as to which dissatisfaction exists in my mind, is the very extensive region in which no public proceedings are eventually taken, where no account is rendered, where no inquiries are made, and if made would not be answered, and would be looked on as an impertinent interference with official dignity." And he lays it down as a general principle that all inquiries made by the public prosecutors, high and low, ought to be conducted in public, and if under a system of publicity a few cunning rogues should escape, who might be caught in the meshes of the law under the secret system, such a result is far preferable to the absence of that wholesome state of confidence and satisfied public opinion, which a system of openness and publicity can alone create and sustain.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

SOME recent decisions of magistrates have surely gone far beyond the purview of this very wholesome law. In one case the killing, or attempting to kill, a cat that was destroying a flower bed was made the subject of a conviction. In another, the clipping of a terrier's ears in accordance with an ancient, but as we conceive a tasteless and perhaps useless, custom of dog-fanciers. The purpose of the statute was to punish wanton cruelty—that is to say, pain inflicted upon an animal with a cruel intent; or with such inconsiderateness as amounts to cruelty. It might be said that the cat was not killed, only much wounded; but then the question should have been, did the defendant endeavour to kill, and was the wound inflicted in the course of that bona fide endeavour? If so, it was, and he had right to kill a noxious animal in the act of destroying his property, he was not rightly convicted. Otherwise, perhaps, if his intent was merely to wound, and not to kill. So with the clipping of the terrier's ears. Was it done with a cruel intent, or with a bona fide purpose to do what was deemed, however wrongfully, to be an improvement of the personal appearance of the dog. If that is cruelty within the Act, so must be a hundred other dealings with animals that are supposed, rightly or wrongly, to give them additional value. We need only refer to castration, spaying, the excision of lambs' tails, cutting the combs of cocks, &c., which are cruelties of precisely the same kind as clipping a dog's ears. It might be desirable to put a stop to all or some of these customs; but then it should be done by express enactment, and not under cover of a law designed to punish merely wanton cruelty.

MORE BREAD LAW.

THE loaf question is now pretty well exhausted, and after four times hearing it debated, the Judges must be pleased to think that it will baffle the most sagacious advocate to suggest another point to be sent up by justices for their deliberation. The last number of the LAW TIMES Reports contains two of the latest of these cases, and the reader will be glad to learn what they determined on a question of such general interest as the lawful size of the loaf.

In R. v. Wood, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 654, the question again was, "What is Fancy Bread?" The 4th sect. of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37 (the Bread Act), exempts from the penalty for selling otherwise than by weight, bread "usually sold under the denomination of French or fancy bread," and the contention in this case was, whether the exemption extended to bread known as fancy bread at the time of the passing of this Act, but which has since become a common article of consumption. The Court held that it came within the enactment, and not within the exemption, and must be sold by weight, the intention of the Act being to protect the customer in the purchase of bread in common use, but to leave the buyer of exceptional or "fancy" bread to take care of himself. Though loaves baked separately and not in batches were exceptional or "fancy bread," when the Act passed, they have ceased to be so, and therefore the exemption no longer applies to them. Mr. Justice HANNEX dissented from the opinion of the majority of the Court, holding that what was deemed by the Legislature to be "fancy" bread when the law was made should still be deemed such.

In the other case, R. v. Kennett, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 657, it was held that, where a customer asks a baker for bread by weight, whether he gives him ordinary bread or fancy bread, he is bound to sell it by weight. If he has only fancy bread, he should so inform the customer. But it is not necessary that the bread should be weighed in the presence of the customer, unless so required.

ACTIONS OF LIBEL.

THE number of libel cases which have recently occupied the courts is very remarkable, and proves either that persons are becoming less regardful of the characters of others, or that people are becoming more tenacious of their good reputations. These cases have been furthermore remarkable as raising a new question which will be found in our Reports of to day. That question was whether a writer could speak of a person under a name which he supposed to have been assumed for temporary purposes, and not to be the ordinary name by which any living person was known, could be guilty of libelling a person who really bore the name used.

The case to which we refer was very remarkable. A soldier of fortune had some time ago travelled through Spain, under the name of Gen. Plantagenet Harrison. In the course of his travels he passed through various Spanish towns and cities. Last year a magazine published an article referring to the exploits of Gen. Plantagenet Harrison, but the writer of the article was not aware that the name belonged to any living person, thinking rather from its incongruity that it had been assumed for fraudulent purposes. Certain incidents in Gen. Harrison's life were mentioned, but highly coloured, and he was expressly called a notorious English swindler. A curious argument was put forward on behalf of the defendants, to the effect that the name had been used without any intention to point to any particular individual, and that if a living person happened to bear the name fixed upon by the writer, it was not his fault. An example was taken from one of Mr. Thackeray's novels, wherein is portrayed the character of an absurd barrister named Cockle. There is a living barrister named Cockle, who is at present Lord Chief Justice of Queensland, and the Solicitor-General asked whether that learned gentleman could have had an action against Mr. Thackeray. Mr. Justice Lush, however, drew the correct distinction. If, he said, the character were a mere creation of the brain, a creature of fancy, and bore the name of a living person, no action could lie at the suit of such living person. On the other hand, if a name is used which belongs to a living person, and he is also pointed at by reference to acts done by him and places visited by him it is a libel.

As illustrating the question of privilege in cases of libel, we may refer to a case in our reports of last week, Spill v. Maule, in the Exchequer Chamber. There the Lord Chief Justice laid it down that where a plaintiff has done an act which is the origin of the libel, and which is capable of a twofold construction, a claim of privilege may be sustained. His Lordship said, in that case, "The presumption of law, then, prima facie being that the letter was, under the circumstances, written without malice, and the only extrinsic evidence, tending to rebut that presumption, being an act of the plaintiff capable of the twofold construction before alluded to, the presumption of the absence of malice on the part of the defendant, which attaches prima facie to the letter itself, must also, we think, prevail in the case of an act done by the plaintiff capable of such twofold construction, and it must be presumed that the defendant, in whose favour the original presumption in point of law exists, took such a view of the plaintiff's conduct in the transaction as induced him honestly to believe that in doing the act in question the plaintiff had been guilty of conduct which the defendant might fairly describe as 'dishonest and disgraceful.'

This decision tends to confirm an opinion which we have recently expressed, that the doctrine as to privilege is at present most unsatisfactory.

MARITIME LIENS AND GENERAL AVERAGE.

IN the case and opinion of counsel which we lately published, on "The Liability of Insurers for Loss by Jettison," it is shown, by reference to Pothier and the German Mercantile Code that in French and German ports merchants have a lien on ship, freight, and cargo arriving for the contribution to jettison of their goods.

The leading American case, Magrath v. Chase, 1 Caines, 196, was mainly relied upon by Chief Justice Bovill, in Dickinson v. Jardine, as establishing the right of the merchant to recover the total insured value of jettisoned goods from the underwriters, although it established only a right to recover the total contribution which was less than the insured value; and the following argument of counsel in that American case afforded one of the main grounds of the opinion of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas though not so reported: "It is said we have a right to look, in the first instance, to the insurer, we must take from the captain and others, and then apply to the underwriters for the balance. Is it not a loss, however, from perils of the sea from a general average arising out of the perils? And will the court turn us round for the words of our policy to the captain, because it is said he has a lien on what was to be paid and being our agent, ought to have thus applied? Can he justify holding the ship till the owner of the goods ejected be paid?"

The following American judgment does that the Supreme Court of the United States hold it to be "A settled rule of maritime law, that the ship is bound to the merchandise and the merchandise to the ship for the performance of the obligations created by the contract of affreightment," that it enforces a contribution on the ground of justice and equity, that "The power and duty of the master to retain, and, if needful, to cause judicial sale of the merchandise saved, has long been established," and that this lien a right to enforce a judicial sale, extends to the vessel as well as to the cargo.

The case to which we allude is that of De Nemours and Co. v. Vance, before the Supreme Court of the United States, December Term 1856 (19 Howard's Reports, 162). On a voyage from the river Delaware to New Orleans, a quantity of gunpowder was thrown overboard or "jettisoned," for the safety of the ship and cargo. The ship with the residue of her cargo arrived at New Orleans. Mr. Justice Curtis, delivering the opinion of the court, said that when a lawful jettison is made, and the property arrives in safety at its destination, although the shipper has not a lien on the vessel for the entire value of his merchandise jettisoned, "he has a lien for that part of its value which the vessel and its freight are bound to contribute towards his indemnity for the sacrifice which has been made for the common benefit. And this lien on the vessel is a maritime lien, operating by the maritime law as a hypothecation of the vessel, and capable of being enforced by proceedings in rem. The right of the shipper to resort to the vessel for claims growing directly out of his contract of affreightment, has very long existed in the general maritime law. It is found asserted in a variety of forms in the Consolato, the most ancient and important of all the old codes of sea laws (see chaps. 63, 106, 227, 254, 269); and the maxim that the ship is bound to the merchandise, and the merchandise to the ship, for the performance of the obligations created by the contract of affreightment, is a settled rule of our maritime law."

In the United States v. Wilder, 3 Sumner, 311, Mr. Justice Story likens general average to a case of salvage where the right of the party arises from services performed for the common safety, and says that "under such circumstances the general maritime law enforces a contribution, independent of any notion of contract upon the ground of justice and equity." "And it gives a lien in rem for the contribution not as the only remedy, but as in many cases the best remedy, and in some cases the only remedy; as, for example, where the owner of the goods is unknown. Indeed, it may be asserted with entire confidence that in a great variety of cases, without such a lien, the shipowner would be without any adequate redress, and would incur most perilous responsibility."

Mr. Justice Curtis further observed, referring to numerous authorities, ancient and modern, that the right to general average is dependent on the contract of affreightment, which embraces in effect an undertaking that if the goods of the shipper are damaged for the common benefit, he shall receive a due indemnity by contribution from the owners of the ship, and of the rest of the cargo; that the power and duty of the master to retain, and if needful cause a judicial sale of, the merchandise saved have long been established. And this right to enforce a judicial sale through what we term a lien in rem, is not confined to the merchandise, but extends to the vessel. Emerigon (ch. 12, s. 43), speaking generally of an action of contribution, says it is in its nature a real action. It would be extraordinary if the right to a lien were not reciprocal; if it existed in favour of the vessel when sacrifice was made of part or the whole of its value for preservation of the cargo, and not against the vessel when sacrifice was made of the cargo for the preservation of the vessel. On full consideration we are of opinion that when cargo is lawfully jettisoned, its owner has, by the maritime law, a lien on the vessel for its contributory share of the general average compensation; and that the owner of the cargo may enforce payment of it by a proper proceeding in rem against the vessel and against the residue of the cargo, if it has not been delivered.

The doubtful English judgment in Hallett v. Bagfield, 18 Ves. Rep. 187, was pronounced, as the Court stated, before having had an opportunity to consider the question sufficiently.

Without having recourse to any court of law, it is customary for English merchants to protect themselves, if necessary, in case of jettison, by deducting the value of the jettisoned goods to the settlement of freight on the goods which have arrived, and this, it appears, is often expressly stipulated in charter-parties; and when there is reason to consider an average agreement signed by the receivers of the residue of the cargo, not a sufficient security for their proportions of the general average, an estimate of the general average claim is obtained from an adjuster, and the goods are not delivered until a deposit of the several proportions supposed to be due is paid by each consignee.

In the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, we conclude that it would be extraordinary if the right of lien were not reciprocal, if it existed in favour of the ship against the cargo for loss of masts cut away, or anchors slipped from, and not in favour of the cargo against the ship and freight for loss of cargo jettisoned for the general safety of the property.

On the question of the lien for general average on goods belonging to a government, we have the case of the United States v. Wilder, (Circuit Court Massachusetts, May 1838, before Story, J.), 3 Sumner (Chas.), 308. In that case a ship bound from Boston to New York went ashore on Block Island. Much expense was incurred in saving the cargo. Certain goods belonging to the United States Government were brought back to Boston, and the shipowner refused to deliver them up until the contribution of the United States Government was either paid or secured. The Storekeeper of the United States refused to sign an average agreement, and this action was brought to recover the value of the goods.

Mr. Justice Story said: "The sole question is, whether there exists a right of lien for the general average due on the goods belonging to the United States. There is no doubt that the shipowner has such a right of lien against all the goods belonging to the other shippers, that he has a right to retain these goods until their proper share of contribution towards the general average is either paid or satisfactorily secured to be paid. That is sufficiently apparent from what is laid down in Abbott on Shipping, part 3, c. 8, s. 17, pp. 371, 362, and in Simonds v. White, 2 B. & C. 805, 811; Scaife v. Tobin, 3 B. & A. 523, 528, 529; The Hoffnung, 6 Rob. 383; 2 Brown Adm. Law, 201, and Stevens on Average, 50, as the universal maritime law. See also Pother on Maritime Contracts, by Cushing, p. 76, n. 134. "No case has been cited in which any exception has been made in regard to the United States, nor has any authority been produced to show that it constitutes a known prerogative of any other government or sovereignty."

There may be a just foundation for a distinction as to liens between the case of the Government and that of private persons under certain contracts. But the present is a case of general average, whereas in a case of salvage the right of the party arises from sacrifices made for the common safety, or services performed for the common benefit. Under such circumstances the general maritime law enforces a contribution independent of any notion of contract, upon the ground of justice and equity. And it gives a lien in rem as in many cases the best remedy, and in some cases the only remedy, as, for example, where the owner of the goods is unknown. Indeed, it may be asserted with entire confidence that in a great variety of cases without such a lien the shipowner would be without any adequate redress, and would encounter most perilous responsibility.

The learned Judge then pointed out the inconvenience and injury which might arise if the lien for general average did not exist against goods belonging to the United States Government,—that "if there was no lien, there was no remedy to enforce an incontrovertible right;" and afterwards commenting on The Comus, cited in 2 Dods. 464; The Prins Frederik, 2 Dods. 451; The Alexander, 2 Dods. 37; The Schooner Exchange, 7 Cranch, 116; The Waterloo, 2 Dods. 433, 435; and the United States v. Barker, 12 Wheat. 559, he concluded "If there ever was a case which ought to be settled by a court of justice upon principles of right and liberality, this is precisely that case. No court of justice ought to decline to enforce it, unless there be some clear, definite, and incontrovertible prohibition against the exercise of it. Finding, therefore, no such exemption from the ordinary lien for general average as the Government seeks to sustain justified by any general principle or any authority, I am not bold enough to create one."

Lastly, we may add a reference to a case relating to contribution of profit on goods to general average.

In Strong v. Firemen Insurance Company, before the Supreme Court of State of New York, in Aug. 1814, 11 Johnson (Wm.), 327, it was correctly argued by Messrs. Wells and S. Jones that where, in an adjustment made at a foreign port, the contributory value of the cargo at the market price on arrival was more than the invoice cost which was insured, the underwriters ought to pay the general average only in proportion to the sum insured, on which they had received a premium. On what just principle, said they, can the underwriters be called on to pay a proportion of general average, not only on the cost of the goods which they have insured, but on the profits also which they have not insured, and on which they have received no premium? The profits might have been separately insured with other underwriters.

This is the correct principle always adopted in practice in England, yet the court decided in opposition to it, and endeavoured in the absence of adjudged cases to show by writers of authority that the settled usage and practice in England for upwards of a century was in conformity with this decision.

SECURITY FOR COSTS BY EXECUTORS AND ASSIGNEES.

It is a most useful power under certain circumstances which enables a Judge to compel a plaintiff to give security for the costs of an action. But it is important that a limit should be fixed to the exercise of his power, and that plaintiffs should not be debarred of their remedies simply on the ground of their poverty.

The principle upon which the courts are disposed to act is illustrated by the case of Sykes v. Sykes, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 663, C. P., which was an action against an execution-creditor and a sheriff for an illegal seizure and sale. The plaintiffs, three in number, sued as executors. One of the plaintiffs resided in Scotland, and therefore out of the jurisdiction of the Court, whilst another, who was joined as a plaintiff with his wife, was a discharged bankrupt. In his affidavit the defendant sheriff stated that if the plaintiffs were not compelled to give security, neither he nor the other defendant would be able to obtain their costs in the event of the action being decided in their favor.

The main question in dispute was whether executors are persons who should be required to give security for costs. And this involved a further consideration, namely, whether anyone standing in a position which does not give him a personal interest in the matter in dispute, but rather makes him a trustee, can be compelled to give security. It was contended for the defendants, that at least executors residing out of the jurisdiction should be compellable to give security. The case relied for upon this proposition was that of Chevalier v. Finnis, 1 Brod. & B. 277. There the head note is, "plaintiffs who live out of the jurisdiction of the court may be compelled to give security for costs, though such plaintiffs sue as executors." Chief Justice Dallas said, "The general rule is, that if the plaintiff lives out of the jurisdiction of the court, he must give security for costs if application to that effect be made at a proper stage of the proceedings. My brother Hullock has attempted to distinguish this case by saying that the plaintiffs, as executors, would not be liable, and, therefore, security is only nugatory. If the law be so, that the plaintiff cannot be liable, the inference drawn is correct; but the plaintiffs may be liable though they do sue as executors. I think, therefore, security ought to be given."

Another authority quoted on the same side was that of Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 1 Dowl. 366. There the court ordered security for costs to be given, but Mr. Justice Taunton said, "The security will, of course, be confined to such costs as she would be liable to in point of law." And in the 16th volume of the LAW TIMES Reports there are two cases bearing on the question. These cases—Smith v. Saunders, at p. 386, and Lerssen v. The Monmouthshire Railway and Canal Company, at p. 289—refer to insolvent persons out of the jurisdiction. In the first case the plaintiff had executed a deed of insolvency for the benefit of his creditors without assignment. The defendant applied to the court that he should give security for costs, and Chief Justice Bovill said, "This action is brought by the plaintiff with the consent of the inspectors and in accordance with the provisions in the deed, and may be said practically to be under the direction of the Court of Bankruptcy. I think, therefore this is a case in which the defendant may claim security for costs." In the latter case the plaintiff was an administrator under Lord Campbell's Act for the benefit of the deceased's widow and children, and the court refused to order security for costs to be given merely on the ground that the plaintiff was suing wholly for the benefit of others. Baron Bramwell said, "The rule is not to order security for costs unless it is shewn that the plaintiff, besides being merely the nominal plaintiff, is also in insolvent circumstances." And Baron Martin observed, "I do not mean to say that we ought not to interfere if there was shown to be anything like practice in the matter, and a poor person had been made administrator for the purpose of preventing the defendants obtaining costs, but as that is not suggested here it seems to me that the present application cannot be supported."

The rules relating to the practice in this matter as regards insolvent persons are collected in a note at page 432 of 1 East.

In Webb v. Ward, 7 T. R. 296, an uncertificated bankrupt in whose name an action of trover was brought (though in reality under the direction of the assignees), was required to give security for the costs, Lord Kenyon saying that the court would not lay it down as a general rule that an uncertificated bankrupt must in all cases give such security, but that it was fair to require it where the action was brought for the benefit of the assignees. And in Tidd's Pract. 446, a case is mentioned of Sutton v. Sutton, Trin. 38 Geo. 3, where, upon the general ground the court doubted whether an uncertificated bankrupt bringing an action should be compelled to give security for the costs, and ordered it to stand over till the following term.

In the recent decision of Sykes v. Sykes we have the practice clearly established. Chief Justice Bovill delivered a careful judgment. He said: "It is quite true that Shaw is insolvent, and not able, if the action fails, to pay the costs of the other side, but that is not sufficient of itself. It must be shown also that he is a nominal and not the real plaintiff in order to be compelled to provide security. Under this rule it generally happens that the real plaintiff becomes security for the person in whose name the action is brought. As far as I know, however, this rule has never been applied to executors or to assignees in bankruptcy; and it seems to follow reasonably that it should not so apply, because although there may be legatees under the will they may not obtain their legacies. This is, therefore, quite a different case from that of a man suing in the name of another. So in bankruptcy no one creditor might think it worth while to be security for an assignee. No case has been referred to which is an authority for either assignees or executors being ordered to give security on the ground of their not being in a position to pay costs, and of their suing for other persons. On the contrary, an executor out of the jurisdiction was ordered to give security in the same way as an ordinary plaintiff might be so ordered in the case of Chevalier v. Finnis, 1 B. & B. 267, on the ground that the plaintiffs might be liable, though they did sue as executors. Here likewise they sue in the character of real plaintiffs."

And Mr. Justice M. Smith was equally explicit. "The plaintiff who has a beneficial interest," he said, "must not sue through the instrumentality of an insolvent nominal plaintiff. But an executor stands in a different position; he succeeds as the representative of the testator, and is entitled to his estate; whilst he continues such representative, no one else is so entitled; he sues for this purpose in his own right, and he obtains the benefits of the action. We should be acting in a manner contrary to what is just between the parties, if we held that an executor must give security for costs merely because he is insolvent; and, further, we should be making a new practice. The Legislature has interfered to protect persons from trivial actions of a certain kind when brought by persons without any visible means, but provision has been made by the 10th section of the County Courts Act 1867 in so guarded a manner, that I think we should not be justified in extending the rule."

The case of Scotland manifestly does not wholly apply, inasmuch as in that country coroner's inquests are unknown. But as inquests relate only to cases of suspected non-natural deaths, the region beyond such cases lies open to the application of the principle advocated by Mr. Kennedy.

Or the many cases decided on this statute the majority are on attempts by the higher ecclesiastical courts to usurp the jurisdiction of the inferior. Of these Doctor James's case, Hob. 17, is an example. There a prohibition was moved for on the part of the Bishop of Winchester to restrain the judge of the Audience Court of Canterbury from citing men from the remotest parts of the diocese of Winchester, "being sometimes sixty miles; and further, if they keep not their day and hour of appearance, they are excommunicated, and then cannot be absolved, except they will yield to the transmitting of their cause into the Archbishop's Court, whereby the stat. 23 Hen. 8 is utterly illuded." The archbishop answered that "no such art of transmitting was used," but urged that his holding the court complained of was lawful, "for the archbishop may sit in any diocese of his own province, and may hear causes arising within that diocese by his prerogative, for he hath a concurring jurisdiction with the inferior ordinary." The court, however, decided that the "transmitting causes as above was expressly against the statute; that the party hath a kind of wrong, for he is deprived of an appeal which he should have had if the cause had begun with the inferior ordinary;" and that the supposed concurrent jurisdiction was "not as he was archbishop, but as he was Legatus Natus to the Pope, and then that power ceased being abrogated with the Pope."

Another case showing the determination of the Judges to restrain the assumption of jurisdiction by the higher Ecclesiastical Courts is that of Jones v. Jones, Hob. 185. There "the Chancellor of the inferior ordinary did make request to the Dean of the Arches to take the cause to his hearing, and the reason given of sending it up was that the cause (being indeed a cause of modus decimandi) was so difficult that the plaintiff could have no sufficient counsel there for that cause." And the question, on a motion for a prohibition, was whether such transmission of the cause was warranted under the statute of Hen. 8 as a case in which the law, civil or canon, doth affirm execution of such request to be lawful or tolerable." Two civilians were sent for to give their opinions on the point, and they said that by the canon law the archbishop is restrained from calling causes from the ordinary against the latter's will except in specified cases. "Yet the law left it in the absolute power of the ordinary to send the cause to the archbishop absolutely at his will without assigning any special reason." But the court overruled this opinion, saying that "to expound the statute thus, that the ordinary may at his will and pleasure send the subject from one end of the kingdom to the other without cause is both against the letter of the statute and eludes it utterly," for "the purpose of the statute was to provide for the ease of the subject more than for the jurisdiction of the ordinary. . . . And this very clause of referring after it begins with referring generally, it checks it with this, 'that to be done in cases only,' &c., 'which were a vain correction,' if it left it as general as before, i.e., if it were lawful or tolerable in all cases without cause." The above case then shows that a matter could be sent by a bishop to the Court of Arches, or jurisdiction be accepted by the latter only where there was some good ground.

There are, however, other cases which seem at first sight to show that the Court of Arches must accept letters of request without considering whether there is good ground for the transmission of the cause to the higher court.

Such are Butler v. Dolben, 2 Lee, 312, and Pelling v. Whiston, 1 Com. 199. Butler v. Dolben was a suit for jactitation of marriage, brought as father and natural guardian to a minor, in the Arches, by joint letters of request from the Chancellor of London and the Commissary of Bucks. The defendant appeared under protest for two reasons: (1) That the letters of request being from two Judges, were illegal, and the jurisdiction could not be founded without the consent of both plaintiff and defendant; (2) because the father had no interest and could not bring the suit. The first point only was argued and Sir George Lee (Dean of Arches) held that the Arches Court had jurisdiction by virtue of the joint letters.

The judgment begins by answering the objection that the parties had not consented to the devolution of jurisdiction thus: "I was of opinion that the jurisdiction of the Court of Arches was now entirely settled by stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 9; that the Arches is empowered by that statute to take original cognisance, by virtue of letters of request, of such causes as the civil and canon law allowed the inferior Judge to devolve to the superior, which are those that are called arduous cases, of which matrimonial were always esteemed the chief, that the statute vested the power of devolving in the Judges, without mentioning consent, either by the bishop or parties—that, in fact, the bishop's consent was never required, and that if the parties' consent had ever been deemed necessary there hardly could be a cause commenced here by request, for the defendant almost constantly desires as many opportunities of appealing as possible, for delay." The learned Judge then proceeds, evidently answering Dr. Bettesworth, who had said in argument that "the granting and receiving letters of request was discretionary." "As to the discretion of this court whether it shall accept or refuse letters of request when granted by a proper Judge, the delegates held, in the case of Pelling v. Whiston, that the Dean of Arches was bound to accept them ex debito iustitiæ." This observation, it will be seen, is a mere obiter dictum, unnecessary for the decision of the cause, and when the case of Pelling v. Whiston, 1 Com. 199, is considered, it does not support the proposition that Sir George Lee deduced from it.

As Sir Robert Phillimore remarks, "the case of Pelling v. Whiston was a singular one, happening at a time of great political excitement, in which the Church was largely concerned." The judgment in Convocation against Whiston's writings had no practical result, and it was desired to obtain the decision and action of some competent tribunal on a charge of heresy. Whiston dwelt within the exempt peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, the commissary of which (Dr. Harwood), at the instance of Dr. Pelling, sent letters of request to the Arches, requesting Dr. Bettesworth to call Whiston before him and to hear and determine the cause. Dr. Bettesworth replied, recommending the commissary to "proceed as in other matters of ecclesiastical cognizance, there being no suggestion of any reason why the cause should not be brought before the proper ordinary" (i.e., the Bishop of London). Dr. Harwood then sent new letters of request, giving as a reason that "it may be doubtful whether he as a commissary of the peculiar jurisdiction can proceed to a final hearing or inflict proper punishment," &c. Meanwhile Dr. Pelling prayed a citation under sect. 4 of 23 Hen. 8, c. 9.

Dr. Bettesworth held a court to consider these two points: first, whether these letters of request ought to be accepted, coming as they did from the commissary of the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's; secondly, whether he ought to grant a citation under sect. 4 of the statute of Hen. 8. And he decreed "that letters of request lie not before him, because in the case of heresy the bishop of the diocese hath jurisdiction in places otherwise exempt within his diocese; and, notwithstanding the Statute of Citation, the heretic may be cited to appear before him upon letters of request from the judge of the peculiar, &c., and therefore he cannot decree a citation," &c. The grounds of the decree are obvious, and show that Dr. Bettesworth considered not that he might, but that he must refuse both the letters and the citation; for if the Bishop of London had jurisdiction, then the letters of request from the Commissary of St. Paul's did not come to him from the proper court, since the intermediate jurisdiction of the bishop had been skipped over, and the citation could not be granted, for in the words of sect. 4 of 23 Hen. 8, the archbishop can only cite on consent of the "bishop or other ordinary immediate thereunto," i.e., whose jurisdiction immediately precedes that of the archbishop.

Dr. Pelling appealed to the delegates against this decree, and the delegates "reversed the sentence and citation, and ordered Mr. Whiston to appear before them." The reasons for the reversal are not given, but from the line of the argument in the cause, it seems probable that the delegates determined not that Dr. Bettesworth must, but that he might, accept the letters of request, and this on the grounds that the Bishop of London had no jurisdiction, and therefore the letters of request and citation would be good without his intervention. And this view receives confirmation from the fact that the delegates assume jurisdiction themselves. Had they thought Dr. Bettesworth bound to accept the letters or issue a citation, they would, doubtless, have remitted the case to the Court of Arches. But if he thought that he was not so bound, then, on the supposition that the bishop had no jurisdiction, the case would have had to be heard in the first instance before the Commissary of St. Paul's with consequent delay, and the further objection that the commissary would have been unable to inflict on Whiston a sentence of degradation or deprivation.

Then we have to consider the effect of the Act for better enforcing Church Discipline (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86).

From the debates during the progress of the Bill through Parliament (see Hansard, vi. 54, 55), it would appear that the design of the Act was to give facilities for disposing of charge without litigation on a commission of inquiry, or for hearing the charge before the bishop with competent legal advice, or for transmitting the case to the Arches by letters of request: (Hansard, vol. 55, p. 74). The Bill in the shape in which it was originally introduced in the Lords would have had the effect of bringing all charges in which clergymen were accused of improper conduct before the Court of Arches, but this Bill was altered to the present shape in consequence of much opposition from the bishop. As the Bishop of Exeter observed on the second reading of the later Bill, "The difference between the two measures was that in the latter the bishops, while in the former the Court of Arches, was the source of jurisdiction."

But there is no indication of any intention to make the jurisdiction of the Arches compulsory. And on the face of the Act itself there is no such indication. The preamble is, "Whereas the manner of proceeding in causes for the correction of clerks requires amendment," and the provisions are directed to this. But so far from the jurisdiction of the Arches being made compulsory on letters of request, sect. 11 makes such exercise of jurisdiction less necessary, since it secures that a hearing before a bishop shall be with three competent legal assessors.

And sect. 13 enacting that the bishop may, where a clerk is "charged with an offence under the Act," "in any case, if he shall think fit, . . . send the case by letters of request to the court of appeal of the province," &c., contains nothing which can be construed to mean that the acceptance of the letters is obligatory on the court of appeal.

The conclusion is, then, that the Dean of Arches had and retains a discretion whether he shall accept or refuse letters of request, and that in the exercise of that discretion he will be guided by the consideration whether the devolution or waiver of jurisdiction by the inferior court is for the interests of justice.

This brings us to the second and third reasons assigned by Sir Robert Phillimore for refusing the letters in the present case, viz., that no grounds are stated in the letters, and that the charge being one of heresy, can be better investigated by the bishop.

Now, as to stating grounds for sending the letters of request, there seems, since the Church Discipline Act, to be some difficulty. In a form given in Oughton (ed. 1738, 4to; vol. ii., p. 465), for "Litæ requisitoriales, ab ordinario loci, pro litis prosecutione in alia diocesi," the reason assigned by the ordinary for sending the letters is that "Nos considerantes hujusmodi causam esse arduam magnique momenti, perpendentes que non esse in partibus nostris tam facilem jurisdictionem copiam, &c." And a form given in Chitty (Gen. Pr. vol. ii., p. 497), alleges that the transmission of the case to the higher court will be of advantage to the parties "not only from the able assistance they can have of counsel in the said Arches Court of Canterbury, but as the same will be also a more ready and expeditious way for the hearing and finally determining the said cause."

In these forms the allegation that the court above would have the advantage of legal assistance, is substantially the reason assigned, this assistance being especially necessary in "arduous causes." And Burn (Eccl. Law by Phillimore, vol. iii., p. 224, n.), considers this allegation so important as to say that the judge of the Arches Court would refuse to accept letters of request from the Consistory of London, or the Court of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's or Westminster, because the reasons therein alleged, viz., "the better assistance they can there have of advocates and proctors," would be inapplicable.

But at the present time, and since the provisions, by sect. 11 of the Church Discipline Act, the allegation of lack of legal assistance on trial of a case in the bishop's court, would seem to be merely formal and useless.

Now, Sir Robert Phillimore admits that though no grounds are formally stated, yet if it appeared "from the nature of the case that justice would be so promoted," he would accept the letters, and he adds that he has accepted letters on charges of immorality against clerks, "because there is a manifest advantage both to the parties and to the Church, that a court of law, accustomed to the oral examination of witnesses, and to the investigation of evidence, and aided by the assistance of able counsel, should deal in the first instance with such cases. But," he proceeds, "the present letters of request are tendered to me in a matter of alleged heresy connected with some of the most awful mysteries of our religion. Surely that is a case in which, of all others, the bishop ought to exercise his jurisdiction."

Charges of heresy in early times were usually dealt with in Convocation, though the bishop doubtless had jurisdiction. The statute De Hæretico Comburendo (2 Hen. 4, c. 15) gave authority to the bishop to convict of heresy, and on refusal to abjure or relapse, to hand over the offender to the secular court to be condemned to be burnt. This statute was amended by 25 Hen. 8, c. 14, which recites that it is "not reasonable that any ordinary, by any suspicion conceived of his own phantasy without due accusation or presentment, should put any subject to the infamy and slander of heresy, and to the peril of life, &c.," and enacts that stewards, in their leets, shall inquire as to heretics, and shall make presentment thereon to the bishop, the proceedings to be as before justices of the peace.

And we have seen that by the stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 9, s. 4, the archbishop could cite, on a charge of heresy, without waiting for letters of request. It appears, therefore, that charges of heresy were then considered as especially fit for trial by the court of the archbishop, or by that of the bishop, only under restrictions. This was partly attributable to the severe sentences consequent on a conviction for heresy, but also to the difficulty in the investigation of the charge.

Now, Sir Robert Phillimore in saying that charges of immorality are better tried by the Court of Arches is obviously right. These usually resolve into mere questions of fact on conflicting evidence. But why he should think that heresy can be better judged by the bishop is not so clear. The charge of heresy here will be a mere question of construction. There will be no question of fact, as there might have been had the alleged heresy been in words or writing, of which the accused denied the authorship. Here, the passages containing the alleged heresy are fully set out in the letters of request, there will be no dispute as to authorship, and the only question will be whether the passages contain "doctrine directly contrary or repugnant to the articles and formularies of the Church of England." This is a question of construction only, and one that a lay Judge would probably come to with less prejudice and be more competent to determine than a bishop: (See Ex parte Denison, 4 Ell. & Bl. 294.) On the whole then, granting that the Court of Arches has a discretion to accept or refuse, yet, as the learned Judge of that court in the present case has stated the grounds on which his discretion in favour of refusal has been exercised, the Judicial Committee will have to consider whether the grounds stated are sufficient to support his decision; and though the committee will doubtless be cautious in interfering with the exercise of the discretion of the Judge below, it will on the other hand, in all likelihood, be cautious in deciding that, after the report of a commission of inquiry in favour of the prosecution of the charge, proceedings against the accused of heresy must, in the first instance, be taken in the bishop's court.

If a charge of heresy be not so, what is to be considered an "arduous cause" so as, according to the old rule of the canon law, to justify the devolution of jurisdiction from the court of the ordinary to that of the Arches?

Any argument in favour of a bishop being the Judge, in the first instance, on questions of heresy, would apply at least as strongly to questions of ritual; yet of the latter the Dean of Arches has not hesitated to accept jurisdiction under letters of request.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE Shedden case was on Tuesday last (the twenty-first day of Miss Shedden's opening address) adjourned sine die. On the previous Friday, when Miss Shedden came to the bar, the Lord Chancellor warned her that their Lordships would hear not a single word more on the facts, and that she must confine herself to three questions, first, the improper reception or rejection of evidence in the court below; secondly, the fresh matter on the affidavits; and, thirdly, the motion for a new trial. Miss Shedden urged that there was no standing order of the House to stop her speech on other matters, but the Lord Chancellor was firm; and last Tuesday, when Miss Shedden came to the bar of the House, their Lordships said that they had determined on no account to allow her to go on beyond that day; that other suitors had been put to great inconvenience, and that all omissions of fact or law must be supplied by her father, who could follow her. The only other noticeable point in this case is, that Miss Shedden has been confined to Sir Cresswell Cresswell's notes of the evidence taken in the Divorce Court, both in her examination of the inferences drawn from that evidence, and her objections to the reception or rejection of the evidence of particular witnesses. Miss Shedden contended that the application of this rule did her much injustice, because the judge's notes contained much of the evidence incorrectly, or so imperfectly as to give a wrong impression, while marginal comments of the judge such as "stuff" and "nonsense," showed the animus which affected him. And, further, that if she should be excluded now from objecting to any evidence unless the objection was made in the court below and appeared on the judge's notes, there would be a wrong to her because her counsel made various objections which the judge overruled without recording. Miss Shedden wished to verify her assertions by reference to the shorthand writer's notes of the trial, but their Lordships refused to allow it. Miss Shedden observed that it would be a lesson to the Bar to insist that the judge should make a note of every objection made.

On Monday a committee of privileges met. In the Balfour of Burley Peerage case, it was resolved, after counsel had been heard and witnesses examined, that Alexander Hugh Bruce, of Kennet, had made out his claim to the title and dignity.

The Wicklow Peerage claims were also heard. The late Earl of Wicklow died in March last, without male issue. One of the present claimants, Charles Francis Arnold, is the son, by a second marriage, of the Hon. and Rev. Francis Howard, an elder brother of the late earl. The other claimant is an infant five years old, who is alleged to be the legitimate son of the late William George Howard (the eldest son of the Hon. and Rev. Francis) by a lady named Richardson, whom he married in 1863. A petition had been presented to the House on behalf of each of these petitioners, in the latter case by Mrs. Howard, as the infant's mother and guardian. Sir Roundell Palmer addressed the committee and examined witnesses in support of the first claim. A gentleman, who said that his name was De Bordenave, and that he was a foreigner, without a profession, then applied, under the authority of Mrs. Howard, who was present, to cross-examine one of the witnesses, but the committee told Mrs. Howard that she could not be heard by a person who was neither counsel nor solicitor. The Lord Chancellor observed that it would be most dangerous to relax the rule that persons appearing at the bar for parties must be under professional restraints. It was then suggested to Mrs. Howard, who said she had no means to employ counsel that she should petition the House to be allowed to appear in forma pauperis, when counsel would be assigned her. The committee adjourned till July 12th next, in order to give Mrs. Howard time to present such a petition.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

On Friday, June 18, Lord Romilly delivered the judgment of the Committee in the case of the Maggie Leslie, on appeal from the Admiralty Court. The Maggie Leslie, when in a disabled state off Gaspar Island, in the East Indies, was sighted by the Fusi Yama, a barque on a voyage from Shanghai to London with a cargo of tea and silk. The crew of the Fusi Yama cleared the wreck of the Maggie Leslie, got her under weigh, and subsequently after much delay she reached Batavia safely. The Admiralty Court at Batavia awarded 110,000 florins as salvage to the owners, master, and crew of the Fusi Yama, and that amount was remitted to the appellants, the owners of the Fusi Yama. The master, officers, and crew then instituted a cause for distribution of salvage against the owners in the Admiralty Court here, and it was agreed between the parties that the amount to be distributed should be taken at 8250*l*. Sir Robert Phillimore awarded 1400*l*. to the owners, and 6850*l*. to the master, officers, and crew (eighteen men in all) in different proportions. The owners appealed against this award, and contended that they had run great risk and loss by reason of the liability of the policies of insurance on the Fusi Yama to become void, and the liability to the owners of the cargo (worth 60,000*l*.), and that they were entitled to a larger proportion. Lord Romilly said that the Court of Appeal was always unwilling to interfere upon a question of mere discretion. This was a rule that had been lately acted upon by the Judicial Committee in the England, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 46, and there were here no circumstances to justify a variance of the judgment below (such as was made in the Chetah, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 621), though possibly the committee might have made a different apportionment had they decided the case in the first instance.

The only other noticeable Admiralty appeals during the past week were the Lion and the Germania. The Lion, in ballast from London to Hull, ran into the Yorktown off Blackwall. The Lion was at the time in the charge of a duly licensed pilot, and the collision was admitted to have been by his default. The question then arose whether the owners of the Lion were excused from liability on the ground that they were compelled by law to have a pilot on board and in charge. The answer to that question, by sects. 303, 354, 379, of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, depended on whether the Lion was or was not carrying passengers, pilotage being compulsory in the former and not in the latter case. It appeared that the master of the Lion, had, before starting from London, taken on board for conveyance to Hull, his wife and her father, who were on board at the time of the collision. The master had been forbidden to carry anyone, other than the crew, without payment of fare, except by the permission of the owners. No such permission had been given here, and no fare was paid till the Lion reached Hull, of course after the collision. Sir Robert Phillimore considered (see 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 803) that the payment of a fare is necessary to constitute a "passenger," so as to impose the obligation of taking a pilot on board; that the subsequent payment of fare in this case was merely with the object to convert the persons into passengers, and so obtain exemption from liability for the collision; and so held that the Lion was not exempt from payment of damage by reason of having a compulsory pilot on board at the time of the collision. The appeal from this decision was argued on Wednesday and Friday week. Judgment was reserved.

The Germania, on Monday, was the last of the Admiralty appeals that will probably be taken this session, and the committee reserved judgment on the question whether a barque, damaged by a collision with the Germania, was carrying at the time lights so placed as to comply with the order of regulations as to navigation.

The appeal of Shepherd v. Bennett and Phillimore, from the Arches Court was heard last Saturday. It will be remembered that Mr. Bennett, the vicar of Frome Selwood, was charged by one of his parishioners, Mr. Sheppard, with the publication of heretical doctrines, contained especially in an essay contributed to the volume called "The Church and the World." After the report of a commission of inquiry, authorised by the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Bath and Wells, as the bishop of the diocese in which Mr. Bennett held preferment, sent the case by letters of request to the Arches Court. The judge of that court (Sir R. Phillimore) refused to accept the letters of request, on the ground that he had a discretion to accept or refuse, and that a refusal was proper when no grounds for acceptance were stated, and because a charge of heresy is better investigated by the bishop in the first instance. The case is fully reported in 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 623. The Judicial Committee (following the arrangement of the subject in the judgment of the court below) said that there were two points for argument: 1st. Whether the Dean of Arches had a discretion before the Church Discipline Act? 2nd. Whether he had such discretion since that statute? and they proposed that counsel should argue the second of these points first. Mr. A. J. Stephens, Q. C., argued for the appellant: that the Dean of Arches must accept letters coming from a proper court, the sending them by the bishop at once setting the Superior Court in motion. The Church Discipline Act, by sect. 13 taken in connection with other sections and on the whole view of the statute, was intended to vest a discretion as to sending letters of request, but to make the acceptance of them when sent compulsory on the Arches Court. As to no grounds having been stated in the letters for their acceptance, various precedents for this were cited. And the learned counsel concluded by questioning the correctness of Sir R. Phillimore's opinion that cases involving doctrine, unlike charges of immorality against clerics, would be best decided in the first place by a bishop. Mr. Walter G. F. Phillimore argued for the Dean of Arches (Mr. Bennett was unrepresented) that if it were held that, since the Church Discipline Act, the Court had no power to refuse letters of request, a great burden might be thrown on the court by the perpetual devolution of jurisdiction by bishops. All that Sir R. Phillimore had done here was to require that proper ground should be stated for his acceptance. The Arches Court clearly had a discretion before the Act, and there was nothing in the Act which could be construed to take away that discretion. By letters of request the office of the judge was promoted, and this could only be by his consent. Several cases were cited to show that since the Act on charges of heresy the bishop had, with only one exception, acted in the first instance. At the conclusion of Mr. Phillimore's argument the Lord Chancellor intimated that the committee would take time to consider, and that notice would be given to Mr. Stephens, if it were thought necessary to hear a reply or further arguments. No day has as yet been named for judgment or further hearing.

Monday was occupied with petitions of no special interest.

On Tuesday, the case of the Queen v. Murphy, on appeal from New South Wales, was heard, raising the novel question whether a jury before verdict may read newspapers containing reports of the trial. In Aug. 1867 Murphy was tried in the colony for the murder of one Hassen at South Creek in 1865. The jury were locked up for three days, and were then discharged without a verdict. In the following September Murphy was again tried by another jury, and on a verdict of "guilty" was sentenced to death. While this second trial was going on, the jury, in charge of the sheriff's bailiff, were kept at an hotel, and were allowed to read, and some of them did actually read, reports of the evidence given from day to day in the newspapers. The reports were headed, the "South Creek Murder Case," and in one instance it was stated that "the witness was cross-examined, but was not shaken in his evidence." Subsequently, a rule was granted calling on the Crown to show cause why a venire de novo should not issue. This rule was made absolute, and on the record an entry was ordered that the jury had been improperly allowed the free use of the newspapers of the day containing reports of the trial. Against this order the appeal was brought. The matter was elaborately argued by Sir Roundell Palmer for the Crown, and by the Solicitor-General for the prisoner. The chief authorities relied on will be found in Russell on Crimes (vol. 1, p. 264, "Embracery") and in Reg. v. Bertrand, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 752. Judgment was reserved.

On Wednesday, the Indian appeals were commenced.

V. C. MALINS' COURT.

During the first two days of the sittings after Trinity Term, a few cases have been disposed of in this court which deserve a note.

First, The South-Eastern of Portugal Railway (Limited), which has occupied the court on several former occasions, came on upon a motion to restrain the contractors, Messrs. Waring, from taking proceedings in Portugal in respect of a claim of $4,000, the balance due to them under their contract; there being a sum of $28,000, in Portugal, which in some sense might be regarded as assets of the company. The railway having been formed, under the contract with the Government, they were in a position to seize, and had, as it was alleged, seized, a portion of the property, and it was stated that the only reason why the whole was not confiscated was, that a loan was being negotiated in this country. Under these circumstances a winding-up was determined on, and was now being prosecuted under the direction of the court, and the Vice-Chancellor decided that the official liquidator should have power to act under the 96th section, a compromise with the Government being of the last importance. Subsequently, on appeal, a creditor's representative was suggested and had been appointed, and now appeared and supported the motion against Messrs. Waring. After considerable argument, the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the proceedings in Portugal were such as were in contravention of the Companies Act 1862, which enacted that no action, &c., should be brought after the commencement of the winding-up, and that all attachments, executions, &c., should be void. Here what was done was, in fact, an intercepting of the money which might belong to the company, and if this was allowed, a number of creditors, by proceeding in a foreign country, might prevent the official liquidator from getting anything. Therefore, the motion must be granted, without prejudice, however, to the right of Messrs. Waring (if any) to any funds coming to the hands of the official liquidator from any property in Portugal.

The next case was the Land Shipping Company (Limited), which came on upon a summons to remove the name of David Jones from the list of contributories, his case being that he made no application, never had an allotment, paid nothing, received nothing, and did nothing. On the part of the official liquidator, it was said that he had appeared by a solicitor, and had never done anything until a four-day order had been made. Moreover, it appeared in evidence that his solicitor claimed immunity for him on the ground of having been induced to take shares on fraudulent representations. This appeared in affidavits filed very recently, which Mr. Jones's counsel elected not to ask for time to answer. Mr. Jones was a creditor for 700*l.*, and the call was for 100*l.* The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that, although the mere omission to show cause against being on the list was not in itself sufficient to preclude a person from getting off the list, here it was clear that Mr. Jones was a shareholder, he in fact had appeared by his solicitors, and admitted it, because he said by them that he was induced to take the shares by fraud. It was clear he knew perfectly what was going on, and must be retained on the list, and his application must be refused with costs.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

In the Court of Exchequer Chamber on Monday and Tuesday, the 21st and 22nd inst., the case of Climie v. Wood came on for hearing on appeal from the Court of Exchequer. The question at issue between the parties was the title to a steam engine and boiler. It appeared that the plaintiff's uncle had been the owner of certain land which he had purchased for building purposes. Upon this land he had put up a steam engine and boiler for the purposes of his business as a builder. The boiler was secured in its position by brickwork without the removal of part of which it could not be removed, and the engine was fastened by screws to planking let into the ground. An engine-house was built over the whole. There was evidence on both sides, more or less conflicting, as to the extent to which the engine and boiler were structurally annexed to the freehold, but the jury found in answer to questions left to them at the trial that they were trade fixtures and were removable without appreciable damage to the freehold. The land upon which the engine and boiler stood had been mortgaged in general terms, and the main question was whether the engine and boiler passed by this mortgage to the mortgagees. Upon the findings of the jury the learned judge ordered the verdict to be entered for the defendants, and the Court of Exchequer affirmed his ruling, holding that the articles in question passed to the mortgagees; and against that decision the plaintiff appealed to the Court of Exchequer Chamber. Mr. Denman, Q. C., with him Mr. Simpson, argued for the appellant; he contended that the question was one of fact for the jury, and depended upon the intention of the parties; if chattels were affixed not for the benefit of the inheritance but for the better use of the chattels themselves, then they did not go to the owner of the freehold, but remained the personal property of the person affixing them. He cited various authorities for this proposition, and contended that the general tendency of the cases had been to relax the stringency of the old rule with reference to fixtures, and to give effect to the intention of the parties. The maxim Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit, he admitted to be a correct statement of the law on the subject, but the question in each case really was, what was to be considered as planted in the soil within the meaning of the maxim. The more modern and enlightened view was that only such things were to be considered as planted in the soil as were affixed to it with the intention that they should really form a part of the freehold. All the cases, that apparently made against the appellant and were relied on by the court below, were cases where the machinery or other chattels had been affixed to the realty under circumstances consistent with an intention that they should remain so for the improvement of the inheritance. When there was a colliery, for instance, and machinery attached to it, it was highly probable that the intention was that such machinery should continue a part of the colliery; it would then cease to be a chattel, and would pass, no doubt, by a conveyance of the land. The present case was wholly different. This machinery was only put up temporarily for the purpose of the building operations intended to be carried on upon the land; when such building operation was completed it would be removed and taken somewhere else where the owner might be engaged in building operations. They were not fixtures attached to real property devoted to a fixed business, but were intended to be moveable and to be used for the purpose of a business carried on now in one place now in another. The court did not appear disposed to accede to this argument. They said that a great number of the cases cited in favour of the learned counsel's proposition only came to this, that there might be cases in which the articles in question were so lightly affixed to the freehold as not to be fixtures at all, but to retain their character of chattels, as a carpet fastened down by nails, or a picture nailed to the wall. The engine and boiler could not be said to come within this category; the jury had expressly found them to be trade fixtures, and any other finding would have been perverse; they were therefore fixtures, not chattels; as trade fixtures and removable without damage to the freehold, they might be removable as between landlord and tenant; that was quite a different question from the question whether they passed to the mortgagee; it was to be observed that trade fixtures, unless removed, became the property of the landlord. Mr. Henry Matthews, and with him Mr. Channell, argued briefly in support of the respondent's case, upon grounds nearly identical with the objections thrown out by the court to the arguments of Mr. Denman. At the conclusion of the arguments, the court took time to consider, not so far as may be conjectured from any doubt as to their decision on the particular case, but apparently from a desire to lay down the principles of the law on the subject with some precision, there being a certain amount of confusion existing in the present state of the authorities.

On Tuesday the 22nd the arguments in the case of the Duke of Buccleugh v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, were commenced. This case, it will be remembered, was decided about this time last year by the Court of Exchequer in favour of the plaintiff. The pleadings are highly elaborate, and the facts somewhat voluminous, but the main questions are, when once extricated from surrounding complications, tolerably simple, though of no slight importance or difficulty. The action was upon an award of compensation by an arbitrator for injurious affection by the Thames Embankment of the plaintiff's mansion upon the banks of the river. The pleas denied that there was any injurious affection of the plaintiff's property, and upon the trial the arbitrator was himself examined; he proved that he had given a certain sum for the taking of a causeway and jetty belonging to the plaintiff, and a sum of 5000l. for the loss of amenities by which the marketable value of the property was diminished; the principal loss of amenity appeared to be diminution of privacy by substitution of a public road instead of the river. The main points discussed were, whether the arbitrator's evidence was admissible to impeach the award, and whether this sum of 5000l. was given for matters which the arbitrator had jurisdiction to take into consideration. The Court of Exchequer decided for plaintiff, though all the members of the court did not concur in so deciding on similar grounds, some thought that the arbitrator had jurisdiction to take into consideration the loss of amenities; others that the evidence being inadmissible and the award good on the face of it, this question did not arise. In order to appreciate the question at present involved, it may be worth while to advert very briefly to the decision on the subject; it has been decided that in general the injurious affection contemplated by the Legislature as entitling to compensation must be by acts that would have been actionable in the absence of statutory authorisation, in other words there must be injuria, mere damnum is not sufficient; but an exception has been grafted upon that doctrine by a decision of Mr. Justice Crompton in the Bail Court, in which it was held that where land was compulsorily taken, the doctrine that the injurious affection of the remainder must be such as would have been actionable does not always apply. Mr. Hawkins, Q. C., who appeared for the defendants in the present case, took occasion to observe that results had been supposed to follow from that decision which did not really do so. The fact that a piece of land had been compulsorily taken did not let in as subjects of compensation all damages which might be done to the remainder of the property whether they would otherwise have been so or not; the effect of the decision must be confined to cases where the damage was connected with and resulted from the operations carried on upon the land compulsorily taken: in this case if the jetty belonged to the Duke and had been compulsorily taken, that had no connection with the loss of amenities for which the sum of 5000l. had been given. The arguments for the defendants were not concluded when the court rose.

BAIL COURT.

This court sat on the last two days of term, and disposed of some few motions and rules. In Reg. v. Ward v. Marriott, Mr. Waddy moved for an information in the nature of a quo warranto upon the following facts: Marriott and Ward were candidates for the office of town councillor in a newly-constituted borough. The former was elected, but Ward, thinking him to be unduly elected, gave him notice that he should move for a quo warranto. On this Marriott immediately resigned office, his resignation was accepted, and a new election became necessary. The question now resolved itself into one of costs. The court (consisting of Mr. Justice Lush and Mr. Justice Hayes) said they would not grant a quo warranto after a valid resignation. It was not usual to give costs except with reference to proceedings in this court, and as such proceedings were quite unnecessary, the rule must be refused.

In Reg. v. Barrow, a question arose as to the sufficiency of a notice convening a vestry meeting to choose a churchwarden for Bloxwich, an ecclesiastical district constituted by virtue of the Church Building Acts. The 58 Geo. 3, c. 69 (Sturges Bourne's Act), s. 1, requires notice for a vestry meeting to be published three days before holding it on the Sunday previous, during or immediately after Divine service. In this case the notice was given on the church door on the 26th March (Good Friday), and the election of churchwarden took place by custom, on Easter Tuesday. Mr. J. O. Griffiths contended that the notice was sufficient, and that Sturges Bourne's Act was applicable only to ordinary parish vestries, and not to vestries of districts for ecclesiastical purposes. Mr. Harrington argued that the above-mentioned Act did apply to such district. The court, after a careful examination of the statutes referred to, with some hesitation, came to the conclusion that the Act did not apply, and discharged the rule.

On the motion of Mr. Littler, the court granted a rule nisi, calling on the Midland Railway Company to show cause why a mandamus should not issue to compel them to "make points," a legal obligation imposed on them under certain circumstances by the 76th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act. It appeared that Mr. Thompson, of Burton-upon-Trent, had constructed a private siding running to his works, and he desired that the company should attach his rails to their own by means of points, in order that he might run his waggons over their main line. He had formally required the company to do this, but they had not complied with his notice, and hence the application.

Reg. v. Lord Newborough and others, was a case involving the validity of an order for payment of special constables, directed to, and acted upon, by the county treasurer of Carnarvonshire. The order was invalid, not having been made at a "special sessions held for the purpose," as directed by the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41, but it appeared to be good on the face of it, and the county treasurer paid the money. Under these circumstances, the court discharged a rule for a certiorari, which had been obtained last term. In delivering the judgment of the court, Mr. Justice Lush said "the order is a mere direction to the treasurer of the county, and therefore need not be in the form in which orders in the nature of convictions usually are. It is an intelligible direction to the treasurer to pay a given sum for given purposes. But I am also of opinion that it appears that the order was not made at a special session held for the purpose. I think on that ground the order was invalid, and could not be maintained if it had been appealed against before acted on. The statute requires such an order shall be made at a 'special sessions held for the purpose,' and the reason is obvious, viz., that there should be a previous notification to all the justices of the division that such special business is to be transacted, in order that they may, if they choose appear. But then the order has been acted on, it was made in February last, the money was paid almost immediately, was distributed to the constables for whose benefit the order was made, and the accounts of the treasurer were brought before the quarter sessions in the beginning of June, and allowed according to the terms of the statute. I think the treasurer was perfectly justified in obeying that order, because it did not appear on the face of it to be invalid, nor that it was not made in special session."

Craig v. Stafford. The facts of this case were as follows: A cause went to trial at the last Kingston Assizes, but the plaintiff, not being ready, withdrew the record. He had subpoenaed the defendant to give evidence. On the same cause coming on again at Westminster in last Term, the defendant was called as a witness by the plaintiff, but did not appear, and the plaintiff was consequently nonsuited. The defendant had been informed of the day of trial, but his original subpoena had never been resealed. A rule nisi having been obtained by the plaintiff to set aside the nonsuit on the ground of the absence of a material witness, Mr. Morgan Howard and Mr. Tindal Atkinson showed cause; Mr. Gill and Mr. R. F. Stone supported the rule, which the court made absolute. The costs to be paid by the plaintiff for his neglect in not resealed the subpoena.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE NEW LAW COURTS.

Mr. GLADSTONE moved the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the site and charge of the new law courts. He said the mode in which the motion had arisen was this: His right hon. friend (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) at the commencement of the session, when newly appointed to the office, had been considerably startled and even shocked at the great magnitude of the estimate, about 4,000,000l., for the erection of the new law courts on the Carey-street site, and he had made a statement in his place strongly objecting to the plan on its then scale, and taking upon himself the responsibility of arresting any further proceedings until the judgment of the House could be taken. His right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer had suggested that the erection of the new law courts on the site of the Thames Embankment would be preferable in point of economy, convenience, and beauty; but it was not unnatural that those connected with the Carey-street site should not be ready to give up their view. He believed it was impossible to press the question for decision in the present session, and he therefore proposed the appointment of a select committee for examining the question of the site and the charge of the new law courts.—Sir R. PALMER, while holding that this question ought to have been considered as closed, would not oppose the motion. He hoped the petition from the Society of Lincoln's-inn would be placed before the committee, as, by adhering to the original proposal, a saving of 100,000l. would be effected to the country.

After some further discussion the motion was agreed to.

THE CORRUPT CONSTITUENCIES.

Lord O. FITZGERALD, Comptroller of the Household, appeared at the bar, and brought up the following reply from Her Majesty to the addresses for commissioners to inquire into the evidence of corruption in several boroughs: "I have received the joint addresses of the two Houses of Parliament in reference to the reports made by the judges appointed to try petitions and complaints of undue elections and returns for the boroughs of Bridgwater, Beverley, Cashel, Sligo, and the city of Norwich, and I have given directions accordingly for the appointment of the gentlemen named in the addresses to be commissioners for the purpose of making the inquiries prayed for."

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES (DEPUTIES).

Viscount SANDON obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the law concerning the appointment of deputies by stipendiary magistrates.—The Bill was brought in and read a first time.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

The committee on the Bankruptcy Bill was finally completed at a morning sitting. The controversy as to compensations was settled by a clause brought up by the Attorney-General. It provides that the Lord Chancellor (with the consent of the Treasury) may award full salary under special circumstances to any commissioner or officer holding under good behaviour, and that in every other case the compensation shall be two-thirds. The greater part of the sitting was taken up in the discussion of new clauses proposed by various members. Progress was also made with the Imprisonment for Debt Bill up to clause 5.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL proposed to alter the Bill by abolishing the County Court Judges' power of imprisoning for fraud, but retaining it for contempt. The amendment gave rise to a long discussion, but was ultimately adopted.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES.—CONVERSION.—SPECIFIC BEQUEST OF SHARES FOR INVESTMENT IN LAND.—J. C., by his will in effect gave the sum of 2000l. to trustees upon trust to invest in real estate; and he then gave certain cottages and hereditaments to the same trustees on the same trusts as he had declared as to the estate to be purchased with the 2000l. He then gave his thirty shares in the Leeds Banking Company to the same trustees upon the same or the like trusts as were declared concerning the sum of 200l. and the cottages. The banking company failed, and the trustees had paid large sums out of the testator's estate on account of these thirty shares. A suit was instituted for the administration of the testator's estate, and the Master of the Rolls considered the trustees of the will liable for not having converted the shares: Held, that the directions for investment contained in the will could not be taken to apply equally to the 2000l. and the cottages, and must be read reddendo singula singulis. The bequest of the bank shares was specific, and the shares need not be converted unless the direction to convert was clear. The court was of opinion it was not clear. Order of the Master of the Rolls reversed: (Craven v. Craddock, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 638. L.C.)

SECURITY FOR COSTS.—ACTION BY CO-EXECUTORS.—In an action for illegal seizure and sale against a sheriff and an execution-creditor, three plaintiffs (Sykes, Shaw, and Mrs. Shaw) sued as executors. Sykes and Mrs. Shaw were executor and executrix under the will of Ellen Sykes the testator; Sykes resided in Scotland; and Shaw, who was joined in the action as a matter of form with his wife, had been recently discharged from bankruptcy, having no estate. Brett, J., at chambers, made an order upon the plaintiffs to provide security for defendant's costs: Held, upon a rule to set aside this order, that the circumstances did not justify the court in compelling the plaintiffs to give security: (Sykes v. Sykes, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 663. C.P.)

COURT OF PROBATE (IRELAND) (a).

EASTWOOD v. EASTWOOD.

Special Jury—Certificate for the costs of—Time for application.

This case which was a suit to establish the will of the late James Eastwood, was tried before the court and a special jury on May 5th, and a verdict was taken establishing the will.

The defendants were directed to pay the costs.

The court did not sit on May 6th, and on May 7th Brady, Q. C., on behalf of the plaintiff, Maria Louisa Eastwood, applied for a certificate for the costs of the special jury, under 3 & 4 Will 4, c. 91, s. 27, and cited Christie v. Richardson, 10 M. & W. 638, Chit. Archbold, 12 edit. 517; Johnson v. The West of England Insurance Company, 2 Ir. Jur. O. S. 291, overruling Waggett v. Shaw, 3 Camp. 316, upon the authority of which Skipper v. Bodkin, 2 Sw. & Tr. 1, was decided, and deciding that immediately meant within a reasonable time.

The JUDGE granted the certificate upon the authority of the cases cited.

Solicitor, Allan Nesbitt.

[The Judge subsequently stated that he would, in all cases where undue influence was pleaded, certify for the costs of a special jury.]

CHESTER TOWN COUNCIL AND THE LAWYERS.

At a recent meeting of this council there was a motion on the paper, "To consider recommendation that permission be given to the Chester Law Library Committee to use, during the pleasure of the council, for the purposes of their library, the room in the new Town Hall adjoining the Quarter Sessions Court, intended for and to be also used as the barristers' robing room, upon certain conditions which are stated in the recommendation."

The Mayor brought forward, and Alderman Williams seconded the motion, the latter remarking that the library would be a great convenience to the whole city, and especially to the Bar and solicitors.

Mr. T. Q. Roberts said there was a condition attached. What was the condition?

The Town Clerk read as follows: "That the legal officers of the corporation, the Bar, and the magistrates of the city are allowed to use the library, and that the shelving and fittings necessary for the library purposes are provided at the cost of the library committee, and that no expense be entailed upon the council in connection with the library."

Mr. Roberts thought in addition to the persons specified the members of the council should have admission to the room. They granted the Law Society this room, and he thought they ought to have that privilege.

Alderman Litter.—A little law is a dangerous thing. I think we had better keep away.

Mr. Roberts.—You really are specifying upon what conditions these gentlemen shall have their room. I am only asking a very small thing in return.

Alderman French said he thought they had gone far enough with their restrictions, and he would be very sorry to find Mr. Roberts in the Court of Chancery, in consequence of reading the law books upside down. If the council wanted law they could get it for 8s. 8d., which was not at all unreasonable. (Laughter.)

Mr. Duncan, as secretary of the Law Society, said he might say to Mr. Roberts that they would be very happy to see him at any time in the room, but he was afraid, if he got reading the books, they would do him more harm than good. The society wished to move the library into that room, and have the occupation of the room without paying rent. On the other hand, they would bring in a valuable set of books to be at the disposal of the law officers of the corporation, to whom alone he imagined they would be of any service whatever. As the library was supported by subscription, of course, if they threw open its doors to the public, they would lose all their subscriptions at once. They would be very sorry to keep the council out of the room.

Mr. Bowers agreed with Alderman French and Mr. Duncan as to the mischief that might ensue from getting into the room, but he hardly liked that the council should be debarred from entering any part of the Town Hall. He suggested the addition of the name of the sheriff for the time being to the list of those entitled to enter.

Mr. Duncan quite agreed with this suggestion.

The Mayor said they were all talking upon a subject they scarcely knew anything about. ("Oh, oh!") None of them were excluded from this room.

Alderman R. Frost said they must remember this was the barristers' robing-room, and not a public room at all. It was an apartment dedicated to the goddess of law. Their law officers and the Town Council had access to the room, and it would be altogether out of place for the public to rush into a barristers' robing-room.

Mr. Gerrard, said he took somewhat Mr. Roberts' view of the question. It was really not a laughing matter. Let them look at what they were going to do. They talked about this room being the barristers' robing-room, but how long would it take for that purpose? Only a day or two, four times in the year. On the other hand, they were handing over the apartment to the solicitors of Chester as a private room. Now he thought the butchers of Chester had just as much right as the solicitors to have a room in the Town Hall to themselves. If the solicitors wished to form a public library that was another thing. He hardly thought it was an equivalent for the use of the room that the law officers of the corporation should have free access to the books. He could not help thinking it was a very unjust thing hand over a room in a public building to a private society on any consideration whatever.

The sheriff said this was a subject which excited some discussion when it was before the committee. The views expressed by Mr. Gerrard were then brought forward by himself. In handing over the use of the room to the Law Society they were granting a special favour to a body of gentlemen. He (the sheriff) did not admire the comparison between butchers and lawyers, but if this room was to be transferred as proposed, and to save the 25*l.* a-year which they paid for the present building, the council were establishing a precedent which might be cited in favour of any organisation equally valuable and useful as the lawyers to the city. If they agreed to the present proposal he thought any application from a working-men's society should be favourably considered. He, however, held that Mr. Roberts was perfectly right in considering that the Council should reserve to themselves the liberty of entering the rooms in that hall at any time they thought proper. If the lawyers inserted a clause that they excluded the council out of mercy, that was another thing. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Duncan said Mr. Gerrard had spoken as if the society had asked to have the room almost as a private club room, and without giving any advantage for what they received. It was not by any means with that view that the society made their request. They simply asked that they might put their library there, and being there it would be open to the Bar, the sheriff, the magistrates, and members of the corporation. They had formed themselves into a private body for the purpose of supporting the library, as it was necessary, in consequence of the many changes in the law, to keep up a larger library than many solicitors could afford. If the butchers, to carry out Mr. Gerrard's comparison, had the use of that room, they would probably not give anything in return. He thought he might say that the Law Society were giving something in return in placing the library at the disposal of the law officers of the corporation, which, he believed the town clerk would say, was not a thing to be despised.

Mr. Roberts said he should move the insertion in the resolution that the body corporate be allowed to go into the room.

Mr. Powell saw nothing in the condition that excluded the corporation. It seemed to him that the council might just as well wish to have the use of the barristers' gowns as the books.

Mr. Evans seconded Mr. Roberts's amendment.

Mr. T. Hughes said the council were there, fitted or not, as the representatives of the city, and they ought to make it a sine qua non that no room in that building should be excluded from them in their capacity as representatives. With respect to the concession which it was said the Law Society were making to the law officers of the corporation, he apprehended those gentlemen were already members of the society, and, whether the books went to the Town Hall or not, they would have the right to consult them. He did hope the council generally would unite with Mr. Roberts in maintaining the right of the citizens, through their representatives, to use every room in the hall, and everything in the room.

The resolution, with Mr. Roberts's amendment, was then passed.

THE CAREY-STREET SITE.—Overtures having been made to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the purchase of the seven acres of land known as "the Carey-street site" of the new Courts of Law, the negotiations have been suspended until the Bill for the acquisition of the new ground in Howard-street has been sanctioned by Parliament. The London and North-Western Railway Company are, we believe, not indisposed to treat for the site as a great central terminus to communicate with the Metropolitan District system.—The Owl.

THE TRIAL OF OVEREND, GURNEY, AND Co.—An application is understood to have been made to Lord Chief Justice Cockburn on Tuesday, on the part of Mr. Harry George Gordon, one of the defendants in this case, which, it will be remembered, was removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, to fix an early day for the trial of the indictments, and that, all parties interested consenting, it has been appointed for Friday week. Arrangements will be made at the same time for the sitting of an extra court, so that the trials in which other suitors are concerned will not be retarded. Dr. Thom, the prosecutor, has applied to the Home-office for a direction to the Treasury and the law officers of the Crown to undertake the prosecution, but the authorities there have declined to accede to the request. During the interview with the Lord Chief Justice, at which all parties interested were represented by counsel or solicitors, Dr. Thom stated, through his attorney (Mr. Lewis), that in the event of the Home-office not acceding to his request, he (Dr. Thom) intended to conduct his case in person, he being unwilling solely to incur the enormous expense incident to the trial of so important a case, and the Lord Chief Justice is understood to have intimated that it was contrary to the practice of the court for a prosecutor to conduct his own case, and he would not allow it in this. Dr. Thom, notwithstanding, is said still to persist in what he considers his right as the prosecutor to conduct his case in person, he being bound over by the committing magistrates in the sum of 5000*l.* to prosecute and give evidence against the defendants. The trial will be held in the Court of Queen's Bench at Guildhall.

WILLS.—Lord Ponsonby, in giving judgment on a will case recently, expressed his opinion that the practice of attempting to obtain wills from dying persons is rather increasing than otherwise. Some people seemed to think (said his lordship) that as long as there was any life left a dying person could make a will; but it was not enough that they were able to say "Yes" or "No" to a question, or to recognise those about them; much more was required to constitute testamentary capacity. If any one from carelessness or disinclination let the time for making a will go by, it was not because the final hour came without his intentions having been carried into effect that another person was justified in stepping in and doing for him what he ought to have done for himself. In the case which gave rise to these remarks one Robert Bingham, of Bristol, had propounded the will of his mother, and the judge in summing up the evidence said it was not pretended that Mrs. Bingham ever gave instructions to any human being for the will, which was prepared at the mere motion of Robert Bingham, or that she knew anything about the will until the very moment when the attorney and the doctor stood by her bedside, and it was read over to her. The will was a long one, with provisions of a character to challenge the attention of a person whose mind was in full activity, and she was supposed to have understood it because she was able to say "Yes," and "Perfectly," and monosyllables of that kind. She was so far incapable of voluntary action that no attempt was even made to get her to make her mark. His Lordship added that he did not impute to Robert Bingham any intention to do wrong, and he gave him credit for believing that he was merely carrying out his mother's intentions. He must, however, pronounce against the will.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

COURT OF CHANCERY, JUNE 23.

NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

The following gentlemen having been appointed of Her Majesty's Counsel were this morning called within the Bar, and took their seats accordingly:—Mr. Arthur R. Adams (of the Common Law Bar), Mr. Fooks, Mr. Eddis, Mr. Douglas Brown (of the Common Law Bar), Mr. Bristowe, Mr. Edlin (of the Common Law Bar), Mr. T. Hughes, M.P., Mr. J. Kay (of the Common Law Bar), Mr. Montague Bore (of the Common Law Bar), Mr. Henry James, M.P. (of the Common Law Bar), Mr. Lopes (of the Common Law Bar), Mr. Osborne Morgan, M.P., Mr. Fry, and Mr. Samuel Pope (of the Common Law Bar).

BUSINESS OF THE COURT.

Lord Justice SELWYN stated, for the information of the Bar, that it is the intention of their Lordships during the next three weeks (commencing with Monday next, the 28th inst.) to sit at the Privy Council on the first four days in each week, and to sit in the Court of Chancery on the two remaining days (Friday and Saturday) in each week.

IRELAND.—The office of master of the Court of Exchequer, the salary of which is 1200*l.* a year, has become vacant by the death of Mr. J. C. Lowry, Q.C. He was highly esteemed and well qualified for the appointment which he received under the Irish administration of the Duke of Abercorn. Several gentlemen are already spoken of as his successors; among them are Mr. Pigot, Q.C., son of the Chief Baron, and Mr. Waters, Q.C., both gentlemen of professional eminence and equally popular. The former is chairman of Quarter Sessions for the West Riding of York, and his transfer to the Exchequer would add to the patronage of the Government. It has been suggested that Mr. Cathrow, who filled the office of deputy-master in the time of Mr. Lowry's predecessor, and is thoroughly conversant with the duties, should be appointed upon economical grounds. He receives at present, under arrangements made by the late Government, a full retiring pension of 800*l.* a year, which would of course be saved to the country if he were selected.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

READINGS ON NEW DECISIONS.

DYING DECLARATIONS.—ADMISSIBILITY OF.—The law relative to the admissibility of dying declarations has recently received an illustration of a very important character; and, although no new principle has been introduced, it cannot be denied that this species of evidence has been contracted within limits which bid fair to extinguish it altogether. There is no doubt that the admissibility of a dying declaration in a criminal proceeding, in which a party is charged with the death of the person who has made it, is a matter of the very gravest description; made in the absence of the accused, and not upon oath, it is a species of hearsay evidence, which in ordinary cases is excluded from reception, as being too untrustworthy to be deserving of attention. Received therefore in cases in which the life of a fellow creature may depend upon it, no safeguards can be well too stringent to ensure its truthfulness. Under the most favourable circumstances such evidence is not entitled to the same weight as testimony which the accused has had the power of testing by cross-examination. It may be, that the impressions of the party making the declaration are visionary and founded in error, which a few pertinent questions from the party criminated might satisfactorily explain. Indeed, unless cross-examination be in itself altogether an absurdity, it cannot be denied that the absence of the opportunity to cross-examine the declarant should always render the reception of such evidence a matter to be very carefully considered. It is alleged as a reason for admitting such testimony, that being made in extremity, when the party is on the point of death, and every hope of this world gone, and every motive to falsehood is silenced, the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth; and it cannot be disputed that a statement made by a party so circumstanced is more entitled to consideration than if not so made. But it cannot be forgotten that a death bed is not the place from which truth always proceeds. Unfortunately our experience informs us that whilst in the very jaws of death, human and worldly passions have often their influence. Our knowledge of humanity tells us that even upon the death bed, and upon the very threshold of eternity, people will act the hypocrite, and will avail themselves of the last and most solemn opportunity of gratifying their spirit of revenge or other malignant feelings. We doubt very much if a death bed is really any great guarantee of truth, for experience teaches that it is often the witness of much that is false, vindictive, and revengeful. Whether or not, if this species of testimony were altogether abolished, the substantial ends of justice would be defeated, may well be doubted. But one thing is clear, that it is a description of evidence which should be dealt with with the greatest caution, and should never be received in courts of justice except upon the fullest proofs of its worthiness.

The recent case of Reg. v. Jenkins, 20 L. T. Rep. 372, is one of a remarkable character. Beyond the dying declaration of the deceased, for whose murder the prisoner was charged, there was really no proof of an inculpatory nature—nothing, in fact, as the learned judge (Byles, J.) who tried the case said, to leave to the jury. The declaration in this case was the following:—

I am a single woman and have two children, one aged four years and the other aged about five months. The father of the first child, which is a boy, is Henry Jenkins. He lives in Ship-lane, Cathay, and is a ship carpenter. He has been paying me, under order of magistrates, 2s. per week for the support of the child, but he has not kept up his payments, and he now owes me 1l. 7s. Last night, the 16th inst., about half-past six o'clock, I met him by appointment in the New Cut, in the parish of Westminster, in this city, and I asked him if he was going to give me some money to buy a pair of boots for myself? He said that he hadn't any money. I told him that I must sue him for my money, and then he asked me to walk with him to the Hot Wells, and he went into a house in Cumberland-terrace. I waited for him outside, and he came out in a short time, and said he couldn't get any money, and he asked me then to walk with him up Cumberland-road, and we went along the road together until we got near Westminster-bridge, and we stood on the New Cut, near his residence, and we had a few angry words, together about the money he owed me, and he told me I could have a warrant against him if I liked. After we had stood there about ten minutes, he said, "Here's a rat climbing up the bank," and he advanced to the edge of the bank, and I went too, and looked, but could not see any rat, and directly I got to the edge of the bank, he pushed me with both hands on the back, and at the same time said, "Take that, you b——," and he pushed me direct into the river Avon, which runs along there. I screamed out, and managed, by catching hold of the bank to keep myself up until I was taken out of the water, and I believe it was by a policeman. After being so taken out, I became insensible, and did not recover till I found myself in bed in this house. Since then I have felt great pain in my chest, bosom, and back. From the shortness of my breath, I feel that I am likely to die, and I have made the above statement with the fear of death before me, and with no hope at present of my recovery. Dr. Smart has been to see me twice to-day. It was about eight o'clock on the said evening, when the said Henry Jenkins pushed me into the water. He was under the influence of liquor at the time, but was not tipsy. I had two drops of rum with him during our walk. I know of no motive for his so pushing me into the water except it was that I had asked him for money.

Upon the face of this declaration there is little which would strike an ordinary observer as objectionable. According to the woman's statement, she made it with the fear of death before her, and with no hope at the time of her recovery. It seemed, however, that in the original declaration, as taken down by the magistrates' clerk, the words "at present" were interlined, and upon being questioned by the learned judge as to how this occurred, the clerk stated that after he had taken the deposition he read it over to her, and asked her to correct any mistake that he might have made, whereupon she suggested the words "at present." She said, no hope "at present" of my recovery; and that he then interlined the words "at present." At the trial, the learned Judge admitted the declaration, subject to the opinion of the court above, and the prisoner was convicted. Upon the case being argued in the Court for Crown Cases, Reserved the court held the declaration to be inadmissible inasmuch as it did not appear that the woman had lost all hope of recovery; and the conviction was quashed. In delivering the judgment of the court, KELLY, C.B., after referring to the facts and the authorities, said: "To apply these principles to the present case, the prosecution calls on us to give no effect whatever to the important words 'at present.' The dying woman must have had some meaning when she used them. We are to see what her meaning was. On the one hand, it is possible that she may have remembered that the magistrate's clerk put the question to her, 'Have you any present hope of recovery?' and she may have intended to answer that question in form; but on the other hand she may have desired to alter or qualify her answer, and may have meant to say, not that she had absolutely no hope of recovery at present. If we had only to determine between these two constructions we should be bound to give our decision in favorem vite for the latter construction; but the case presents a mode of solution which calls on us to interpret the construction in favour of the prisoner. After the deposition had been read over to her, she was asked in express terms to correct any mistake that the clerk might have made in it. She then said, 'Put no hope at present.' Now what is that but saying there is a mistake, and she desired the clerk to put in those words? If so, that is a qualification of the words 'no hope,' and the woman was not in that hopeless state of impending death that was necessary to render her declaration admissible in evidence." Byles, J., too, as being the judge at the trial, observed, "As I tried the case, I may say that I entertained from the very first a very strong doubt whether the declaration was admissible in evidence, but there being no other evidence to convict the prisoner, I thought it my duty to admit it, and reserve the point. We should guard with jealousy the admissibility of such declarations, the admissibility of which is an exception to the ordinary rules of evidence, for they may be made without the sanction of an oath, and when the party is in no fear or danger of the penalties of perjury, and when the persons making them are very liable to the influences of misrepresentation or error. The result of the authorities seems to be that the dying person must be under the impression that his or her death is almost immediately impending. Now in the present case the conviction of the deceased amounts to this, 'That's not what I said, or what I meant—not that I had no hope, but no hope at present.' If so, the declaration was improperly admitted in evidence, and the conviction must be quashed."

Now, without for an instant questioning the soundness of these views, it may well be asked whether anything more in law or sense be required than that at the time when the declaration is made, the declarant should have no hope of recovery, and that his death should be imminent. In the present case, it was clear that the woman was speaking as of immediately approaching death, for she spoke of her breathing, which, according to the case was very bad, and she had requested the attendance of some one to pray with her. If at the time when the declaration is made the party has no hope of recovery, it would really seem that the condition necessary to let it in is fulfilled. In fact, it is difficult to understand how a thoughtful and religious person could express a sense of her danger in a more appropriate way; there is no condition of bodily ailment, short of the absolute destruction of some organ necessary to the existence of life, which absolutely shuts out the possibility of recovery. The common experience of mankind shows that recoveries occasionally take place from apparently the most hopeless maladies. For a person, therefore, in whatever condition of disease, to express a belief in the utter impossibility of recovery would be opposed to reason, and utterly inconsistent with common experience. There seems to be a confusion in mixing up a hope of recovery, and a belief in the possibility of recovery. A person may believe that he will not recover without disbelieving in the possibility of recovery. In the present instance it may well have been, that the woman having at the time she made the declaration no hope of recovery, may with that perception of possibilities which would probably enter her mind, have wished to guard against what some would consider as an impious declaration against the possible interposition of Providence in her behalf. Indeed, if the ruling in the present case is to guide all future cases, it is easy to see that in hardly any case ought these dying declarations to be received, for there can be no doubt whatever that every declarant would limit his belief to the time at which he makes his declaration; and indeed it may fairly be said, that he ought conscientiously to do so. No one even upon what he considers to be his death bed is morally justified in declaring a belief as to his impending death otherwise than from his then opinion. If a man speaks of his belief at the time, he says all that a rational and thoughtful person can be expected to say upon the point. To say that he has no hope, without that qualification which a possible, though unexpected future change in his condition may justify, would be, to say the very least of it, irrational, if not somewhat impious. It is difficult, therefore, to recognise the conclusiveness of the decision upon which we have been commenting. To have hanged a fellow-creature upon the uncorroborated testimony of a witness who gives her evidence only in the shape of a dying declaration would have violated the sense of justice and propriety of a large class of the community, and have gone far to have brought this branch of the law into disrepute; and, in this point of view at least, the decision of the court is to be rejoiced at, and perhaps, without going so far as to say that these declarations should be abolished as modes of proof, it might be suggested that they should never be acted upon unless they are justified by some corroborative evidence.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

LARCENY—RESTITUTION OF STOLEN GOODS.—The jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench to issue writs of restitution of stolen property was limited to cases where an appeal of robbery had been made, and now no longer exists. The effect of the enactment of 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, that the owner "shall be restored to the property" stolen from him, and of the similar recent enactment is merely to vest in him the right to the stolen property, leaving him to bring his action, or to pursue the remedies directed by the statute: (Reg. v. The Mayor of London, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 604. Q. B.)

CAB LAW—WHAT IS A "STREET OR PLACE"—RAILWAY STATION.—A cab was admitted to a railway station for the purpose of taking up persons who arrived by the train. A person not so arrived entered the station and claimed to hire the cab. The driver refused to take him: He was held not strictly to have incurred the penalty, as the provision of the statute referred only to cabs plying for hire in a public street or place, where the public at large have a right to be, and a railway station was not such a public street or place: (Case v. Storey, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 618. Ex.)

POOR RATES—COUNTY CONSTABULARY.—A cottage was let to the Chief Constable of a county, as yearly tenant, at 6l. 4s. per annum. That he undertook to one of the constables whom he appointed and had power to dismiss, as a weekly tenant at 2s. per week as long as he continued a constable or was removed to a distance. The constable was held to be rightly assessed as the occupier, and that there was nothing in the nature of the occupation to entitle him to exemption: (R. v. Bridgehouse, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 658.)

APPLICATION OF PENALTIES—PAYMENT TO TREASURER OF COUNTY OR BOROUGH—BOROUGH HAVING A SEPARATE COMMISSION OF THE PEACE.—The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 31, enacts that when persons are convicted by justices under statutes which contain no directions for the payment of the penalties to any person, they are to be paid to the clerk of the division for which the justices usually act, and he is to pay them over to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place for which such justices shall have acted, and a return is to be made by the clerk to the clerk of the peace for the county, borough, &c., in which the division is situate, when and as the court of quarter sessions for the same shall order. The municipal borough of Bradford has a separate commission of the peace but no court of quarter sessions. Held, that the justices of the borough acted as county justices, and therefore that penalties imposed by justices acting in and for the borough, were to be paid to the treasurer of the county and not to the treasurer of the borough. The 26th section of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, enacts that it shall be lawful for any justice before whom any penalty shall be recovered under the provisions of the Act, to award, if he shall think fit, any portion of the same not in any case exceeding one moiety thereof, to the use of the prosecutor, and the remainder to the treasurer of the county or place for which such justice shall then act. Held, that such portion of penalties imposed by justices of the borough of Bradford under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, as were not by them ordered to be paid to the prosecutor were payable to the treasurer of the county notwithstanding 24 & 25 Vict., c. 75, s. 4, the effect of that section being confined to the matter pointed at in the preamble, viz., the granting of licences. Mayor of Reigate v. Hart, L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 244; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237; and Reg. v. Dale, 22 L. J. 45, M. C. approved and followed: (Winn v. Mossman, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 672. Ex.)

LARCENY—SERVANT.—Money was given to B. by his master for the purpose of paying tolls at two turnpike gates on his journey. Twelve days afterwards, being asked if he had paid the toll, he said he had not, but had gone round by a parish road and so avoided the gate, and had spent the money in beer. The court quashed the conviction, on the ground that, as this case was stated, it did not appear whether the question of felonious intent had been left to the jury—in other words, that it was a question of intent; did B. keep it intending to steal it, or only in a bona fide belief that he might lawfully do so: (Reg. v. Deering, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 680. Cr. Cas. Res.)

CAMBRIDGE SPRING ASSIZES.

HARLOCK v. SWIFT.

Scientific evidence—Proper form of putting a question—The proper method of putting a question to a scientific witness, is to put the facts in a suppositious form, and to ask the opinion of the witness upon such an hypothesis.

This was an action of assault, the plaintiff and defendant being lads of twelve and fourteen years of age respectively, and scholars of Ely Grammar School. The two lads were engaged in a game at prisoners' base, when the plaintiff improperly attempted to release one of his companions and was kicked by the defendant, the result being very serious injuries, which on the part of the plaintiff were attributed solely to the kick, while the defendant insisted that they were attributable to natural causes, which were not to be traced to the kick. Of course, the inquiry rested solely upon the medical evidence. On the one side Mr. Muriel, a surgeon of Ely, and Mr. Sinclair, were called, and they both attributed the injury to an over-loaded colon, but against this evidence Dr. Humphrey was called to prove that the injuries described would be the natural result of a kick.

O'Malley, Q. C. (with him Merewether) proposed to ask Dr. Humphrey this question: After what you have heard of the medical evidence, what opinion have you formed?

Keane, Q. C. (Cockerell with him) objected to this.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.—That way of putting the question is certainly irregular.

O'Malley, Q. C. (to Dr. Humphrey).—Suppose a boy gets a violent kick on the centre of the fleshy part of the lower part of the body, complains of pain that night, is unwell the next day, loses his appetite, the pain continues spreading on to the stomach, the pain more on one side than the other, what is your opinion?

Keane objected to the form of the question upon two grounds. First, it was an usurpation of the functions of the jury; secondly, it was obtaining indirectly what could not be obtained directly.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.—There are only two ways of putting the question. The first, "After hearing the evidence, what is your opinion?" was undoubtedly irregular, but the second was admissible, or else how could scientific evidence be adduced?

Keane wished his Lordship to make a note of the objection.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.—Certainly.

Keane, on the part of the defendant, submitted there was no case to go to the jury. All boys by going to a public school voluntarily submitted to a certain amount of ill-usage, and made up their minds for an occurrence like the present. It was only when an injury of a wanton and a brutal character was inflicted that no such licence was given. The result of the kick was recedite, and there was nothing to show that there was an excess of the licence of the playground.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.—It is for the jury to say that; I cannot withdraw the case.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE having summed up, the result was a verdict for the plaintiff.

Damages one farthing.

DISS PETTY SESSIONS.

(Before G. E. FREER, Esq. (Chairman), and Dr. CURTEIS.)

Affiliation case.

This case was brought by Bertha Blomfield, daughter of Mr. Samuel Blomfield, farmer, of Dickleburgh, against Habakkuk Bartram, threshing machine proprietor, of the same place.

Stanley, of Norwich, appeared on behalf of the complainant, and Woolnough Gross for the defence.

Considerable interest was called forth by the case, owing to the number of witnesses called, and the respectable position occupied by the persons connected with it.

Upon the case being called, Gross said he had not his certificate with him, as had been requested by the bench, on account of his London agents not having sent it, but if the case were adjourned he would take steps to meet the wishes of the magistrates.

Dr. CURTEIS thought such a course was unnecessary as a solicitor was well known.

Mr. FREER then said he should require the certificates to be produced before he would allow the case to be heard, and asked Mr. Stanley if he had brought his.

Stanley said that he had not troubled himself to bring his certificates to Diss, nor should he produce them to Mr. Frere, except as a matter of courtesy; and even in that case he should require Mr. Frere to produce his commission as a magistrate, whereby he might know that Mr. Frere had even the right to question his (Mr. Stanley's) claim to be heard.

Mr. FREER, who with difficulty restrained his feelings, signified that the case was adjourned, whereupon Dr. Curteis, addressing himself to Mr. Stanley, observed that he was no party to this request being made, and said to the chairman that he disagreed with the making of such a request, as Mr. Stanley was well known as a duly qualified practitioner, having acted in the defence of Sheward, in the late trial for murder at Norwich, and being well known to Mr. J. Muskett, clerk to the Bench.

Stanley again assured Mr. Frere that he should not produce his certificates except on the above-named condition that Mr. Frere should also produce his commission, in the mean time he (Mr. Frere) was at perfect liberty to procure a Law List to satisfy himself upon the point.

Mr. FREER, who evidenced considerable excitement, ordered the court to be cleared.

Stanley, however, continued to address the Bench, to which Mr. Frere made no reply, except repeating the order to clear the court.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE AT CORK.—At a special meeting of the town council on Friday, Mr. D. A. Nagle moved that the corporation petition the Crown to appoint two paid barristers to discharge the business of the Petty Sessions Courts at Cork, Queenstown, and Passage, superseding the unpaid magistracy. In support of the proposition Mr. Nagle urged the importance of the business transacted in these courts, especially at Queenstown, the unfitness of unskilled magistrates to adjudicate in cases often involving legal questions, and the unsatisfactory character of the present administration of justice. He estimated the expense involved in the change at 1300*l.* a year, of which the revenue of the courts would furnish 400*l.* Mr. D. O'Sullivan seconded the motion. Mr. Collins opposed the motion, on the ground that justice was fairly administered in the petty sessions courts at present, and that the effect of the change would be to supersede an independent magistracy by two "Castle hacks." After a warm debate the motion was rejected by 14 votes to 12.

CRIMINAL LAW.—There was a discussion a short time ago in the House of Commons respecting a very useful little office, although little known to the general public, called the Examiner of Criminal Law Accounts Office, but, like many other discussions in that House, it took the form of words and nothing more. The business of this office is to examine the accounts of the clerks of the peace for the counties and boroughs in England and Wales, the accounts for the maintenance of prisoners other than those sentenced to penal servitude, and the sheriff's accounts. The establishment consists of two examiners at 1000*l.* a year each, and a staff of seven clerks, the maximum salary of the latter being 450*l.* On the superannuation of the late chief clerk, who enjoyed a special salary of 500*l.* a year, we believe no promotion took place, and the vacancy was not filled up. When opportunity offers it would seem to be worth consideration whether it would not be possible to reduce the number of examiners to one, to appropriate part of the saving thus effected for the benefit of the taxpayer, and the other part, if it is not particularly wanted, to the benefit of the clerks who, unless we are misinformed, do most of the work, and would probably do it none the worse if some day they were allowed the chance of a little promotion.—Fall Mall Gazette.

COUNTY FINANCIAL BOARDS.—A special meeting of Middlesex magistrates was held on Thursday at the Sessions House, Mr. Kemshead in the chair, to receive the Parliamentary committee's report in reference to the County Administration Bill. The report was a lengthy one, and considered the Bill in question open to grave objections. What the committee specially recommended was to obtain an alteration of sect. 3, so as to reduce the number of elective members; to extend the reservation made by sect. 9 in favour of the justices, so as to comprise asylums, reformatories, and industrial schools, including the appointment of officers to the same; to secure the rights and interests of present officers; to procure the reservation of property and control over the sessions houses and their effects. The report was received, and a deputation quitted the court to wait upon the Home Secretary. On their return, and the court being reconstituted, Mr. Turner, chairman of the Parliamentary committee, stated what had taken place at the interview. As regarded their first objection to the principle of the Bill, Mr. Bruce said that he could not entertain it, inasmuch as the House had passed it, but he was open to suggestions as to details. Mr. Bruce promised to give his best attention to their objections as to the appointment of additional visiting justices, payment of officers, and the reservation to the committee of visitors of complete control over the lunatic asylums, industrial schools, and sessions houses. Mr. Turner concluded by moving that the report be adopted. Mr. Serjeant Cox seconded the motion; Mr. Lewen supported. Mr. Kemshad was of opinion that the proposed amalgamation of county and parochial bodies would lead to increased expenditure. The Chairman adverted to the empty state of the court as an index of the amount of interest the ratepayers of Middlesex took in the question, and referred to a similar Bill in 1853, which was withdrawn. The motion was put and carried. Some conversation afterwards took place in reference to the Bill in Parliament respecting the appointment, &c., of coroners, and the large number of inquests held, and the great expense incurred thereby was censured.

CONTRACTS WITH BOARDS OF GUARDIANS.—There is an Act of Parliament which should be carefully studied by all who have money dealings with boards of guardians in unions and parishes, and boards of management in school districts. We allude to the Act 22 & 23 Vict., c. 49. It is a curious specimen of legislation, which will well repay perusal, as ignorance of its provisions may cause considerable inconvenience and loss to those who put their trust in boards. This Act confers on the boards in question a privilege which other people would be very glad to possess, consisting of a non-liability for debts and claims after a period of twelve months from the date of such debts or claims, unless legal proceedings are commenced and prosecuted with diligence within the time mentioned. What makes this so amusing is that the world in general is not aware of the existence of this privilege. Most people think that boards of guardians are liable for their debts like everybody else, whereas claimants and creditors who trust in their honour may find themselves at the end of a year without any legal remedy, and with the consolation of knowing that their remonstrances only excite the merriment of their debtors. Perhaps some one will be kind enough to ask the President of the Poor Law Board how many complaints have been made to his office by persons who have been victimised by the working of this eccentric Act. If on inquiry it is found to have worked well, there would appear to be no good reason why its provisions should not be extended to the community at large; until they were generally known they would enable one half of the world to relieve itself from difficulty at the expense of the other half, a readjustment of our burdens which is loudly called for in many quarters.—Pall Mall Gazette.

LOCAL TAXATION.—The annual returns relating to local taxation were recently issued. They form a bulky volume of over 600 pages. The total amount of property assessed in England and Wales in 1868 was, upon gross estimated rental, 118,334,081*l.*; and upon rateable value, 100,612,734*l.* The total amount of the local taxation borne by the country in this year (1868) was 16,680,459*l.* This amount was made up as follows:—Amount levied for poor-rate, 11,061,502*l.* This total not only includes the sum levied for the relief of the poor, but the contribution paid out of the poor-rate to the county, hundred, borough, and police rates, to highway and burial boards, to commissioners of baths and washhouses and fire brigade, registration and vaccination fees, and all other expenses paid out of the poor-rate. Amount levied for the following separate rates, which in some cases are not paid out of poor-rate—viz., county rate, hundred rate, borough rate, and police rate, 307,232*l.*; highway rate, separately levied, 916,779*l.*; church rates, 217,063*l.*; lighting and watching rate, 76,978*l.*; improvement commissioners, 445,431*l.*; general district rates under Public Health Acts, 1,736,247*l.*; rates under Courts of Commissioners of Sewers, including drainage and embankment rates, 695,810*l.*; rates of other kinds, 1,203,397*l.* This total includes a sum of 981,140*l.* for general and lighting rates levied in the metropolitan district.

CRIMINAL TREATMENT.—MEETING OF THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.—On Thursday week a meeting of the Howard Association (for the promotion of the most effectual methods of penal treatment and crime prevention) was held in the City, Sir John Bowring, F.R.S., in the chair. Interesting statements in relation to the progress of the objects of the association were made by the chairman and committee and the secretary, Mr. William Tallack. Much valuable information, in the form of reports from magistrates, prison governors, and other home and foreign correspondents of the association, was also laid before the meeting. Two petitions to Parliament and a memorial to the Home Secretary were adopted and signed by the Chairman on behalf of the association. These documents embodied the substance of the following resolutions, which were discussed, and unanimously agreed to, viz.—“1. This meeting views with much interest the progress towards a system of reformatory remunerative industry now being made by the directors of convict prisons and by the authorities of the prisons of Wakefield (West Riding of York), Manchester (New Bailey), Bedford, Holloway, Coldbath Fields, York Castle, Leeds, Durham, Liverpool (Borough), Birmingham, Bristol, Belfast, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Knutsford, Petworth, and other places in the United Kingdom. This meeting is, however, of opinion that comparatively small results will be attained by the best of these or similar efforts until some of the recommendations and restrictions contained in the report of the House of Lords' Committee in 1863, in favour of non-remunerative and practically useless labour, subsequently carried into operation by Sir George Grey's Prison Act of 1865, are abandoned, or modified by the greatly increased adoption of a system of reformatory industry in gaols, including, as a prominent feature, the training of prisoners to obtain an honest living on discharge, as is so successfully effected in the prisons of some foreign countries. (The conclusions of the Lords' Committee as to industrial occupation were admitted by them to be opposed to the recommendations of the two prison inspectors and of the governors of some of the largest and best managed gaols in the kingdom.) 2. This meeting believes that very satisfactory results would follow the adoption (first as an experiment and then as a rule) of a system of labour sentences, for certain classes of offenders, involving their confinement or restraint until they have, by the result of their labour, made total or partial restitution for their offences, or have at least defrayed the cost of their detention, either wholly or in good degree, according to their ability. 3. This meeting cordially approves of the suggestion recently made by Lord Chief Justice Erle, that it would be advantageous to criminal discipline if the visiting justices of the local gaols were to make arrangements for occasional or periodic conferences of the governors of those establishments. 4. This association has observed with regret that only one of the recommendations of the late royal commission on capital punishment has been carried into effect, viz., the conducting of executions within the walls of prisons, a point on which the commissioners were by no means unanimous. This association, therefore, concludes to memorialise Parliament that, in case the Bill for the abolition of the death penalty be not passed, the Legislature may adopt the conclusions which received the unanimous assent of the said commissioners, that murders should be classified under two divisions, according to the degree of premeditation or provocation; that only the worst class should be capitally punished; and that it should be left to the jury in each case to determine the degree of the crime. Further, the commissioners were united in advising that a Government inquiry should be instituted into the vexed question of criminal lunacy, and that the laws relative to infanticide should be modified.”

CRIMINAL STATISTICS OF IRELAND.—The returns for the year 1867 show a slight decrease in the effective strength of the Royal Irish constabulary. In 1866, the number was 11,906, while in 1867 it had diminished to 11,873, showing a decrease of 33 men. In the Dublin metropolitan police there was a decrease of 20; the local force, however, is the same (382) as it was in 1866, bringing up the total force in 1867 to 13,302. Compared with the population, the police are as 1 to even 418, while the proportion in England was 1 to 890. The cost of the force has increased to 122,381*l.*, or more than 15 per cent. In 1866, the average cost per man was 55*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, in 1867, it was 62*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*; in England, it was 79*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* The total cost of the police and constabulary in Ireland in 1867 was 902,298*l.*, of which the public revenue contributed 823,997*l.* The number of criminal classes at large in Ireland was 10,361, or 243 in excess of the number in 1866. Vagrants and tramps would appear to be on the increase; in 1866 they numbered 11,578, but in 1867 the number was 12,626. Although the number of police in Ireland is so much greater, in proportion to population than in England, yet the number of criminal classes at large and known to the police is less than one-half of the number in England, being 10,361, as compared with 21,151 in an equal portion of population. The proportions for vagrants and tramps under 16 years of age, however, are reversed. It is to be hoped that the effect of the Act 31 Vict. c. 25, authorising industrial schools in Ireland, will be to diminish this number of juvenile delinquents. In Dublin the criminal classes are in the proportion of 1 in 108 of the population; in London the proportion is 1 in 222. In addition to those at large, who numbered 22,987 in Ireland in 1867, there were in local prisons 2460; in convict prisons, 1335; and in reformatories, 642—bringing up the grand total of criminal classes to 27,424 or 26 per cent less, in proportion to population, than the number in England. The number of persons apprehended for 9260 indictable offences committed in 1867, and not disposed of summarily, in Ireland was 6591. In 1866 the number of indictable offences was 9082, showing an increase of 178 in 1867. The proportion of apprehensions to the number of crimes committed was 71·2 per cent. In England a greater proportion of offenders go unpunished, the proportion being 50·6 per cent. These results appear to indicate greater vigilance on the part of the Irish police than is displayed by the police in England. The number of offences reported comprises 64 murders and 107 attempts to murder; and under this class of offences against the person there is a decrease of 24, the numbers being 1330 in 1866 and 1306 in 1867. One noticeable feature in the returns is, that as regards the offences of attempts to murder, shooting at, wounding, stabbing, &c., to do bodily harm, and manslaughter, the Irish statistics are more favourable than the English. Besides those apprehended and committed for indictable offences in Ireland in 1867, 215,698 persons were summarily convicted, and a further number of 43,908 were discharged, the total being 259,601, or 22,254 more than in 1866. The returns show that while there was less of theft and of crimes indicating a low moral tone, such as aggravated assaults on women and children, in Ireland there was, on the other hand, a greater prevalence of malicious offences than in England. Under the indictable offences an interesting statement appears showing the offences in 1866 and 1867 that were of a treasonable or seditious character, from which it appears that there was an increase of 70 cases of the more serious forms of treason in 1867. This is the chief unfavourable feature of the returns. The entire number of treasonable and seditious offences amounted to 836 in 1867, and 813 in 1866. In the case of offences determined summarily, the convictions (83 per cent.) were higher than the proportion in England—70 per cent. The penalties imposed upon those committed in Ireland in 1867 show that 156 were sent to reformatory schools; and 17,958 were imprisoned for periods varying from 14 days and under to six months. Out of the number convicted 173,635 were fined, 6 were whipped, 4765 had to find sureties or recognisance, and 362 were delivered to the army or navy. The returns indicate that punishments of a trifling character bear a higher proportion in Ireland to total punishments than in England, while the proportional number of serious punishments is much less in Ireland. It is worthy of remark that out of a total of 266,262 persons proceeded against in Ireland in 1867, no less than 185,601 are returned as of previous good character, and 46,166 as of character unknown, proving that only 34,515 of the whole number consisted of known thieves, or otherwise of bad characters. The coroners' returns for the year 1867 exhibit the result of 3983 inquests. In these the verdict was murder in 75 cases, manslaughter in 37, suicide in 84, and accidental death in 968. While the coroners return 76 verdicts of wilful murder, the police report only 64, a discrepancy which has been accounted for by the assumption that in cases of supposed infanticide, when a verdict of murder is returned, the result at the trial is a verdict of concealment of birth. Of the 75 verdicts of murder 45 were of children under one year of age. Of the 471 infants under seven years of age upon whom inquests were held, 294 were legitimate and 177 were illegitimate, which would lead to the erroneous conclusion that illegitimate children are not usually the subjects of infanticide; but upon analysing the returns still further it is found that of 260 children upon whom inquests were held in Ireland in 1867, under one year of age, no less than 166, or 64 per cent., were illegitimate. The cost of coroners' inquests in Ireland in 1867 was 7046*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, averaging 2*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* per inquest, while in England it was 3*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* Allowing for reduction of population in Ireland the diminution of serious crime in ten years (1858-67) is from 107 to 82 per 100,000 of population; and among the favourable features of the Irish statistics for 1867 may be mentioned the diminution in the number of commitments for drunkenness from 9772 in 1866 to 7524 in 1867.

BREAKFAST—EPPE'S COCOA—GRATEFUL AND CONFORING.—The very agreeable character of this preparation has rendered it a general favourite. The Oswestry Service Gazette remarks:—“The singular success which Mr. Eppe attained by his homoeopathic preparation of cocoa has never been surpassed by any experimenter. By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Eppe has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills.” Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold by the Trade only in 1*lb.* 1*lb.*, and 1*lb.* tin-lined packets, labelled “JAMES EPPE and Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London.”

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CONVEYANCE IN FEE WITH A COVENANT FOR EXCLUSIVE RIGHT TO SELL BEER.—The plaintiff, a brewer, conveyed land in fee to the trustees of a building society, who covenanted that the plaintiff, his heirs, and assigns, should have the exclusive right of supplying all ale, beer, and porter which might be consumed in every house or other building which might be erected on the land, and which might be opened or used as an inn, public-house, or beershop. The defendant, who was also a brewer, purchased the land of the trustees with notice of the covenant, and afterwards built and opened a public-house, which he supplied with ale of his own brewing. The plaintiff thereupon filed a bill against the defendant to enforce his covenant. To this bill the defendant demurred for want of equity, on the ground that the covenant was bad, as being uncertain in its terms, as containing no mutuality between the plaintiff and defendant, and as acting as a restraint on trade: Held, that the covenant was good, and that the demurrer must be overruled, with costs: (Catt v. Tourle, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 551. V. C. S.)

RIGHT TO SUPPORT—LAND LYING ON SUBTERRANEAN WATER—RIGHT OF ADJACENT LAND-OWNER TO DRAIN.—B. having land near a populous town, granted a portion of it to C. in fee, reserving a rentcharge, and taking a covenant from C. to build cottages upon it to secure the rent. Afterwards he granted the rest of it to another person, who built a church on it. The ground in question lay at a lower level than the surrounding land, and large quantities of rubbish had been thrown upon it. The water draining to this piece of ground had, with the rubbish, created a spongy, artificial soil. C. had not drained his portion, but only levelled it previous to building the cottages. D., a contractor for building the church, had, to secure a foundation, drained the land, the effect of which was to take the water away from C.'s land, which consequently subsided, and the cottages were cracked and injured. In an action by C. for the damages thus done, it was held upon appeal, first, that there was no general principle of law that prevented the adjacent owner from draining and improving his land, though the effect was to drain his neighbour's land, and so to cause his surface to subside; secondly, that it must have been contemplated that the adjacent land would be used for building purposes, and therefore there was no implied undertaking not to put the land to such purposes, and not to take the usual steps for making it fit for them, and that the action was not maintainable: (Poppell v. Hodgkinson, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 578 Ex. Ch.)

MORTGAGE—TRANSFER WITHOUT NOTICE—PAYMENT BY MORTGAGOR TO A SOLICITOR NOT AUTHORISED BY THE MORTGAGEE.—B. and C., mortgagees, transferred their mortgage to D., without giving notice to the mortgagor, who, intending to redeem, paid the amount of the mortgage to the solicitors of B. and C., without ascertaining that they were authorised to receive it. The solicitors misappropriated the money. B. and C. executed a deed prepared by their solicitors, but without perusing it or knowing its contents, which contained a recital acknowledging receipt of the money, and which purported to convey the property, by direction of the mortgagors, to their nominees. No proper receipt was indorsed on the deed. The transferee of the mortgage was held to be entitled to a decree of foreclosure against the mortgagors: (Withington v. Tate, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 637. L. C.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION.—B. by will gave certain legacies to certain persons, whom he described as his nephews and nieces. Of the persons so described only one was his nephew and one his niece, and the others were his wife's nephews and nieces. At the date of his will he had no brother and only one sister, who was so old that it was impossible he should have any more nephews or nieces. He directed his trustees to divide his residuary estate between all his nephews and nieces: Those of his wife were held to be entitled to share: (Adney v. Greatrex, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 647. M. R.)

B. gave real and personal property to trustees upon trusts to pay one moiety thereof to his daughter B. for life, and the other moiety to his daughter C. for life, and after the death of "either," in trust for all the children of "each"

who should be living at her decease, when and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-eight years: It was held that on the death of C. her children took her share to the executor of the children of B., and that the gift to the children was not void on the ground of remoteness: (England v. England, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 648. V. C. S.)

WILL—GIFT TO B., HIS "HEIRS OR REPRESENTATIVES."—B. gave sixteen houses on trust as to the overplus arising from sale thereof, after payment of certain legacies, for C. and D. as tenants in common, and their respective "heirs or representatives;" and five other houses in trust for D., her heirs and assigns for ever, free from the control of any husband, her receipt alone to be a full and effectual discharge. Should she die without children, then over. C. died in the lifetime of the testator. D. survived him but died intestate, leaving a husband and child. It was held that the words "or representatives" being introduced in substitution for heirs and not in substitution for the legatee named, C.'s share lapsed, and that D.'s husband was entitled to a life-interest in his deceased wife's estate as tenant by the curtesy: (Appleton v. Rowley, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 600. V. C. M.)

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—UNAUTHORISED PAYMENT OF DIVIDENDS—REPAYMENT BY OFFICER OF THE COMPANY.—The express object of the 101st and 165th clauses of the Companies Act 1862 is to preclude the necessity of a double process, or double set of proceedings, in all cases where either a contributory holds any moneys due from him to the company, or a director or other officer has retained, or become liable or accountable for, any of the moneys of the company, and to enable the court to compel the repayment of such moneys; and where upon notice of motion, and upon affidavits and examination of witnesses, the objects of the sections can be attained, a bill is wholly unnecessary and improper. A dividend wholly delusive, paid in violation of the general Act and of the company's constitution, amounting, in point of fact, to a return to the shareholders of a large portion of the subscribed capital, is clearly a sum of money which would be due from the contributories receiving it, or for which any officer so receiving money would be accountable, and the court has jurisdiction, therefore, under the Act and without bill filed, to order the person receiving to refund it. But in order to induce the court to compel the refunding of a dividend, it is not sufficient that the dividend should have been declared and paid on the strength of a balance-sheet, which took credit for large items in respect of a debt due to the company, and of property belonging to the company, which were exposed to the greatest risk, and were never in fact realised, even although the company's constitution provided that it should not pay dividends except out of profits, and that it should pay dividends when the profits "in hand" were sufficient to pay 5 per cent., and the company, to enable them to pay the dividend declared, were obliged to borrow from the bankers the necessary funds. Held, also, by Malins, V.C., that the 12th section of the Companies Act 1862 applies only to an express and formal diminution of capital, and not to such a diminution as may be taken to be effected by the payment of an unwarranted dividend: (Stringer's case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 591. L.J.J.)

LIABILITIES OF RAILWAYS—NEGLIGENCE—INJURY TO PERSONS USING THE COMPANY'S PREMISES.—The plaintiff had ordered some coals to be sent to a certain station on the defendants' railway. It appeared that the ordinary way of unloading coals at the station was by "tipping" the contents of the trucks through cells or spaces between the rails into the consignee's carts upon a roadway beneath the siding. It was the habitual practice for the consignees or their servants to assist in tipping the trucks, and for this purpose they were accustomed to go on to a flagged way alongside the siding. The plaintiff, upon learning that his coals had arrived, went to the station and saw the station master, who told him that all the cells being occupied, he could not immediately have his coals; he then said that, being in a hurry for coals, he would go and get on the waggon and take a portion for immediate use. The station master neither gave him permission to do so nor prohibited him. He accordingly went on to the flagged way, and was stepping down from the waggon after getting his coals, when some of the flags being in a defective condition gave way, and he was thrown down into the cell, and sustained severe injuries, in respect of which he brought his action against the company for negligence: Held (Bramwell, B. hesitating), that a duty arose upon the part of the company towards the plaintiff to take care that the flagway was in a secure condition, the plaintiff being more than a mere licensee, and that the action was therefore maintainable. Per Bramwell, B.—The continued acquiescence of the company in a practice which was for their benefit as well as that of their customers, amounted to an invitation to the plaintiff as one of their customers, to make use of the flagway for the purpose of assisting in unloading his coals, and such invitation could not, under the circumstances, be taken to be restricted to the purpose of unloading by "tipping" only: (Holmes v. The North-Eastern Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 616. Ex.)

POWER OF COMPANY TO ACCEPT BILLS—DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY TO CHAIRMAN—ULTRA VIRES.—Where the memorandum and articles of association of a company empowered the company to accept and indorse bills, and provided that no persons except the directors or some person expressly thereunto authorised by the board should have power so to do, but gave to the directors power at all times, in the name and behalf of the company, to accept and indorse bills, and bills were so accepted by the chairman acting under a resolution confirmed and adopted by the full board, a person contracting bona fide with the directors is not bound to see that all the preliminaries contemplated have been observed; and still less is it incumbent on the innocent holder of bills of the company to make such inquiries. Per Giffard L.J.: If the directors met together and knew that the chairman had accepted a bill, the company would be bound without formal resolution, and whatever might be the necessary quorum; and the result would be the same if the directors treated such a bill as valid, although the fact of its having been made was not known to them till after it was made. The memorandum and articles of the above-named company contained the provisions mentioned. L. and the directors agreed that the company should accept bills to a very large amount for L., who was in return to execute to them a mortgage of his interest in a railway company, and to deposit securities to a specified value. The matter was referred to a sub-committee to arrange the mode of carrying out this agreement, and the sub-committee at various meetings matured the plan, and directed the chairman to accept the bills in exchange for the securities named. These proceedings were all approved by the board, and the chairman accepted the bills, although L. deposited only a portion of the promised securities. Those which he did deposit were then, however, in the hands of O. G. and Co. to secure advances by them to L., and they consented to relinquish them only on the promise of L. to give them in exchange some of the acceptances of the company. Thus O. G. and Co. became the holders of the bills to a large amount. The bills were entered in the books as bills on which the company was liable; they were dealt with by the board in various ways; some were paid, some were renewed; and when L. became bankrupt, and the company was ordered to be wound-up, O. G. and Co. were the holders of the bulk of them: Held, that their claim to prove against the estate of the company for the amount of the bills was valid, and must be admitted in the winding-up; for the acceptances were within the scope of the company and within the powers of the directors, and it was quite immaterial whether the transaction was assented to by them with or without knowledge of the amount of the securities deposited; the authorised agents of the company representing to the public that everything had been rightly done. When at the original hearing witnesses for the one party had been tendered for cross-examination, and the offer was refused, an original motion to cross-examine them at the hearing before the Court of Appeal was refused with costs: (Re The Land Credit Company of Ireland, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641. L.J.J.)

WINDING-UP—PRACTICE—SOLICITOR.—Where an order was made discharging the solicitor to the liquidator who had conducted the proceedings till then, he was held to have no lien for his unpaid costs beyond the documents in his possession relating to the winding-up: (Re Union Cement Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 649. V.C.S.)

BILL BY COMPANY AGAINST DIRECTORS—BREACH OF TRUST.—A bill was filed on behalf of Overend, Gurney, and Co., a limited company in course of being wound-up, against its directors, seeking to render them liable for neglect of duty and breach of trust in having carried out the powers given them by the company in purchasing the business of the old firm of Overend, Gurney, and Co. when they knew that that firm was insolvent, and also for having neglected to obtain a sufficient guarantee by that firm, or a mortgage of the private estates of the partners, to secure or make good the difference between what they knew to be the actual and the nominal value of the assets of the old firm. Demurrer on the ground that it was incompetent for a company to sue its own directors for breach of trust; that the proper remedy was by action at law for damages; and that, if the Court of Chancery could give any relief, it was under the machinery of the Companies Act 1862. overruled: (Overend and Co. v. Gurney and others, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 652. V.C.M.)

LIFE ASSURANCE—INSURING THE LIFE OF ANOTHER.—Sect. 2 of 14 Geo. 3, c. 48, enacts "that it shall not be lawful to make any policy on the life of any person without inserting in such policy the person's name interested therein, or for whose use or benefit, or on whose account such policy is so made." B. married a minor, who was entitled to a legacy on coming of age. The trustees proposed to advance the money on C. becoming surety, which he agreed to do if B. would insure his wife's life. This was done by the wife's insuring her own life in her own name, the policy containing no reference to its being entered into for the benefit of B. The policy was held to be void under the above section: (Evans v. Bignold, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 659. Q.B.)

LIABILITIES OF RAILWAYS—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE.—B. was employed as a builder to repair a station. C., a servant of the company, in the course of his employment at night, closed some gates between the station and a warehouse of the company, and in so doing was struck by a heavy plank, and much injured. B.'s servants were working at the wall some time before, and it was suggested that they had placed a plank across the gates for a scaffolding, and left it there. There was no evidence that B. or his servants knew that the gates were usually shut at night. This evidence was held to raise no presumption of negligence by B.: (Pearson v. Plucknett, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 662. C.P.)

MARITIME LAW

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

INSURANCE—CONCEALMENT—PORT OR PORTS—PORT UNKNOWN TO THE UNDERWRITERS.—Plaintiffs effected a policy of insurance with the defendant on a vessel "at and from Buenos Ayres, and port or ports of loading in the province of Buenos Ayres to port or ports of discharge in the United Kingdom," knowing at the time that the vessel was to go from Buenos Ayres to Laguna de los Padres, a port in that province, but not communicating that fact to the defendant. Laguna de los Padres was, at the time the policy was made, a port unknown to underwriters as a place of loading, and underwriters knowing that a vessel was to load there, would require a higher premium than that charged for the insurance effected with the defendant. It had no artificial port or mole, but only a wooden jetty or pier, and a slaughter-house; vessels have to anchor about a quarter of a mile from the shore, in the roadstead (which is protected by natural headlands on either side, which form a kind of bay), and to load and unload by means of lighters and small craft plying between the vessels and the jetty. There is a regular trade between it and Buenos Ayres, but not between it and Europe, and by the custom laws of the country vessels sailing outwards from Laguna de los Padres are compelled to return to Buenos Ayres to clear. The vessel sailed from Buenos Ayres to Laguna de los Padres; but, being unable to get a complete cargo there, proceeded to return to Buenos Ayres, for that purpose, and was lost before reaching that place.

In an action against the underwriter on the policy of insurance: Held, (1) that Laguna de los Padres was a port of loading within the meaning of the policy; (2) that the vessel's attempted return to Buenos Ayres for the purpose of completing her cargo was not a deviation; and (3) that the concealment from the underwriter of the intention that the vessel should go to Laguna de los Padres was not such a concealment as vitiated the policy: (Harrower v. Hutchison, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 556. Q.B.)

INSURANCE—CONCEALMENT—MATERIAL FACT—POLICY SIGNED UNDER PROTEST.—Defendant, an underwriter, signed a "slip" effecting an insurance on the freight of a certain ship; at the time of his so signing the plaintiff knew of, but did not communicate to the defendant, a fact which the court held to be a material fact, which plaintiff was bound to communicate. The defendant subsequently, at a time when he was fully acquainted with this fact, signed a policy in conformity with the terms of the "slip" but also at the same time wrote a letter of protest to plaintiff's brokers, declaring that he would resist any claim made under the policy: Held, in an action on the policy, that it was vitiated by the concealment, and the action was not maintainable: (Nicholson v. Power, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 580. Ex. Ch.)

COLLISION—NEGLIGENCE—COMPULSORY PILOTAGE—LIMIT OF PORT OF LONDON.—The plaintiff's ship, the Stork, was run into by the defendants' ship, the Thames, between Gravesend and Yantlet Creek. The defendants' ship was coming up the river under the charge of a licensed pilot, by whose default the collision occurred. She belonged to the Port of London, and if the port extends to Yantlet Creek, she was within her port; if only to Gravesend she was not. The 388th section of the Merchant Shipping Act exempts the shipowner from liability for damage occasioned by default of a licensed pilot within any district, where the employment of such pilot is compulsory by law. The London pilotage district extends from Dungeness to London-bridge, but no pilot can be licensed to conduct ships both above and below Gravesend. The pilotage rate is a rate from Dungeness to Gravesend, and not to any other intermediate place. By the 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59, a ship is exempted from compulsory pilotage while within the limits of the port or place to which she belongs. It was found as a fact by an arbitrator, to whom it was referred to state a case in an action between the plaintiffs and defendants for the damage occasioned by the collision, that for pilotage purposes Gravesend was the limit of the Port of London. Held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, that the action was not maintainable, first, on the ground that the question, what the limits of the port were for pilotage purposes, was a question of fact, and that the finding of the arbitrator was right; and, secondly, on the ground that even if the ship were at the time of the collision within her port, the pilot having been compulsorily taken at Dungeness, the relation of master and servant did not arise between him and the defendants, and the defendants were entitled to the exemption given by the 388th section: (The British Colonial Steam Navigation Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 581. Ex. Ch.)

DAMAGE—ARREST—LIEN FOR FREIGHT.—Where all the cargo at the time of a collision belonged to the same owner, but part had been removed when the vessel was arrested in a damage suit, the lien for freight was held to extend to every part of the cargo on board at the time of the collision: (The Roscliff, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 586. Adm. Ct.)

DAMAGE—LIGHTS.—Where a vessel has her anchor down, but is in motion, and not controlled by her anchor, she is under way within the meaning of the Admiralty regulations, and therefore bound to exhibit her coloured lights: (The Esk, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 587. Adm. Ct.)

SEAMAN'S WAGES—SHIP'S ARTICLES—LEAVING BEFORE END OF VOYAGE.—Plaintiff shipped as mate on board defendant's ship under the articles for a foreign-going ship sanctioned by the Board of Trade, May 1855, in pursuance of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104; he left the ship before the end of the voyage, and after it was over sued the owner for wages earned during the time he remained in the ship. The cause and manner of his leaving were disputed; the jury, however, found "that there was no desertion, but the plaintiff was guilty of drunkenness and abusive language, subversive of discipline, and that he was left behind at Sulina through his own negligence." Held (per Byles and M. Smith, J.J.), that by the form of these articles, and by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, the plaintiff was entitled to bring this action, and that the facts as found by the jury were not sufficient to create a forfeiture of wages. Contra, Brett, J., who considered that the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 was incorporated in the articles, that the services of the seamen throughout the voyage were a condition precedent to the recovery of wages, and that, except by the special provisions of the Act, no wages could be recovered unless for the whole voyage: (Batton v. Thompson, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 568. C.P.)

COLLISION—COMPULSORY PILOT.—The B. T. arrived in the Mersey on the 22nd Oct., took a pilot on board, and under his direction was properly anchored in a safe berth. On the 27th the W. A., under the charge of a pilot, anchored improperly about a ship's length from the B. T., and gave her a foul berth. Between the 27th and the 29th, the vessels swung together several tides, but a collision was avoided. During this time the W. A. was warned by the pilot and by the captain of the B. T., that unless she shifted her position there would be a collision. A collision took place on the night of the 29th. A cause of damage having been instituted by the owners of the B. T. against the W. A.: Held, that the W. A. having been alone to blame for the collision, and having been moored by the pilot for so long a time as caused him to be "functus officio," so far as his compulsory employment was concerned, she was not relieved from her liability by having been at the time of the collision under the charge of a pilot: (The Woburn Abbey, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 621. Adm. Ct.)

SHIP—DAMAGE—PRACTICE—LIS ALIENI PENDENS.—Where a suit is pending elsewhere respecting the same matter, and where a full indemnity might be obtained, the court will suspend proceedings or put the plaintiff to his election; and this whether such proceedings are in rem or in personam: (The Mali Ivo, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 681. Adm. Ct.)

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

QUESTIONS FOR THE FINAL EXAMINATION.

TRINITY TERM 1869.—SECOND DAY.

IV. PRELIMINARY.

Questions 36 to 40 inclusive.

V. EQUITY AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

41. How may the evidence in a suit be taken after issue joined? And how, and under what authority, should admissions be asked for?
42. When is evidence in chief closed, and when, and how, can cross examination be obtained?
43. What was the object of a bill of discovery, and how is that object usually attained now?
44. Under what circumstances is a person entitled to file a bill to perpetuate testimony, and in respect of what rights or claims?
45. Can a married woman sue in respect of her separate estate, with, or without her husband, and who is liable for costs of suit?
46. What change in the law was effected by Locke King's Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113), as to payment of mortgage debts?
47. If a conveyance appears absolute on the face of it, will a court of equity admit any, and what evidence that it was intended as a security only, and what circumstances would have an important bearing on the question?
48. Can a mortgagee make his mortgagor account for rents or profits received by him (the mortgagor) while in possession, and whether the estate is a sufficient security or not?
49. Under what circumstances will a legal mortgagee be postponed to an equitable one?
50. What security is a surety (paying the debt) entitled to have the benefit of, and what alteration in the law in this respect was made by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856?
51. State how the remedy for contribution between sureties is more beneficial in equity than at law.
52. Under what circumstances will a surety be discharged in equity from his liability?
53. What is the law, or rule, as to appropriation of payments?
54. Will equity enforce the performance of contracts respecting personality, equally as of contracts respecting realty, and if not, why not?
55. What instruments will courts of equity generally set aside and cancel; or decree to be delivered up and cancelled?

VI. BANKRUPTCY AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

56. In what case can the amount of a verdict be proved in a bankruptcy, and in what not?

57. In what, if any, case can a creditor prove his debt under the bankruptcy so as to share in the dividend, without oath or affirmation; and how should he proceed to make such proof?

58. How, and to what extent, and in what cases, are securities held by a creditor affected by the bankruptcy of his debtor; and in what cases can he retain any, or what, securities?

59. If an action against a debtor be in progress at the time of the adjudication of bankruptcy, how (if at all) can the plaintiff relieve himself from liability to proceed with the action, or to pay the defendant's costs?

60. If an action against the bankrupt be pending at the time of the adjudication, what will be the effect of the plaintiff proving the debt under the bankruptcy?

61. In what case can a proof be made in a bankruptcy for costs, and in what not?

62. After what respective periods from the signing of the judgment, and under what several circumstances, may a judgment-debtor summons be issued; and what is the statute relating to such summons?

63. What are the conditions applying to the case of every deed of composition, before the deed can be given in evidence?

64. What are the requisites necessary to make a deed of composition or arrangement binding as against creditors who have not executed, or assented to it?

65. If a creditor holds a security for his debt, or part of it, to what extent, or for what proportion, can he prove the debt under the bankruptcy of the debtor? State the different circumstances in which the rules on the subject are different.

66. What matters must be proved in order to obtain an adjudication of bankruptcy against a trader, and what is the nature of the evidence required to be given?

67. What are the steps to be taken after adjudication of bankruptcy, and what time must elapse before the adjudication can be Gazetted?

68. How should a creditor proceed under the 78th and following sections of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, in order to compel his debtor to pay, or secure the debt, or commit an act of bankruptcy?

69. What courses are open to the alleged debtor to pursue on being served with a trader-debtor summons, under sect. 78 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849?

70. If a creditor holding a security on the bankrupt's property wishes to place himself in the most advantageous position, either in respect of his security, or of the dividends under the bankruptcy, what course is it advisable for him to pursue?

VII. CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MAGISTRATES.

71. Classify justices of the peace according to the mode of their appointment, and describe the character of their powers and duties.

72. Describe the course of proceeding to obtain an order for the diversion or the stopping of a highway.

73. In what cases have magistrates power to restore to a landlord the possession of premises vacated by a tenant, and what are the forms of procedure in such cases?

74. Describe the proceedings necessary to be taken preliminary to the trial at quarter sessions of a person accused of a crime.

75. What difference, if any, prevails to the competency of witnesses in criminal and in civil cases?

76. State the cardinal rules of evidence.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CHURCH-RATE—ADVANCES BY COMMISSIONERS—“CHURCH” AND “CHANCEL”—PRACTICE—LETTERS OF REQUEST.—Money was advanced under 5 Geo. 4, c. 36, by the Commissioners of Public Works for the repair of a church, to be repaid by instalments. Part was spent in repairing the chancel. A rate was made for the payment of the first instalment, which the defendant refused to pay: Held, that the money was properly spent, the word “church” including “chancel,” and therefore the rate was not vitiated: See, that even if the money had been improperly spent, the rate would have been good, inasmuch as the commissioners having advanced money on proper security, could not be deprived of that security by the after acts of the parish. Letters of request in a cause of subtraction of church-rates must state the date on which the rate was made, and the circumstances taking the rate out of the Compulsory Church-rate Abolition Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109.). The acceptance of letters of request must in every case for the future be moved by counsel: (Rippen v. Bastin, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 622. Sir R. Phillimore.)

PRACTICE—DISCRETION OF DEAN OF ARCHES—REFUSAL TO ACCEPT.—A clerk was charged with the publication of a work containing heretical doctrines. A commission of inquiry, authorised by the bishop of the diocese in which the alleged offence was committed, reported that there was sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings. Thereupon the bishop of the diocese where the clerk held preferment, sent letters of request to the Court of Arches. The letters set out the passages in which the alleged heresy was contained, and recited the report of the commission of inquiry, but stated no grounds why the court should accept the letters of request. On motion to the Court of Arches to accept the letters of request: Held, that the court has a discretion to accept or refuse letters of request, and will exercise that discretion in favour of refusal, where no grounds are stated for the acceptance, or where from the nature of the case (as here, on a charge of heresy) the matter is especially one for the cognisance and decision of the bishop of the diocese. Such discretion is not limited under the provisions of the 23 Hen. 8, c. 9, nor of sect. 13 of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86 (Church Discipline Act). The dictum of Sir G. Lee in Butler v. Dolben (2 Lee, 317), that the Dean of Arches is bound to accept letters of request coming from a proper court, is not supported by the case of Pelling v. Whiston (1 Com. 199), on the authority of which that dictum depends: (Sheppard v. Bennett, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 623. Sir R. Phillimore.)

ECCLESIASTICAL PROSECUTIONS.—Three bishops have commenced prosecutions against beneficed clergymen of their dioceses for alleged violations of the Church's rule on ritual, as laid down recently by Lord Cairns, in his judgment in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in the case of Martin v. Mackonochie. The Bishop of London prosecutes the Rev. C. F. Lowder, vicar of St. Peter's, in St. George's-in-the-East; the Bishop of Chichester prosecutes the Rev. James Purchas, incumbent of St. James's Chapel, Brighton; and the Bishop of Winchester prosecutes the Rev. R. Hooker Wix, vicar of St. Michael and All Angels, Ryde. If the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council declare that Sir Robert Phillimore, the Dean of Arches, is bound to receive letters of request in the case of Sheppard v. Bennett, the Bishop of Bath and Wells will prosecute the Rev. W. J. E. Bennett, vicar of Frome Selwood, for alleged unsound doctrine. A prosecution for heresy of a different kind has been commenced against the Rev. Charles Voysey, vicar of Healaugh, Yorkshire.

COUNTY COURTS.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

COSTS—CERTIFICATE FOR—POWER OF COUNTY COURT JUDGE TO CERTIFY WHEN CAUSE SENT DOWN FOR TRIAL FROM SUPERIOR COURT.—Where a cause commenced in a Superior Court is by order of a judge sent to be tried in a County Court, the judge of the County Court who tries the cause has power, under the County Courts Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142), s. 5, to certify that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the Superior Court, so as to entitle the plaintiff to costs, and the issue sent down to the County Court is the record on which he may certify: (Taylor v. Cass, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 667. C. P.)

WANDSWORTH COUNTY COURT.

Tuesday, March 2.

(Before H. J. STONOR, Esq., Judge.)

MORRIS v. THE LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The Superior Courts have no power to refer issues of interpleader to the County Courts.

Wright for the plaintiff.

Mangles for the defendants.

This was an issue of interpleader in the Court of Queen's Bench, and which was referred to this court by an order made by Mr. Justice Hannen on the 25th Jan. 1869.

Mangles submitted that the Superior Court had no power to refer this issue, and that the court had no power to try it, and that if it did try it, even with the consent of parties, the verdict would be a nullity.

His HONOUR called upon the counsel for the plaintiff to show him under what Act of Parliament, and what section of such Act, this issue was referred.

Wright, for the plaintiff, admitted that he could not find any section of any Act of Parliament in point, but understood that the practice of the Superior Court was to refer such issues to County Courts.

His HONOUR said the Superior Courts have power, under the Act of 1867, to refer actions in contract after issue joined up to 50l., and actions of tort, where the defendant is unable to give security for costs. This was, strictly speaking, not an action at all, but merely an issue raised for the protection of the officer of the Superior Court. It was not in the nature of contract, but of tort, and there had been no inquiry or application as to the costs. It was clear that this court had not jurisdiction, and the order will be so endorsed.

Mangles applied for costs.

Wright resisted the application, on the ground that the order had been made by mistake of the Superior Court.

His HONOUR refused costs.

Mangles applied to have such refusal added to the return, and his HONOUR consented.

His HONOUR subsequently endorsed the writ as follows:—

“The issue mentioned in this order came on for trial at the County Court for Surrey, holden at Wandsworth on the 2nd March 1869, when the defendants' counsel objecting, and the plaintiff's counsel admitting, and it appearing to the court that the court had no jurisdiction to try such issue, the same was not tried, and no order was made thereon, the plaintiff's counsel offered to consent to the same being tried in order to give the court jurisdiction, but the defendants' counsel refused to consent thereto, on the ground that such consent would not give the court jurisdiction; whereupon the plaintiff's counsel applied for costs, and the defendants' counsel opposed such application, and the court refused the same, on the ground that this order had been made in mistake.

HENRY JAMES STONOR,

Judge of the above-named Court.

9th March, 1869.

The defendants took out a summons at chambers to show cause why the interpleader order in this action should not be amended by striking out the words with reference to the trial of the issue thereon directed at the County Court of Surrey holden at Wandsworth, the Judge of the County Court having no power to try an interpleader issue from the Superior Court binding on the parties.

On the 10th May 1869 this summons was heard before Mr. Justice Hannen.

Wright for plaintiff.

Woods for defendants.

The return of the judge of the County Court was placed before Mr. Justice Hannen, and he held that there had been a mistake in sending this issue to the County Court, and directed the order to be amended accordingly.

HUNTINGDON COUNTY COURT.

(Before JOHN COLLYER, Esq., Judge.)

BOTTOMLEY v. CARTER.

Particulars—Amendment.

Where the particulars stated that the action was brought to recover 11l. 5s., the price of a bullock, and it appeared that the property sold was a cow:

Held, that in the absence of consent, the judge had no power to amend, and he directed a nonsuit.

This was an action brought to recover the sum of 11l. 5s., the price of a cow, which was misdescribed in the particulars as a bullock.

Naylor, for the defendant, submitted that the plaintiff must be nonsuited, as he could not prove his case according to his particulars, and accord ing to the rules his Honour had no power to amend unless by consent.

His Honour concurred in that view, and directed a nonsuit.

LOOKER v. PARSONS.

Master and servant—Right of master to a suit of clothes supplied to his servant who left before a reasonable time after they had been supplied.

Where a servant who was in receipt of 14s. a week wages was supplied with a suit of clothes in January and left his master's service in the following March:

Held, that a reasonable time had not elapsed to enable the servant to claim the absolute right to the clothes, and that the master was entitled to recover them in action of detinue.

Crocker v. Molyneux, 3 C. & P. 470, quoted.

This was an action brought to recover a suit of clothes detained by the defendant.

From the evidence on the part of the plaintiff it was proved that the defendant was hired by the plaintiff, who is a farmer at Huntingdon, in the capacity of a general servant. In January, a suit of undress livery was supplied to the defendant, he representing that he was likely to remain in the employ of the plaintiff. However in March he left, taking with him the clothes, hence the present action.

Day, for the plaintiff, quoted the case of Crocker v. Molyneux, 3 C. & P. 470, where it was held that a servant who had been engaged at thirty guineas a year and a suit of clothes, and who had been wrongfully dismissed by his master, could not recover them in an action of trover against the master, the same being held not to become the servant's property until the expiry of the twelve months.

His Honour remarked there was no doubt the plaintiff could maintain the action; but the sole question was, did the defendant stay in the plaintiff's service a reasonable time after the clothes were supplied?

Day.—Certainly not; for if your Honour holds that three months is a reasonable time, then it would follow that four suits of clothes a year were necessary for one servant.

His Honour, in giving judgment, said the whole question resolved itself into whether the defendant stayed a reasonable time in the plaintiff's service. Now it appeared that the plaintiff was a farmer, in fair circumstances, keeping a small establishment, and, having engaged the defendant at weekly wages, said, "If you are disposed to stay, I will give you a suit of clothes," whereupon the defendant said he would stay, and the clothes were procured. Now he (the learned judge) thought that the argument used by Mr. Day to the effect that if it was held that three months was a reasonable time, then four suits of clothes would be necessary. It would be unreasonable to hold that, and he thought the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

COUNTY COURTS.—A parliamentary return moved for by Mr. Norwood shows that the number of plaints entered in County Courts in England and Wales during the year 1868 was, including the City of London Court, 990,306. Of these, 978,916 related to sums not exceeding 20l.; 11,357 to sums above 20l. and not exceeding 50l.; and 33, by agreement, to sums above 50l. The total amount for which plaints were entered was 2,640,525l.; and 362,375l. was paid as fees on the various proceedings in the County Courts. The total number of equitable suits or proceedings in these courts was 693, and the amount of the subject-matter in dispute or otherwise (as far as known) was 90,664l.

IMPORTANT TO PUBLICANS AND AUCTIONEERS.—BASS v. HOMEWOOD.—This was a cause, tried in the Exchequer. The plaintiffs were the celebrated brewers of Burton-upon-Trent. The defendant was a furniture dealer in Cross-street, Islington. The action was brought for the recovery of the value of a tablet or trade label and frame, belonging to the plaintiffs. It appears that the plaintiffs, like other brewers, have a tablet which they lend to publicans who deal with them, and which advertises the fact that their beer is sold in the house where it is exhibited. The defendant purchased the tablet in question at an auction sale of the effects of a publican, and exposed it in his shop for sale. Two of the clerks of the plaintiff, passing his shop, noticed the tablet, and informed him it was the property of Messrs. Bass, and also called his attention to a printed notice on the back of the tablet, stating that it was and always would remain their property. Shortly afterwards the sub-manager of Messrs. Bass called on the defendant, and was informed by the defendant that he had sold the tablet. The object of the present action was not merely to recover the value of this single tablet, but, in consequence of the plaintiffs having lost so many of them, to settle the law upon the subject, and give publicity to the fact that these tablets belonged entirely to Messrs. Bass and Co., and that publicans and auctioneers had no right to deal with them. This was sufficiently established by a verdict being given for the plaintiff.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

B. A. 1861, SECTS. 110, 117, 136—INTERPLEADER ISSUE.—In an interpleader issue, the claimant was creditors' assignee of a bankrupt, and defendant was execution-creditor; the execution took place after the fi. fa. was issued, but before it was executed. At a meeting of creditors it was duly resolved to accept a composition, payable in a month, and to take no further proceedings in bankruptcy. The assignee returned the bankrupt his letters, and directed the messenger of the court to withdraw from possession. Before an order of discharge was obtained, the defendant re-issued the fi. fa., and the writ was executed: Held, that the bankrupt's property had not been divested out of the assignee at the time the execution was levied. Therefore the defendant had no claim except for the amount of his composition: (Macdonald v. Thompson, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 666. C. P.)

LEEDS BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner AYETON.)

Vexatious plea by bankrupt—Discharge—Affixing conditions.

George Tindall, auctioneer, Scarborough, was adjourned a fortnight ago to ascertain whether it was true, as stated by the bankrupt, that he had been misinformed by his attorney as to when the trial of an action at Manchester would take place.

Bond now read a letter from Mr. Richardson, solicitor, Scarborough, stating that the bankrupt had quite told the truth.

Simpson, for a creditor, submitted that after all this was a difficult state of affairs, because his client had been put to the cost of bringing the action, and the bankrupt pleaded never indebted. It could not be said that was not the bankrupt's plea. It was a vexatious defence, because a fortnight ago the bankrupt admitted that he owed the creditor 15l., but not 26l. If he admitted the 15l. at Manchester, the verdict and all the costs were against him. Mr. Bond said the attorney had been obliged to plead because the bankrupt was from home, and if a creditor chose to sue for more than was due if the debtor put in a plea of never indebted the creditor got his deserts.

Bond argued that it was not vexatious to plead in order to let a man recover more than was really due. The bankrupt wrote to the creditor and offered to pay the 15l., but he refused to pay some costs about which the creditor was inexorable. The creditor might at the expense of a few shillings have gone to the County Court.

The Commissioner said the creditor had a right to go to the Superior Court, and he ought not to be damaged by exercising that right. The bankrupt had pleaded vexatiously at all events as to the 15l. which he admitted, and if he owed the money, though he had not the amount, he had no right to plead not indebted. His Honour thought the bankrupt might have his discharge on condition that it did not affect this debt.

Bond demurred, saying that the Lords Justices had declared themselves very strongly against affixing such conditions.

The Commissioner said he should affix a condition in spite of the Lords Justices. The Act of Parliament under which they had so decided was now gone, and therefore their decision was gone too. His Honour said he should order that any pay, income, or emoluments hereafter coming to the bankrupt should be liable to the payment of 32l. 2s. 4d., the amount of the costs the opposing creditor had incurred.

Discharged conditionally.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY (IRELAND.)

(Before MILLER, J.)

Re NOBLE, a Bankrupt.

Conduct of bankrupt—Allowance in proportion to dividend paid—Court may refuse any allowance whatever.

The 302nd section of the Act provides that the court may make to every bankrupt who shall have obtained his certificate and every insolvent who shall have obtained his final discharge, such allowance out of his estate as the court may think fit, not exceeding the rates and amounts following—that is to say, if the net produce of the estate shall pay 5s. in the pound an allowance of 3l. per cent., and if 10s. in the pound an allowance of five per cent., and if 12s. 6d. an allowance of 7l. 10s. per cent., and if 15s. in the pound an allowance of ten per cent. In each case the statute provides that such allowance shall not exceed a certain sum mentioned. In the present case the assignee objected to the bankrupt getting any allowance whatever, although he had obtained his certificate, and although his estate had paid a dividend that entitled him to a considerable sum.

Purcell, Q. C. now applied that the allowance should be made pursuant to the statute. The English Act had the word "shall" instead of "may," and it was clearly the intention of the Legislature that some allowance should be made. The word "may" applied merely to the amount of the allowance, as the word "such allowance" was frequently introduced, showing that some allowance should be made as a reward for a trader having obtained his certificate. Counsel believed there was no instance but one where it was refused. In England it could not be refused, as the Act made it imperative on the court to grant it.

Kernan, Q. C. for the assignees, said the question had been decided in the case of Fleming v. Hennessey, where the estate paid a large dividend, and yet from the misconduct of the bankrupts the court refused to give them anything.

Application refused.

(Before HARRISON, J.)

Re RING, a Bankrupt.

Claim in bankruptcy by a creditor residing out of the jurisdiction—Security for costs.

A creditor on an Irish bankrupt's estate, residing out of the jurisdiction, and who comes in to establish a special claim, cannot be compelled to give security for costs.

In this case the bankrupt was a trader residing in Loughrea, and shortly before his bankruptcy he purchased a quantity of hops from Messrs. Bryce, of Glasgow, merchants. These had arrived at his stores a few days only before the bankruptcy, and it was alleged that the property in them had not passed to the assignees. An application was made on the part of the Glasgow merchants to have the hops sold and the proceeds paid to the party entitled to them. The Messrs. Bryce accordingly served notice that they would apply to the court for the price of the hops. The assignees served notice on them that the application would be resisted, and calling on them to attend before the registrar to have the amount of security they would require for costs fixed before the application would be entertained. Both motions came before the court.

George Perry, for the assignees, referred to the practice in the Court of Chancery, the Court of Probate, and Civil Bill Courts, where a party living out of the jurisdiction, who commenced any action or suit, was always compelled to give security for costs.

HARRISON, J. said there was hardly any analogy between plaintiffs in other courts and creditors in bankruptcy. In bankruptcy the court at an early stage took possession of the bankrupt's property, and any party who was a claimant or creditor was forced to come in and establish his claim, and was rather in the position of a defendant forced into court than of a plaintiff initiating proceedings. In the Superior Courts, the practice is to compel a party residing out of the jurisdiction to give security for costs, and such has been the practice from very remote times. In the reign of Henry VI. a statute was passed, which was in force in Ireland as well as in England, that compelled plaintiffs out of the jurisdiction to give security; but as neither that statute, nor any case that he knew of on the subject, applied to bankruptcy, he would refuse the motion with costs. He would also refuse the motion for the price of the hops, and with costs.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Monday, June 14.

THE NEW COMMISSIONER.

Mr. Thring, the newly appointed commissioner of the Liverpool Bankruptcy Court, well known for some years past as one of the registrars of that court, and recently as the acting commissioner in the absence from illness of the late Mr. Commissioner Perry, took his seat for the first time since his promotion to the higher and more important office of commissioner this morning. There was a numerous attendance of attorneys to congratulate the learned gentleman on his promotion, amongst them being Messrs. John Yates, Tyrer, Banner, Gill, Garnett, Downham, T. Martin, Locket, French, Seddon-Smith, Maddock, Christopher Baker, Bellringer, Fullager, &c.

When the commissioner entered the court, the professional gentlemen present rose, and

Mr. John Yates, addressing his Honour, said:—Mr. Thring, I beg to congratulate you on your appointment to the important office of commissioner of this court. I have the honour to be president of the Incorporated Law Society of Liverpool, and though I am not to-day specially commissioned by them, I am quite sure I but express the opinion of the whole of the Profession when I say I am quite satisfied that your appointment will give unmixed gratification and satisfaction to the whole body. We have seen for a considerable time the manner in which you have performed the duties of registrar, and we have observed that the patience, learning, and sound judgment which you have at all times exhibited have given the greatest satisfaction; and we feel assured that in the higher and more important office in which you are called upon to display those qualifications, which have already I may say endeared you to the Profession, you will bring the exercise of those sound qualifications to the great advantage, not simply of the Profession, but of those who are more primarily interested, that is to say, the suitors of the court.

Mr. Commissioner Thring in reply said: I thank you most cordially, Mr. Yates, for the kind manner in which you have spoken on the part of yourself and the Profession. I cannot but feel myself unworthy of the words you have uttered. I only trust I shall endeavour, as far as I can, to merit what you have said of me. Had I entered the court for the first time this morning, silence would probably have best befitted the time and the place: but we have all met here before, and thoughts of the past will naturally be uppermost in our minds. We cannot forget that Mr. Commissioner Perry presided in this court for many years, respected by all. His conduct was uniformly upright; his desire was ever to do justice. For myself I may truly say that I always found him kindly and considerate in all our personal relations, and I am sure that in so speaking I reflect not only my own feelings, but those of all connected with the court. In paying the last tribute of respect to him who is gone, I must not pass by those who are living. My colleague, Mr. Yate Lee, who has so long and so efficiently discharged the duties of registrar, actuated by private motives, which will be known to few, but with a generosity of spirit which will be appreciated by all, declined to become an applicant for the office of commissioner, and thus himself cleared the way for my promotion. You, gentlemen, determined, as I think wisely, on public grounds, that the immediate transfer of the jurisdiction of this court to the County Court would be neither advantageous for solicitors nor advocates. Existing business is best wound-up by existing machinery. The Lord Chancellor has confirmed your decision. As Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy I now ask, and I know that I shall not ask in vain, for the assistance of the many able counsel and solicitors, who practise in this court. Efficient advocacy is alike the best spur to, and check on, the action of the judge. Within our immediate precincts, I can rely with the greatest confidence on our official staff. I have had many opportunities of observing their intelligence and devotion to the public service; but I feel that it would be unbecoming to particularise any from this seat, although many amongst you would probably join with me in singling out one example of marked distinction. With so much support on every side, I shall feel little apprehension in undertaking the duties of my office during the short remaining term of its existence, for I have already found that honesty of purpose, although combined with what some may deem unnecessary strictness, will eventually win its way amongst all classes. When our extinction comes, and the hour is very near, I trust that the abolition of this court will be received rather with a feeling and expression of regret than with a burst of popular exultation from the public voice of Liverpool.

The business of the court was then resumed.

Mr. Commissioner Ayrton, in the Hull Bankruptcy Court, in giving judgment in a case the other day, said it was very difficult to punish fraudulent bankrupts. In fact, although the law was enacted to punish rogues, if it had been framed expressly to aid them, it could not have served them better than it did. A man must be a fool as well as a rogue to come within the operation of the penal clauses of the Act.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

NOTE.—This department of the LAW TIMES being open to the discussion on all professional topics, the Editor is not responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.

MANAGING CLERKS IN THE COUNTY AND MAGISTRATES' COURTS.—"W. H. F.," whose letter appears in your number of 12th June, is evidently a disappointed and chagrined one, &c., and finds great fault with the judgment of the County Court Judge in Holland v. Standing, reported in your journal of 27th March last. I am a managing clerk, "in no better position than one who has not been articulated and admitted," but have had quite as much experience and paid as much attention to the study of the Profession as "W. H. F." has, I dare say. "W. H. F." complains of his Honour's judgment, first, that the several Acts relating to attorneys are held to impose a most unjust and ridiculous restriction upon gentlemen who have strictly followed the arduous and expensive course of study and apprenticeship directed by those Acts for the purpose of qualifying them for becoming attorneys. Mark his last words—"becoming attorneys." If a man becomes an attorney and chooses, or is compelled to sink down to the level of a clerk, why then he ought to have no greater privileges than another in his position as clerk. If his master be not competent or willing to take advocacy, he is not, and ought not, to be allowed to hand over his brief to a professional brother of the same rank, much less should he be allowed to substitute his mere clerk because he has succeeded in obtaining admission as an attorney. Secondly, "W. H. F." says, as construed, the Acts are held to prohibit a gentleman who has fulfilled the numerous and particular directions therein contained from performing a certain description of professional work, which very often happens to be the identical branch of practice for which his services are required by the party engaging him as managing clerk. "W. H. F." is wrong in his second objection. His Honour's judgment as to the construction of the Acts does not prevent the attorney from performing the required duties, but, on the contrary, actually secures those duties to the principal; it is a wholesome provision to prevent interlopers doing the duties and services which should be rendered by their masters, and for which purpose they were admitted members of the Profession. It is true what "W. H. F." states, that the intention was to prevent an unqualified person from being able to act as or for an attorney, and if a qualified person chooses or is compelled to sink his qualification by becoming a clerk, his occupation as an independent qualified person is gone, and he is, ipso facto, "in no better position than one who has not been articulated and admitted." The Acts relating to attorneys in the respects referred to, never contemplated qualified attorneys becoming clerks; therefore, if they do become clerks, they are nothing more. A spade is but a spade, ergo, a clerk is but a clerk. Moreover, and very properly so too, the rule is, as I have before stated, attorney A. is not entitled to attend as advocate for attorney B., and if attorney B. cannot, or is not able, to undertake his client's case, he must instruct counsel, or give up his client to some other attorney who can and will himself personally advocate. It would not be fair to the Profession at large nor clients either, that an attorney should resort to a self-confident clerk because he happens to have been admitted. If "W. H. F." has or does become a clerk, he must be treated as a clerk. The papers teem with advertisements for situations "Wanted, by a gentleman (admitted), a situation as managing clerk;" and a few instances have occurred where some of these gentlemen have ingratiated themselves into the good graces of their masters' clients, much to the cost of said masters. There is one consolation—the acrimony displayed by "W. H. F." will avail him nothing. It is not wise in incurring the expense "W. H. F." complains about, if the gentlemen are not fitted to practise as principals.

A. B. C.

—I was glad to see the letter of "W. H. F." upon this subject, and agree that it is a matter which should be taken into the consideration of the Profession. I have often thought if managing clerks who have passed their final, and articulated clerks who have passed their intermediate examinations, were allowed to appear as advocates in County Courts and before magistrates, it would be a boon to the Profession, especially large firms, and to managing and articulated clerks. Take, for instance, a solicitor in practice in the City, or some large town; his client brings him in a list of debts averaging from 10l. to 100l. Prior to the last County Court Act the solicitor transferred this branch of his business to his managing clerk, who issued writs, where costs were recoverable, and thus relieved his principal from all further anxiety and trouble. Since the County Court Act this particular branch of the Profession, so far as regards debts under 20l., has been thrown upon the principal, and he is obliged to attend County Courts perhaps at some considerable distance, and a loss to himself, whilst his clerk is allowed to appear on summonses at judges' chambers, before the Chief Clerk in Chancery, and before the Commissioners in bankruptcy sitting in chambers, on matters where considerable amounts are at stake; yet for the recovery of a debt of 5l. or 6l., where it is merely necessary to prove the sale and delivery of goods, the principal is forced to attend himself, and deprived of the service his clerk could render him, through the stringent rule in question. With regard to articulated clerks who have passed their intermediate examination, if they were allowed to appear as advocates it would tend to their improvement, be an incentive to work and to acquire knowledge to make themselves acquainted with the points of law likely to arise in the case they had to conduct, to become acquainted with the rules of evidence, and prepare themselves for their starting as solicitors. I have found that looking up points of law on preparing cases for counsel impresses more law on the memory than two or three hours' reading, and I think every means should be allowed to an articulated clerk to acquaint himself with his Profession. To prevent persons not in the Profession from benefiting by the rule in question being set aside; let each solicitor, having a managing or articulated clerk passed the intermediate examination, make a declaration of the name of the clerk, and that he is in his employ, or serving his articles with him. Upon this declaration let the Law Society issue a yearly certificate to such clerk, at a nominal yearly duty, and he be bound to produce it at each court he attends before commencing his case. If the clerk leaves his situation, or his articles be assigned, the solicitor to give notice to the Law Society forth with.

AN ARTICLED CLERK.

SOLICITORS AS MAGISTRATES.—The numerous letters which have recently appeared in the LAW TIMES on the subject of practising solicitors being disqualified by Act of Parliament from appointment as county magistrates, lead me to conclude the Profession take an interest in its removal. I beg, therefore, to suggest that, should the Earl of Albemarle's Bill to repeal so much of the Act of Geo. 2, c. 20, as imposed a landed property qualification for the magistracy (see LAW TIMES, 24th April, p. 489) pass the House of Lords, on its introduction into the House of Commons some member be asked to move that a clause be introduced removing this disqualification, with or without the conditions mentioned in my letter in the above number of the LAW TIMES (p. 495) as may be deemed advisable.

NOTES AND QUERIES ON POINTS OF PRACTICE.

Queries.

34. BANKRUPTCY—FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE.—B. being the owner of a freehold estate, executes a mortgage thereof to C. (a relative), for securing money advanced to or for B. previous to the execution of the mortgage. B. within a fortnight after, executes a second mortgage of the same estate to D. his bankers for money already due on his (B.'s) promissory notes, &c. In about three months after the execution of the first mortgage, and about ten weeks after the execution of the second mortgage, B. executes a conveyance for the benefit of creditors to which three-fourths of the 10l. and upward creditors assented. C. and D. assented to this deed upon the condition that they were to be paid in full the amount secured by their respective mortgages. Was not the execution of the mortgages to C. and D. a fraudulent preference within the meaning of the 135th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861? Cite authorities.

35. PROOF.—A., whose husband died in the Massachusetts General Hospital Boston, on the 16th Nov. 1868, is entitled to 5l. out of a friendly society, on proof of his death. What would be sufficient proof of such death in a County Court? MARTON.

36. MORTGAGE—POWER OF SALE.—A. mortgages real estate to B. for securing a certain sum of money and interest. The mortgage-deed contains an absolute power of sale in case of default in repayment of principal and interest at time appointed in proviso for redemption, which is followed by a proviso that the power of sale is not to be exercised without six months' notice being first given to mortgagor requiring payment off of moneys owing on the security, and there is also a further proviso indemnifying purchasers from any irregularity in exercise of power of sale, and declaring that the remedy of the mortgagor against mortgagees in respect of any impropriety, &c., in any such sale should be in damages only. Will any of your correspondents say whether, under the above security it would be in the power of the mortgagor in anywise to impeach a sale of the mortgaged premises which was not made strictly in accordance with the stipulations contained in the mortgage, so as to affect the property in the hands of the then subsequent purchasers, or whether his remedy would be against the mortgagees alone, and then in damages only, and what evidence could a subsequent purchaser require as to the validity of such sale? A reference to authorities will oblige. P.

37. TRANSIT BY RAILWAY.—A. consigned to B. a hamper containing wines and spirits, which in its course of transit passed through the hands of two railway companies. On opening the hamper, B. found that two bottles of spirits had been abstracted. Will any one inform me how an action can be brought by A. against the company to whom the goods were delivered without putting B. (the proper plaintiff) to any inconvenience or expense? G. W.

38. CRIMINAL LAW.—Since about the year 1850, a statute was passed, which has been frequently acted upon, containing a section enabling judges and chairmen of quarter sessions to discharge a prisoner who has pleaded guilty, without receiving sentence, on his giving recognizance to appear or come up when called upon to receive sentence. Will M. E. S., or any other of your learned correspondents, state what Act and section it is? The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 36, s. 117, refers to recognisances to keep the peace and be of good behaviour simply, and cannot, I imagine, be the Act wanted. HOMO.

39. WILL.—A. devises his real estate to his daughter B. (but without any restriction as to separate use or giving any powers of appointing by will or otherwise). B. marries under age. Query Can she, whilst still under twenty-one, make a will devising her interest in the property to her husband? Refer to the law. IGNORAMUS.

40. COMMON CARRIER—RIGHT TO REFUSE PARCEL WITHOUT THE FEE FOR BOOKING.—Is a common carrier justified in refusing to receive and forward a parcel, presented at his office for delivery within his regular district, on the ground that the party presenting such parcel refuses to pay twopence for booking? Or can a common carrier insist upon receiving the amount due for the carriage of a parcel, and refuse to receive and forward it unless such amount is paid? F.

41. MARRIED WOMAN—REAL PROPERTY.—A man possessed of real property (freehold) marries, and after having one child (a daughter), dies, leaving his widow encoined. She marries again, and about a month after gives birth to the child (another daughter). Is such last daughter in contemplation of law the child of the first, or second husband? Whose name will she take? And is she entitled as co-tenant with the eldest daughter to the real estate of her father, the first husband, he having died intestate? The law regarding all children en ventre sa mère, as actually born for the purpose of taking any benefit to which they would be entitled if actually born.: (see Williams Real Property, 7th edit. p. 250.) D. J.

42. LICENSED VICTUALER—DRUNKEN CUSTOMER.—Can a man who has repeatedly misconducted himself at an inn by drunkenness, &c., when he is perfectly sober, legally demand a glass of beer from the landlord? G. B.

43. MARRIED WOMAN—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—The owner of a small leasehold property, held for 1000 years, dies intestate. A. B. (a married woman), his sister, with the consent of her husband, administrators to his estate. A. B. and her husband assign the property to a purchaser. Need C. D. acknowledge the deed, under s. 4 Will. 4, c. 74? The 77th section seems very comprehensive, applying as it does to any interest in lands of any tenure. But, on the other hand, the husband could alone dispose of his wife's chattels real in possession without her concurrence. It is presumed, therefore, that her execution, not being absolutely requisite, need not be acknowledged. The purchase-money being under 50L, it is desirable to save the expense of an acknowledgment. M.

(Q. 29.) DEEDS OF SETTLEMENT AND TRUSTEES.—In this case it appears to me that "G."s best course would be to exercise the power given him by the 27th section of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, and appoint some other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in his place. W. H. F.

(Q. 30.) APPRENTICESHIP.—In Stone's Justices' Manual, 13th edit., is the following passage under the title "Master and Servant," pp. 286 and 318: "Persons under the age of twenty-one years are mentioned in the definition of the word 'employed,' and can enter into a binding contract; but it is important to remember that the contracts of infants must be beneficial, and that any important want of mutuality or unfairness of the conditions will render them void." (Reg. v. Lord, 17 L. J. 181; Wells v. Scott, 25 J. P. 215.) It appears, therefore, that an infant coming of age cannot avoid a fair and reasonable indenture, and would, it seems, be liable for absconding himself without his master's permission. W. H. F.

(Q. 32.) CONVEYANCING.—The personal representatives of A. need not be made parties to this re-conveyance. The assent of the grantee to a deed is always presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary; so that even where the grantee does not execute the deed, it nevertheless transfers the estate to him. By the death of A., B. became entitled to an estate in severalty, and can, irrespective of the express declaration contained in the mortgage for that purpose, give an effectual receipt for the mortgage money: (Smith's Comp. 3rd edit., tit. Joint Tenancy, and Deeds, Execution of, and Trustee Acts (23 & 24 Vict. c. 35, s. 23, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 29.) W. H. F.

(Q. 33.) WILL.—The words "leaving issue" would certainly be construed as "having issue," and therefore the grandchildren would be entitled to share: (see Bryden v. Willett, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 518.) W. H. F.

— I take the following from "Hawkins on the construction of Wills":—"Rule.—A gift to 'issue' prima facie includes descendants of every degree (Davenport v. Hanbury, 3 Ves. 258). The generality of the word 'issue' is, however, restricted in a case which frequently arises, by reference to the parent of the issue in question; for it is an established rule that where the 'parent' of 'issue' is spoken of, the word issue is prima facie restricted to children of the parent (Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522; Pruen v. Osborne, 11 Sim. 132). Thus, if the devise or bequest be to the children of A. living at a given period, with a direction that the issue of any child dying before that period shall take their parent's share, the gift to issue is confined to grandchildren of A. And the rule is the same if the gift be to the children of A. living at a given period, and the issue of such as shall be then dead, such issue to take their parent's share, although the gift to issue is distinct from the direction as to taking the share of the parent (Smith v. Horsfall, 25 B. 628; Maynard v. Wright, 28 B. 285). The rule applies to devises of real estate (Bradshaw v. Meling, 19 B. 417). I have always considered it as settled that, in a will or in a deed, if it is a question whether the word 'issue' shall be taken generally, or in a restricted sense, a direction that the issue shall take only the shares which their parents would have taken if living, must be taken to show that the word 'issue' was used in its restricted sense (Pruen v. Osborne, 11 Sim. 132). The rule of course is the same, where the direction is that the issue shall take their 'father's or mother's' share (Buckle v. Foxcott, 4 Hare, 536)." O. Y.

— Issue means lineal descendants of any degree. But if it were otherwise, or if the word used were "child or children" instead of "issue," even then, if the parents took vested interests, leaving would be interpreted as having or having had. Therefore, in the distribution of the fund the grandchildren of the deceased brother will take their grandparents' share: (White v. Hill, L. Rep. 4 Eq. 265; Bryden v. Willett, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 518.) W. J. M.

— There is no doubt, I think, that the word "issue" in the extract given by "A. B. C." must be used in its restricted sense, and that the children only of the brothers and sisters would be entitled. This view is held in Pruen v. Osborne, 11 Sim. 132, and in Hawkins's Concise Construction of Wills; but the rule is that a gift to "issue" comprehends all descendants: (Davenport v. Hanbury, 3 Ves. 258.) E. H.

LAW LIBRARY.

A Practical Treatise on Life and Fire Assurance, Annuities, and Reversionary Sums. A new and enlarged edition. By J. H. JAMES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. London: Doughty.

This is rather a scientific than a legal treatise on the important subjects stated on the title page; nevertheless it will be useful to the lawyer who desires to know something about the principles and practice of life and fire assurance, as well as the law by which they are regulated—subjects very imperfectly understood by the public, although by no means difficult to comprehend, and extremely interesting. Mr. James has enjoyed extensive experience as an actuary, and he possesses the faculty of clearly expressing himself, and putting the information of which he is full into a shape that is readily learned by the non-professional reader. It is the most practical book on the subject.

The Law to Regulate the Sale of Poisons within Great Britain. By WILLIAM FLUX, Attorney-at-Law. London: Churchill.

MR. FLUX is the solicitor to the Pharmaceutical Society, and as such it was his duty to master the law by which the members of this society are so much affected. The result of his studies of it he has printed for the general use of the public, and their legal advisers.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

EDWARD WILLIAMS, ESQ.

We have to record the death, full of years and honours, of Mr. Edward Williams, solicitor, of Oswestry, who died on the 23rd May 1869, at his residence, Lloran House, Oswestry, in his 71st year, after an illness of two year's duration.

Mr. Williams was born in Oswestry, and lived there from the day of his birth until the day of his death.

About the year 1815, Mr. Williams entered the office of the late Mr. Longueville Jones, of Oswestry, who seeing Mr. Williams's aptitude and capacity for business, gave him his articles, and at the death of Mr. Longueville Jones, about the year 1810, Mr. Williams became a partner with Thos. Longueville Longueville, Esq. (Mr. Longueville Jones's son), and the partnership has continued unbroken until Mr. Williams's death. The provisional practice of the firm covered a wide area, including a considerable part of Shropshire, and a large part of North Wales, and included such clients as Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, Sir Robert Vaughan, Sir John Roger Kynaston, the Wests of Ruthin Castle, the late Lord Dunganon, Lord Berwick, Mr. Ormsby Gore, and most of the principal nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood.

When, twenty-five years ago, railway enterprise extended itself to the neighbourhood of Oswestry, the adhesion and professional assistance of the firm became almost indispensable, and the late Mr. Williams, actively engaged in promoting the Shrewsbury and Chester Railway, and subsequently the Shrewsbury and Hereford line; and in yet later years the firm have been largely engaged by the Great Western Company in promoting and carrying out the Vale of Llangollen, the Corwen, and Bala, and other schemes.

So potent was the influence of the firm, and so eagerly was it sought, that Mr. Williams refused the business of two railway companies, which in the hands of some men would have formed the basis of a fortune.

Half a century ago, the principal client of the late W. Longueville Jones was the celebrated John Mytton, of Halston, who was possessed of one of the largest and most fertile and valuable estates in the county of Salop.

Mr. Mytton's mode of living soon involved him in pecuniary difficulties, and it is on record that the late W. Longueville Jones told Mytton, when his fortunes had been much shattered, that if he would live on 10,000L a year for a while, his fortune should be retrieved; a proposal which Mytton repudiated in terms more forcible than polite.

Ultimately, when Mytton's difficulties thickened, it became necessary to sell his fine domains, being very extensive, the sales extended over several years; and the late Mr. Williams, though then a very young man, was largely entrusted with the practical part of Mytton's business, in the management of which he first displayed those qualities of assiduity, prudence, and integrity which characterised his after life.

For more than fifty years Mr. Williams was actively engaged in the duties of his profession, to the neglect of all other pursuits and recreations of any kind.

With the regularity of a salaried clerk, he went to his office at a quarter to ten daily, and stayed there till six, always available, zealous, and accessible to his clients, and had his reward in an amount of respect, confidence, and esteem, which rarely falls to the lot of any one man.

A trifling incident occurs to the writer which will aptly portray the force of the sense of duty and sincerity of principle which marked the man.

Upon a grateful client proposing to present Mr. Williams with a testimonial for professional services, he replied, "I have only done my duty, and I never could understand how a man was entitled to a reward for doing his duty."

Mr. Williams leaves two sons, both in the Profession, and three daughters to lament his loss and emulate his virtues.—Communicated.

MR. HENRY JAMES.

Mr. Henry James, of Leominster, solicitor, died suddenly, of apoplexy, on the 12th inst., aged sixty-eight. He had been in practice about forty years, and was a man of considerable energy and ability. He was for many years an alderman of the borough of Leominster, and thrice served the office of mayor.

'LAW SOCIETIES.

LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

At the meeting of this society, held at the Law Institution, Chancery-lane, on Tuesday evening last week, Mr. Edgar Harvie in the chair, the question for discussion was, "Is it desirable that the recommendations of the Judicature Commissioners should be adopted?" Mr. Warrington opened in the affirmative, and the society so decided by a considerable majority.

At the meeting held on Tuesday evening last, Mr. Hunter in the chair, the question for discussion was, "Can a married woman bind her separate property by an agreement not in writing, and not expressly referring to it?" (Owens v. Dickinson, Cr. and Phillips, 55) which was opened by Mr. Hargreaves in the affirmative, and the society so decided by a majority of five votes.

NOTICE.

The Forty-sixth Volume of the LAW TIMES, now complete, may be uniformly and strongly bound at the LAW TIMES Office for 5s. 6d.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

THE Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have decided that the DEAN of ARCHES is not at liberty to refuse letters of request from a bishop.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, we are glad to say, has declined to depart from the invariable practice of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of the Overend-Gurney prosecution, and the prosecution will, therefore, be conducted by counsel, or dropped altogether.

THE REV. DR. ROBINSON having resigned the Mastership of the Temple, this honourable office has been conferred upon the Rev. Dr. CHARLES J. VAUGHAN, vicar of Doncaster, where he has been for nine years the incumbent, and greatly distinguished himself by the zeal with which he discharged his parochial duties. He is a brother-in-law of Dr. STANLEY, the Dean of Westminster.

It is understood that the proposal of the Marquis of CLANRICARDE to apply a portion of the surplus funds of the Irish Church to the provision of manes and glebes for the Roman Catholic and Presbyterian Churches will be carried by a very large majority that will include the leading men of all parties. Disestablishment is conceded.
This statesmanlike resolution will settle the Irish question effectually and for ever.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE of the COMMON PLEAS seems determined to distinguish himself, but he has taken a most singular means of doing so.
It may be said without exaggeration that there are very few cases which come into his court in which he does not "hand down a suggestion."
His Lordship's suggestions invariably prove singularly efficacious, and during the sittings after Term in Middlesex and London the Common Pleas has risen, we should say, at least, half-a-dozen times before twelve o'clock. Quite possibly Lord Chief Justice BOVILL acts strictly in accordance with his own view of the best thing to be done for the interests of the parties, but it seems to a great degree ridiculous that day after day cases should be prepared for juries at vast expense, and that within a few moments of their appearance in court they should be converted into special cases, or relegated to the dismal delays of arbitration. We object to this singular action of the learned Judge, because counsel would find it a very delicate matter to proceed with a case in the teeth of a judicial suggestion for the withdrawal of a juror, and we are sure the public would prefer to dispense with the suggestions, and try their causes before the tribunal which they have adopted.

THE NEW LAW COURTS.

Two Parliamentary papers just issued contain the opinions of the surveyors on the comparative expenses and convenience of the rival sites. It appears, from this document, that the distance from Lincoln's inn to Howard-street is exactly double the distance to the Carey-street site, and the Temple is equi-distant from both. Mr.
HUNT reports that negotiations have been entered upon for disposing of part of the Carey-street site for chambers and offices, on terms very advantageous to the public. The cost of the building will not exceed a million.

A LIBEL.

THERE is one feature of our system of elections disgraceful to us as a people, and forming no small part of the heavy price we pay for the privilege of self-government. An election opens wide the flood-gates of envy, hatred, malice, and all un-charitableness, and the venom, repressed by public opinion at all other times, is now permitted to flow freely, and the cherished maligni-ties of neighbours, rivals, sects and parties find vent in print and in speech. Old grudges are now indulged in under shelter of the anonymous.

A "squib" is made the pretext for stabbing in the dark a friend of whose success there is envy, or of whose rivalry there is jealousy, and for weeks before and for months after the contest the town is one great conflict of abuse, in which none are spared, for which there is no statute of limitations, but the past of every man is sifted to find what there may be in his history or in that of any of his relations to supply material for abusing him.

Political difference is the pretence for this, though the motive is more often personal. A candidate is especially subjected to the ordeal, and it is hard indeed if something cannot be discovered which he or his father or his grandmother has done or said, out of which weapons cannot be wrought for attacks in squibs if not in speeches.
It is enough that he is the champion of the opposite party to justify the throwing at him of any quantity of dirt. But it is fair to say that this species of attack is usually limited to anonymous placards and the lowest class of newspapers. Respectable journals rarely indulge in them.

It was, therefore, with equal astonishment and disgust that the Profession read, in the Saturday Review of June 19, an assault upon Mr. DIGBY SEYMOUR, Q. C., such as has not disgraced the pages of any decent newspaper for twenty years; an attack such as would have been looked for in the Satirist of old, or in its modern imitator, the Queen's Messenger. We will not spread the libel by reprinting any part of it; enough to say that it rivalled in tone and malignancy an election placard, and could only have obtained a place in such a journal when its editor was absent or asleep. But the excuse for it is as bad as itself. Mr. SEYMOUR's offence was nothing more than that he was a candidate for Nottingham on independent principles, and would not swear allegiance to the Radical creed of his assailant. If not this, it was personal malignity; and for that there is still less excuse. The almost universal reprobation with which this uncalled-for libel has been received will, we trust, deter any future journal having a character to lose from indulging in electioneering attacks upon the characters of opposing candidates. It is a game at which two can play, a practice which will speedily provoke retort. How soon the habit may grow is seen in America, where all the newspapers do as the Saturday Review has done in the case of the Norwich election, and in a rivalry of zeal exhaust the language of abuse in assailing the candidates on the other side. It is ominous that the first adoption of the American system of political warfare should be by a journal of such standing as the Saturday Review, for it is an example that inferior newspapers will cite to justify their own misdeeds. As for Mr. SEYMOUR, it is impossible not to feel for him much sympathy, and with the Profession much indignation, at a wholly wanton and uncalled-for attack.
The incidents that are recalled had been forgotten and the errors of earlier judgment long ago forgiven. Their revival by a local partisan in the heat of a contest in Nottingham would have been unjustifiable; by a distant journalist writing in cold blood in London it is altogether inexcusable.

ARBITRATION.

A PERSON who signs himself "A Victim of Lawyers' delays," has furnished the readers of the Times with his opinion of the manner in which arbitrations before barristers are conducted. He condemns them in most unmeasured terms, and we do not for a moment purpose to defend them. We agree in condemning them, and we shall give our reasons; but, on the other hand, we shall suggest reforms and oppose most strongly any proposition to transfer the causes to the jurisdiction of what the Times' correspondent calls lay professional arbitrators.

First, as to the evils of the present system.
Arbitrations are usually given to barristers who have a considerable private practice and are of some standing. They have their ordinary appointments to keep in addition to the arbitra-tions; consequently, between the convenience of the arbitrator and of the respective counsel causes are frequently hung up for a period so long as to be a thorough scandal to the administration of the law. Now the question is what remedy is to be applied to this? There are at present some 4000 gentlemen at the Bar. Say that one-half are honorary members of the Profession, abroad, or in some other way incapacitated from actively exercising their avocations at home. That leaves 2000 barristers for whom work is to be found. But even divide that again and reduce the working Bar to 1000, and there is a force which ought to render it no difficult matter to provide for the dispatch of arbitrations with a reasonable degree of rapidity. Unfortunately, however, the choice of an arbitrator is usually left to the counsel engaged. An arbitration is a choice little bit of patronage of which Jones or Smith would be very glad. This patronage is frequently exercised by counsel engaged in causes upon a most benevolent principle. The choice very often falls upon a man with a large family, who has been long struggling against all the formidable difficulties which stand in the way of advancement at the Bar. This is very well and very laudable, but the result is that certain men are put into arbitrations whenever it is possible, and they are anxious to oblige those by whom the patronage has been conferred. Mutual courtesies result, to the intense inconvenience of the suitors. In our opinion it would be most desirable could these matters be placed entirely under the control of the judge before whom a cause is originally brought. But even then he should not be allowed to act according to mere caprice. Barristers of a certain standing and acknowledged efficiency should be allowed to put their names on the judge's list, and the arbitrations should be given in order, just as briefs are given at soup sessions. If this were carried out we should soon hear no more of delay, and men without connection might obtain the chance of bringing their abilities to the notice of the Profession.

Concerning the proposition to refer matters to lay professional arbitrators it may be safely said that no one who has had any experience of that class of tribunal would argue in favour of it. The writer of this article has had some experience, and in his opinion lay professional arbitrators are the least satisfactory judges which can be found. It is far easier for a trained legal mind to master the technicalities of engineering and the like than for an engineer or surveyor to learn the functions of a Judge and how to exercise them. In a recent case within our knowledge the arbitration had to be adjourned in order that the arbitrator might take a legal opinion as to the admissibility of certain evidence. If a lay professional man were assisted by a legal assessor the tribunal would be a very good one. But, on the other hand, a lawyer can always gain the necessary information in special cases as the cause proceeds. All that is required is a little explanation. Of this explanation lay professional men make a great deal, and frequently give it with a certain air of commiseration. But it is not necessary that the lawyer should penetrate far beneath the surface to be able to apprehend the bearing of the evidence given on either side.

Our conclusion is that in all cases lawyers will always make the best Judges. The only difficulty is how to prevent the accumulation of references in the hands of a few men. Scattered through the Profession, arbitrations might shame our courts. At present no such result can be looked for.

THE OVEREND AND GURNEY PROSECUTIONS.

THE Government persists in its refusal to pay the costs of this prosecution. The newspapers are very wrath, but the country will approve the resolution. Why should the poor taxpayers be compelled to pay the expenses of legal proceedings undertaken by a private person without asking their consent or approval. Mr. Thom is perfectly a volunteer in the matter. He was not more aggrieved than many thousands of others. If he is fighting the battle of the shareholders, surely they can levy from among themselves the costs of proceedings taken on their behalf. If he is fighting only on his own account, it is but just that he should bear the burden he has invited. Whether the Government should have prosecuted in the first instance is quite another question, upon both sides of which there is much to be said; but undoubtedly it would be a most dangerous precedent to permit private persons to commence prosecutions, and then to go to the public purse for the costs which they have voluntarily incurred. What between the love of notoriety in the client, and the pleasant prospect of indefinite bills of costs on the part of the lucky solicitor whom it might please him to patronise, there would be very soon a crop of prosecutions to harass the citizen and tax the public purse. Mr. Bruce has exercised a very wise discretion, as usual with him, and to Mr. Thom will be left the conduct of his own case.

SHERIFFS AND THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.

ONE more case has arisen to illustrate the unfortunate position of sheriffs since the passing of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. The various cases decided on the question of a sheriff's withdrawal on the production of a certificate of the registration of a trust-deed must be familiar to our readers. The case of Ames v. Colnaghi (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 327) is the most useful as extending the doctrine laid down in Lloyd v. Harrison (14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 799). Ames v. Colnaghi lays it down that it is the duty of a sheriff to discharge a debtor from custody upon his producing a certificate under the hand of the chief registrar and the seal of the Bankruptcy Court of the due registration and filing of a composition deed made by him with his creditors under the 192nd section of the Act of 1861, notwithstanding notice to the sheriff of the invalidity of the deed.

That case establishes the law so far as regards the discharge of a debtor who has been arrested. The recent case of Godwin v. Stone, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 711, Ex., was an action against a sheriff for not arresting a judgment-debtor on a ca. sa. The defendant pleaded that a deed had been executed by the judgment-debtor which had exempted him from arrest. To this it was replied that the deed was a deed which was pleadable in the action in which judgment had been obtained, but had not been pleaded. The sole question was, therefore, whether that fact was sufficient to disentitle the defendant to rely upon the deed?

Manifestly, the first point to be settled in such a case is as to the means of knowledge which the sheriff has. Counsel for the defendants urged that it was impossible for him to know whether a deed which was not pleaded was nevertheless pleadable. The certificate of registration contains the date of the deed; and the ca. sa. contains the date of the judgment. It may be argued from this that the sheriff would be informed that the date of the deed was anterior to the date of the judgment, and consequently that he ought to infer that the deed, if any defence, would have been pleaded as a bar to the action on which judgment had been obtained. So, at least, the Court of Exchequer held, but not without hesitation. The cases which forced the Court so to decide are those so well known to all our readers, of Dignam v. Bailey and Rossi v. Bailey. The former of these cases followed Williams v. Rose, in which it was held that a certificate of registration does not, by virtue of sect. 198, protect the debtor from arrest for debts not bound by the deed, nor the sheriff in releasing him, at least without due inquiry. But there the judgment was recovered, and the debt became due after the date of the deed, and the sheriff had notice of the fact. So in Dignam v. Bailey the debt did not accrue until after the date of the deed. "Whether," said Lush, J., "the sheriff had the means of knowing that the plaintiff's debt was discharged or not cannot, we think, affect the plaintiff's right." That is to say, that if the sheriff thought the debt had been paid he would still be liable for the escape. "But," added his Lordship, "we cannot help observing that, as the ca. sa. does contain the date of the judgment and the date of the deed, the sheriff had knowledge of all that is alleged in Williams v. Rose over and above what is alleged in the replication in this case." The replication in this case stated merely that the cause of action in question arose after the execution, &c., of the composition deed; whilst the replication in Williams v. Rose alleged that the deed was registered on a certain date, and that this was so stated in the certificate; that judgment was obtained on a certain day, and that it was so stated in the ca. sa.; that the defendant had notice that the judgment was obtained for a debt which became due after the registration and certificate, and that the plaintiffs were not creditors of the debtor at the time of the making or registration of the deed; and that the defendant did not take due care to ascertain these facts. Therefore it may be taken that a simple replication that the cause of action arose after the execution of the deed is sufficient to embrace all these particulars. In Rossi v. Bailey, the decision was, that when the deed is pleadable and the debtor neglects to plead it he cannot set it up afterwards to defeat the execution. And the deduction is, of course, that if the debtor cannot set it up it is no defence to the sheriff who refuses to arrest.

The case of Godwin v. Stone is the first in which the question has arisen in an action against the sheriff for not arresting. Chief Baron Kelly said he felt bound by the authority of the decided cases, but he expressed his opinion that thereby the sheriff is put in a position in which no public officer ought to be placed. He considered it unreasonable that merely because of some matters being alleged, the truth of which he has no means of immediately ascertaining, he should be called upon to execute the writ at his peril, and that the proper course would be for the plaintiff to apply to the Court of Bankruptcy under sect. 198, for leave to execute process, because in a case where the debtor had neglected to plead the deed when it might have been pleaded, that court would clearly give such leave.

Baron Bramwell remarked upon the fact that there is no clause in the statute which says that these deeds may be pleaded, and nothing in the 198th section of the Act of 1861 to give any effect to them apart from the agreement between the debtor and creditors. Not being a deed which was pleadable, he was strongly inclined to think that if the deed were one which was not in its nature pleadable, it was not one which would protect the debtor from process, for, if not pleadable, it cannot be because it was not a deed by which it was agreed that the creditors should be barred. And, finally, he held that there was sufficient notice in the writ and the certificate to put the sheriff on his guard, and that if the deed could not be pleaded the sheriff's proper course was to take the debtor and leave him to apply for his discharge.

Upon a review of all the authorities it would appear clear that a sheriff should not arrest a debtor, and, if in possession, should withdraw where a certificate of registration of a deed is produced and there is nothing to show that the debt accrued after the date of the deed as mentioned in the certificate. But where there is anything by which he may conclude that the debt accrued after the date of the deed, he should execute the process with which he is armed.

THE BANKRUPTCY COMMISSIONERS.

WE confess that we have been somewhat surprised that the Bankruptcy Commissioners have so long and so quietly sat under the provision of the Bankruptcy Bill of the present year, and we scarcely knew which most to admire, their contentment at retiring into private life, or their resignation to the will of Parliament. This state of things however no longer exists, as the learned gentlemen have issued a protest against being compelled to retire upon two thirds of their salaries.

That this protest is most reasonable no one will be prepared to dispute. The only marvel that it was not made long ago. Clearly, however, it would have been dangerous for an individual to initiate the movement, there being a provision in the Bill that the Lord Chancellor may, with the approval of the Commissioners of the Treasury, under special circumstances, award a sum beyond the two thirds of the salary, and it is tolerably clear that a refractory commissioner would find it very difficult to persuade the Lord Chancellor or the Commissioners of the Treasury that there were any special circumstances in his case. This appears to be the feeling now existing, if the protest has been issued without signature and may express the views of all or none of the commissioners. Their case, however, is undoubtedly a strong one.

It is pointed out that by virtue of the Act creating commissioners in bankruptcy they stand upon the same footing as the common law Judges, their earliest privilege, that of retaining their office quamdiu se bene gesserint, being granted by statute 12 & 13 Will 3, c. 2. This being a how are these dignitaries, thus specially protected and supported by statute, to be dealt with? They may be compelled, as already stated, to resign their offices, and submit to muneted of one-third of their income. But this is a trifle compared to what follows. A commissioner is only to get his two-thirds subject to the condition that the Lord Chancellor may nominate him to any judicial office for which he may be deemed fit; and if he declines or neglects to execute the duties of the office satisfactorily, being in a fit state of health, he shall forfeit his right to the compensation, unless he shall satisfy the Lord Chancellor that the office is not suitable to his position, regard being had to his former office. Therefore they may be placed in positions wholly new to them, and for which their special duties in bankruptcy have unfitted them, the new duties may be disagreeable, irksome, and uncongenial, yet if there is any wilful rebellion they positively forfeit the right to the compensation. The effect of this enactment is strongly stated in the protest before us, namely, that a commissioner, who, under the solemn pledge of an Act of Parliament, has accepted office because he cannot be removed from it, except for an offence committed, and after a fair trial—is in fact removed without any trial—placed upon two thirds of his salary—and if he then by professional or other employment endeavours, in his declining years, to make up his salary to its former amount, he is liable at any time to be called upon to throw up the employment and accept an appointment at home or abroad, unless he can satisfy the Lord Chancellor for the time being that the office is not suitable to his position.

So far as regards the Commissioners, and we think their case is hard enough. Then as regards the public. The case of the public, says the protest, is worse even than that of the Commissioners. "The precedent, if adopted," we are told, "will be applicable to the case of every Superior Court and every Judge of such court, when the Government of the day desires to make a change or remove any obnoxious Judge." We recognise the precedent, but we do not see that it could be used for the purposes referred to. The Bankruptcy Bill proposes to sweep away all the Commissioners to make way for a new system, and it is somewhat illogical that such a precedent could be used to justify the removal of "any" obnoxious Judge. Moreover, the days of "obnoxious" Judges are gone by, and will probably never return. We admit, however, that "the principle is exactly the same—the offices are held on the same tenure." And again there is no doubt that this treatment of the Commissioners being sanctioned no objection could be made to the similar treatment of the Judges. "If," says the protest, "upon carrying into effect the proposals of the Judicature Commission it should be deemed desirable to reduce the number of Judges, to remove them from London, or to make any other alteration, the precedent established in this case can be quoted as distinctly establishing the principle, and having the authority of Parliament. In fact, the tenure of the judicial office is completely altered."

And there is another aspect in which this question is to be regarded. The gentlemen who have been appointed commissioners have left, in the majority of instances, very respectable emoluments derived from private practice at the Bar. Those they relinquished to accept a particular office tenable for life—a certainty, not determinable during good behaviour, representing during life an income of a fixed amount, calling for the discharge of particular duties and residence in a known locality. All these things are considerations in the mind of any man accepting an appointment, and it is, in our opinion, a breach of faith on the part of Parliament to subject these gentlemen to conditions which they would never have submitted to had they been named when the appointments were offered. What Government has done is really this: It has induced a number of barristers to give up private practice which they can never resume, and to accept offices freehold in their nature, and certain in their incidents. The barristers have performed their part of the obligation, but being now in the power of the Government, Government refuses to hold to the original conditions of the contract, and with the assistance of Parliament substitutes a new contract for the old, and says that unless the commissioners choose to accept it they must take the consequences, and forfeit their right to compensation.

Now we defy the ATTORNEY-GENERAL, or any other lawyer in or out of the House of Commons, to justify such a course of procedure as this. It would not be allowed by a court of law, judging of a matter between private persons, and the case is stronger where the Government is a party. And we are inclined to agree with the terms of the protest that "a breach of faith with regard to one of the conditions will as certainly produce its effect as a breach of another. The introduction of the element of uncertainty, if deliberately determined upon and adopted in future cases, will in itself compel the public either to pay a higher price for the services or be content with services of an inferior kind; but if to this be added the clear breach of faith in regard to any condition, the effect will be as certain as that those countries, which preserve implicit good faith with their creditors, can borrow money at a rate of interest one-half or more lower than those which disregard it."

The officers of the courts are in pretty much the same position as the Commissioners. Those officers accepted office as capable of being held by them during good behaviour.

The conclusion of the protest is very cogent. It points out that "in all cases up to the present time, Parliament has always, on the abolition of an office, acted upon the principle, manifestly and indisputably just, that it was the duty of the country to perform its part of the contract. Out of the many instances may be cited the recent cases of the Masters in Chancery and their Chief Clerks, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 80, ss. 5 and 46; all the holders of freehold offices, or offices for life, or during good behaviour in the Court of Chancery, whose offices were abolished by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 45; the Commissioners of the Insolvent Debtors' Court in Ireland, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 60, s. 83; Masters in Chancery, &c., in Ireland; Court of Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867; the Commissioners of the Insolvent Debtor's Court. Bankruptcy Act 1861. And that this principle was recognised by the law officers and advisers of the Crown is best shown by reference to the present Bill, as it was prepared and indeed allowed to stand, until the last three clauses were considered in committee of the House of Commons."

And what will the country gain by this imperial breach of contract? We are told that the amount saved, even if the Treasury in every case refused their approval to the Lord Chancellor's increasing the compensation, would in the case of the commissioners amount to less than 5000*l.* a year, the recipients of which would be, with one or two exceptions, men considerably over seventy years of age, the others having each held bankruptcy offices for more than twenty-seven years. The expense in the cases of the remaining officers of the courts (many of whom are old men) would be 8000*l.* a year, or less, according to the number transferred to the new court. There would be no charge upon the public, since the funds which have been produced by the labours of these officers, and which are chargeable with their salaries, will probably, after payment of all charges thereon, yield a surplus to the public of nearly 1,000,000*l.* sterling.

On every ground of justice and policy, we would urge the reconsideration of the Government proposal. There is yet time for the matter to be put right in the Lords, and we hope the Law Lords will not forget the duty which they owe to the gentlemen who have served the country so well by applying as satisfactorily as possible the most difficult legislative machinery ever invented.

SALARIES OF THE COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

We regret to observe that the termination of the discussion of this subject in Parliament is adverse to the claims of the Judges. As a matter of policy we regret it, but we think there is cause to reprehend the line of argument adopted by the opponents of Mr. HIBBERT's motion.

To briefly recapitulate the arguments for and against the proposed augmentation, we find that Mr. HIBBERT bases the claim of the Judges on the undeniable increase of business, and the growing importance of the duties devolving upon them. Mr. Cross, in supporting the proposition, pointed out that it is desirable that men of the highest procurable ability should be induced to compete for County Court Judgeships, and that the bankruptcy jurisdiction about to be cast upon them entitles them (the Judges) to consideration.

On the other side, we find the arguments to be these. The County Courts are not self-supporting; a balance remains to be paid annually by the public, amounting to 233,000*l.* In the next place Mr. AYRTON said that the salaries given to County Court Judges are usually double what the gentlemen appointed earned whilst at the Bar. Thirdly, it was urged that the Judges do not deserve an increase, because they live away from their districts in many instances, and are not as industrious as they might be.

The argument that the courts do not support themselves we admit to be forcible, but it was never found in any business establishment that it was wise, in order to make a concern pay, to cut down the salaries of the employees. There can be no doubt of that, and the same principle applies to the public service. The next argument, which is an argumentum ad hominem, refutes itself. Because the men now appointed are men who could not make 1000*l.* a year at the Bar, it is not necessary to offer salaries beyond the amount at present fixed. We will take this in connection with the other remaining argument, which is, that the Judges are not over industrious, and live far away from their districts in some instances. Now, in this latter observation, we discover an answer to that which precedes it. The salaries offered do not tempt men who could make moderately large incomes at the Bar; the men thus tempted are not of a good class, or, rather, not of the best class; therefore, says Mr. AYRTON, don't increase their salaries.

A piece of more deplorably weak logic we never met with. If there is cause to complain of the existing Judges, would it not be well to take the only sure means of raising the standard? Obviously, the increase of salaries is the surest means. The Government, however, think it wiser to have an inferior staff of Judges and save a few thousand pounds. Be it so—for the present. We must wait for a more liberally-disposed administration to reverse the verdict which has just been pronounced.

THE PRESENTMENT OF CHEQUES.

It is remarkable that after the very considerable amount of litigation which has arisen in connection with cheques, the law should not yet be understood and closely adhered to by men of business. More particularly should we have considered that all difficulties on the subject of presentment for payment would have been avoided.

In two recent cases questions have arisen relating to presentment, the one in the Court of Exchequer and the other in the Court of Queen's Bench. The former is entitled Hopkins v. Ware, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 668. The action was brought against an executor of one Robert Ware on a promissory note made by Robert Ware.

The testator, it appeared, borrowed of plaintiff 250*l.* on his promissory note. On the 9th May 1868, the testator being then dead, G. L. Lang, the defendant's solicitor, forwarded to the plaintiff his own cheque for 258*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, the amount due on the note for principal and interest, and the plaintiff returned her receipt for the amount. She, however, retained the cheque till the 6th of June, when it was forwarded for presentation. On the 9th it was presented, and was dishonoured. Notice of dishonour was given to the plaintiff on the following day, and application was afterwards made to him for payment, which he refused.

It further appeared, from the evidence of the manager of the bank, where Lang kept his account, that on the 13th May that account was overdrawn to the amount of 1287*l.*, and that between the 13th May and the 6th June he was never in funds to meet the cheque. The manager also stated that the account had for some years been overdrawn without adequate security, but that the overdraft was at this time covered to a considerable amount by securities which had been brought in by Lang, without any request from the bank, in Dec. 1867; and also that Lang had banked there since 1859, and that no cheque of his had ever been dishonoured. He further stated that if the cheque had been presented, he would not have paid it without communicating with Lang, but that he could not say whether it would or would not have been paid in fact. Between the 13th May and the 6th June various sums were paid in by Lang, and cheques of his, including one of 200*l.*, honoured—the result being that on the latter day the overdraft had increased by 261*l.* It was also proved by defendant that Lang had in his hands, at the time the cheque was forwarded by him, 166*l.* 11*s.* belonging to the estate, and that on the 16th May the defendant paid to Lang, at his request, the balance of 91*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

The learned Judge, at the trial, found that, "had the cheque been presented at the time, in the ordinary due course after it was drawn and sent to the plaintiff, there was a reasonable chance that it would have been paid, but no certainty of it;" and thereupon he directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiff, reserving leave to the defendant to move to set it aside and enter it for himself, on the ground that the cheque, under the circumstances proved at the trial, operated in payment of the plaintiff's claim, and that it was not duly presented for payment, nor was any due notice of dishonour given to the defendant, or to reduce the verdict to such amount as the court should think right.

Thus it will be seen that the question turned upon whether the delay in presenting the cheque was unreasonable under the circumstances. The fact that this was so shows how necessary, or rather how wise, it is to act in the presentment of cheques independently of the surrounding circumstances, and to use diligence, whatever excuse there may be for laches in this respect. As remarked by Baron Bramwell, in giving judgment, it is very difficult, as a general rule, to draw the line between what is reasonable and what is an unreasonable time for presentment, and, consequently, the facts in each particular case must be regarded, "for it is not difficult," added the learned Baron, "to say in some cases that they are on the one side or the other." On the facts of the case it may be well to notice what his Lordship said. "It is clear to my mind," he remarked, "that in the present case three weeks is an unreasonable time for which to have held back this cheque, and I have no hesitation, therefore, in holding, without more precisely defining what is a reasonable time, that this cheque was kept by the plaintiff beyond the necessary and reasonable time; and I find, also, that two losses accrued to the defendant in consequence of such delay, namely, first, the loss of the chance of the cheque's being paid; and, secondly, the loss of the possibility of his getting something out of Lang by arrangement with him had it been presented before Lang had absconded, and whilst the bank was still honouring his cheques. I find these two losses, and I find that the cheque was kept by the plaintiff, as if it had been a payment by Lang and not by the defendant, and that she has, by so doing, made the cheque her own, and has discharged the defendant from all further liability in respect of it."

Baron Cleasby, the other judge who delivered judgment, said nothing on the question of reasonableness, save as echoing the expression of Baron Bramwell.

The second case referred to, of Prideaux v. Cridde, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 695, related to presentation by a country banker through a London clearing house, the short decision being in the words of the head-note, that a country banker who receives from a customer a cheque upon a banker in another town is not bound to send it to that town for presentment, but may send it to his London agent to pass through the clearing house. It appeared in this case that the cheque was passed through Agra and Masterman's Bank, which stopped before the cheque was paid, and consequently the amount was lost. But the decision was a simple one. No delay arose from passing the cheque through the clearing house of the London bank. This would have sufficed to settle the matter, but Mr. Justice Lush added that a banker could not be expected to have an agent in every town in the country.

There are two cases in our reports analogous to the foregoing which were cited on different sides of the argument, and in the earliest case, that of Hare v. Henty, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. at p. 364, Chief Justice Erle discusses the question of reasonableness. He said that if the case had rested on the question of reasonable time, the usage of eighteen months in the absence of anything to the contrary, was good evidence of what was reasonable, and he refused to recognise any legal duty to send the cheque to the drawer by the first post. "No authority affirming the existence of such a duty has been found," he said, "and it would be unreasonable to require that the holder of a cheque should uniformly part with the possession of the document proving his right to be paid, and trust to the party who has the obligation of paying it; and though such a course might be adopted between parties corresponding on mutual confidence, and trusting to each other, each party must have the option of bringing it to an end if he should require it." In this case the law laid down by Lord Ellenborough in Rickford v. Ridge, 2 Camp. 537, was adopted. There the plaintiffs, bankers at Aylesbury, had discounted for the defendant a cheque on Smith, Payne, and Smith, in London, at noon of the 13th June. On the 14th the plaintiffs sent it to Praed and Co., their London bankers, for presentment. Praed and Co. received it on the 14th, and sent it for presentment on the 15th, when payment was refused. Notice of dishonour was given on the 16th, and an action was brought to recover the money paid in discounting. It was held that the cheque was presented in time; that the bank receiving the cheque on the 13th was not bound to send it off till the 14th, and the bank receiving it on the 14th was not bound to present it before the 15th. Chief Justice Erle expressed the opinion that the rule so established applies not only as between the parties to a cheque, but as between bankers and a customer, unless circumstances exist from which a contract or duty on the part of the banker to present earlier, or to defer presentment to a later period, can be inferred.

The other case referred to, Bailey v. Bodenham, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 422, involved more particularly the question whether sending a cheque by letter was a due presentment. The plaintiffs sent the cheque, which was the subject-matter of dispute to the City Bank, their London agents, by the post of Friday, the 8th May, to be presented by them to Messrs. Barclay and Co., the London agents of the country bank of Messrs. Morgan and Adams, of Ross, upon whom the cheque was drawn, through the country clearing-house. Morgan and Adams had, however, closed their account with Barclay and Co. on the 7th May, and the City Bank, therefore, sent the cheque by post on Saturday, May 9, to Morgan and Adams at Ross, where it arrived on Sunday morning, May 10. On Monday there was a run on Morgan and Adams, and the cheque was put aside by them until the following Friday, the 15th May, when it was returned to the City Bank through the post. The City Bank received it on May 16, and by the same day's post returned it to the plaintiffs, who, having received it on Sunday, May 17, sent notice of dishonour by the post of the 19th May to the defendant, who received it on the 20th. Chief Justice Erle there said that there was evidence that it was a reasonable course for a country bank to send a cheque to the London agents of another country bank for payment. But, being presented at the City Bank, did the City Bank use due diligence? He held that a sending by post might be a good presentment, but that there ought to be a notice of dishonour if the money were not paid. "Either," said the Chief Justice, "the sending by post to Morgan and Co. was no presentment, and this cheque has never therefore been presented, or, if it is a due presentment, then on the 11th it was dishonoured, and no notice of dishonour was given till the 19th," and that he held to be a want of reasonable diligence. Mr. Justice Byles doubted whether presentment by post was a good presentment, but assuming that it could be, he said that not only under the circumstances was there no presentment to a person who had a right to hand over the cheque, but the presentment was made to a person who had given up paying through his London agents.

The cases and opinions which we have cited will, we trust, make the question of the presentment of cheques as clear as it can be made, not only as relates to the parties to cheques, but as between bankers and their customers.

BANKRUPTCY IN THE COUNTY COURT.

It is somewhat unfortunate that just when it is proposed to confer large bankruptcy jurisdiction on the County Courts, a Judge of one of those courts should have erred in a matter of discretion. We refer to a case of Ex parte Rose, re Rose, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 688, in which a question arose as to the belief of a debtor as to the amount of his debts.

There the bankrupt filed his petition for adjudication of bankruptcy in the County Court, at Wolverhampton, and was adjudicated a bankrupt. On filing his petition he made the usual affidavit that he verily believed that his debts did not exceed 300*l.*, and in his statement of his debts, filed on the 5th April, he said that Levi York was his only creditor, and that the debt due to him was 290*l.*, described as "amount of a verdict obtained by this creditor against me at the late Gloucester assizes, for the maintenance of his daughter, costs of such action, and her subsequent maintenance to the present date." The costs of the action were on the 13th April taxed at the sum of 85*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and the debt ultimately proved by York was 322*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, which included 12*l.* 10*s.* for maintenance of the bankrupt's wife up to the date of the filing of the petition. From the evidence it appeared that before filing the petition the bankrupt consulted his solicitor as to what would be the probable amount of the costs of the action, and that they estimated them at 55*l.* Adding this to the 225*l.*, and adding also 10*l.* for the maintenance of his wife subsequently to the action, the bankrupt estimated his debts at 290*l.*

Mr. Skinner, the County Court Judge ordered the adjudication of the bankrupt to be annulled, not being satisfied that at the time of filing his petition he could have had a reasonable and bona fide belief that his debts did not exceed 300*l.* His reasons for this conclusion are stated in his judgment. His Honour said: "No one has a right to hazard his oath without ascertaining the fact with the utmost certainty, which the young man could have done in this case by waiting until it came before the master for taxation. He has not done this, but has acted on the speculative opinion of his attorneys."

We are sorry to differ from the reasons upon which a learned County Court Judge bases his decision, but in this instance we certainly agree with the Court of Appeal. Lord Justice Selwyn asked how it was possible for the bankrupt to estimate the probable amount of the costs of the action, except by a reference to persons experienced in such matters. It is perfectly clear that he could take no better course. But his Honour did not annul the adjudication on this ground, but on the ground that the bankrupt ought to have waited for the taxation of the costs by the master before filing his petition. On this point we cannot do better than cite the Lord Justice. He said that "whatever might be the opinion of the court as to the policy of the law, its duty was to administer it as it stood, and the Act gave the appellant a right to file his petition when he did, and he was compelled at that time to estimate the amount of his debts, and, according to his Honour's own decision, the appellant had then good grounds for believing that the total amount of his debts was under 300*l.* There would have been considerable delay if the appellant had waited to file his petition till after the costs of the action were taxed. If he was bound, in this case, to wait till the costs were taxed, then it was difficult to see where the line was to be drawn. Take the case of a debtor who had creditors holding mortgage securities for their debts. If the decision appealed from in this case were correct, it would be difficult to see why a debtor so situated would not be bound to wait to file his petition until his creditors had realised all their securities, so that he might know exactly what was the unsecured balance due to each creditor."

REMITTED ACTIONS IN THE COUNTY COURT.

The question whether the Judge of a County Court is the proper person to certify that a case was one fit to be brought in the Superior Court, has been decided by the Court of Common Pleas.

The point was decided in the case of Taylor v. Cass. The section of the old Act which deals with the remitted actions is sect. 26 of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108. That Act says that, "Where in any action of contract brought in a Superior Court the claim indorsed upon the writ does not exceed 50*l.*, or where such claim, although it originally exceeded 50*l.*, is reduced by payment into court, payment, an admitted set-off or otherwise, to a sum not exceeding 50*l.*, a judge of a Superior Court, on the application of either party after issue joined, may, in his discretion, and on such terms as he shall think fit, order that the cause be tried in any County Court which he shall name; and thereupon the plaintiff shall lodge with the registrar of such court such order and the issue. And the Judge of such court shall appoint a day for the hearing, &c. And after such hearing the registrar shall certify the result to the master's office of such Superior Court, and judgment in accordance with such certificate may be signed in such Superior Court."

Then, as to costs, sect. 5 of the Act of 1867 says that, "If in an action commenced in the Superior Courts, the plaintiff shall, recover a sum not exceeding 20*l.* in an action founded on contract, he shall not be entitled to any costs of suit, unless the Judge certify on the record that there was sufficient reason for bringing such action in such Superior Court."

It was argued upon these sections that the County Court Judge had no power to grant a certificate—first, because he had no record before him; and, secondly, because, under the Act of 1846, he is only a kind of arbitrator. The court held, however, that the issue and order of the superior Judge formed a sufficient record upon which to certify, and that the Judge of the County Court being the only Judge who could certify, he being the Judge who tries the case, was authorised to give the certificate.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Thursday, June 24, the law Lords present were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chelmsford, and Lord Colonsay. The following judges attended:—Justices Blackburn, Mellor, Keating, Brett, and Baron Cleasby. The case of The Attorney-General v. Dohin and others was heard, raising the question whether a writ of fi. fa. can be lawfully executed within the precincts of Hampton Court Palace. The defendants were, in Feb. 1865, the sheriff of Middlesex and his officers, against whom an information of intrusion was filed under the following circumstances:—A writ of fi. fa., issuing out of the Common Pleas at the suit of Ferdinand Hirschfeld, against the goods of Lord Henry Gordon had been lodged in the office of the sheriff of Middlesex. A warrant to levy the amount was made out, and accordingly the sheriff's officers, on 10th Feb. 1865, entered a suite of apartments in Hampton Court Palace, occupied by Lady Henry Gordon under the Queen's permission, and seized the furniture and goods. In consequence of remonstrances made by Lady Henry Gordon, and on getting an undertaking from Lord Henry that they should re-enter at any time if they had a right to do so, the officers withdrew, but a few days afterwards re-entered, and sold the goods and furniture in satisfaction of the writ. Nothing was, however, obtained, Lord Henry Gordon having become bankrupt. In the Exchequer it was held by Barons Martin and Bramwell (Chief Baron Kelly dissenting) that the privilege attaching to Royal Palaces of exemption from the execution of civil process therein does not now belong to Hampton Court, since it has not been occupied by the Royal family for more than a century, and has been appropriated to other purposes than those of a royal residence. Chief Baron Kelly, on the other hand, considered that Hampton Court retained the privilege, because there was a constructive occupation by the Queen, through her servants, and because the sovereign might at any moment resume residence. The Exchequer Chamber, being equally divided, affirmed the judgment of the Exchequer. The case before the courts below is reported in 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 323; and 18 Id. 829; 36 L. J. 157, Ex.; and 37 Id. 150. The Attorney-General, with whom were Sir J. B. Karslake and Mr. MaMahon, now argued for the Crown that Hampton Court has the privilege claimed. It was not necessary that the sovereign should actually reside, but a constructive residence by royal servants was sufficient. There was nothing to prevent the Queen from taking up her residence at Hampton Court; for though not ready for her immediate reception, it would soon be made so. A great portion of the palace, it was true, was occupied by various families, under the Queen's permission, but their occupation could be at any moment determined. The privilege had been held to belong to Kensington and Holyrood palaces, and the reasons of those decisions applied equally to the palace of Hampton Court. Mr. Quain, Q. C., and Mr. Day, for the respondents, urged that the privilege was that of the person, not of the building, and that it belonged to a palace, as the residence of royalty. Considering the present circumstances of Hampton Court, it could no longer fairly be considered a royal residence. It was now applied to other purposes, and it might be presumed that, at least at the time of the execution of the writ, the Queen had no intention of residing there. The cases of Kensington and Holyrood were different, for each was fitted and furnished, and might have been at any moment resided in by the Sovereign. The state apartments at Hampton Court were opened to the public, and were used as a picture gallery, and in no way fit for residence. The authorities adduced to will be found in 16 L. T. Rep. N. S.

525. The House at the close of the arguments referred this question to the judges: Whether under the circumstances stated in the special case (see 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 524), Hampton Court Palace has the privilege claimed? The judges took time to consider.

The House on the same day (Thursday, June 24) reversed the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in Gann v. Johnson and others. This was an action brought by the appellant against the respondents, the officers and servants of the Company of Free Fishers and Dredgers of Whitstable, for converting an iron chain of the plaintiff's. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff owed a toll of one shilling to the company for having anchored his vessel on certain lands covered by the sea, the soil of which belonged to the company, and that the defendants, acting under the authority of the company, seized the iron chain as a reasonable distress, on the plaintiff's refusal to pay the said toll. The plaintiff contended that the company were not entitled to the toll, nor had a right to detain, on the grounds chiefly, that the plaintiff's vessel was anchored below low-water mark, and that there the soil of the sea was vested in the Crown, and could not be granted to a subject; that the company could not rely on a grant of the manor of Whitstable, because the right, if ever vested in the lord of that manor, had been extinguished on the division of the manor into two parts, terrestrial and marine; and that under the Cinque Ports Charter of Edward IV. the plaintiff was exempt. The Court of Common Pleas held that the company had the right to the toll, and to enforce payment by distress; and in answer to the objection that there could not exist a legal right to take toll for anchoring on ground always covered by the sea, because the public have a right to navigate the seas, and incidentally the right of anchorage on land thereunder, the court said that the Crown might have granted the soil, and it might well have been that the right to take toll for anchorage was granted also, especially when the fact that the ground was an oyster-bed was considered: (31 L. J., N. S., 376, C. P.) This judgment was affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 263. The House of Lords now reversed the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, on the authority of Gann v. Free Fishers of Whitstable, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 150, in which the same point had been raised in an action by the company to recover the tolls (from a brother of the appellant in the former case), and the House held, that the ownership of the bed of the sea by the Crown is subservient to the paramount right of the subject to free navigation, and the right to anchor is a necessary incident to the right of navigation; that the grantee of the Crown would take the soil subject to the same public right of navigation; and that the company, though a grant of the soil and immemorial user were proved, could not sustain their claim, having failed to prove that some consideration was given for the right to levy tolls, or a corresponding advantage to the public, such as the right of haven.

On Friday, June 25, and on Monday last, the appeal of Foreman v. The Company of Free Fishers and Dredgers of Whitstable was argued. In this case a similar claim by the company to anchorage tolls was made, and the Court of Common Pleas (see 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 747), held that the company having proved a maintenance of buoys, beacons and lights to mark the bounds between the oyster-beds and the anchorage ground, the advantages which the public derive therefrom, were a sufficient consideration to support the claim of the company according to the decision of the House of Lords in Gann v. The Free Fishers, &c., of Whitstable (ubi sup.). A majority of the Exchequer Chamber affirmed this judgment, the court considering that though the maintenance of the lights, &c., was probably chiefly for the protection of the oyster-beds, yet incidentally it was also for the guidance of vessels to safe anchorage, and that this was sufficient consideration to support a right immemorially enjoyed (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735). Mr. Prentice, Q. C., for the appellant, and Mr. Mellish, Q. C., for the respondents, now argued the case before the House of Lords, relying on authorities which will be found in the argument before the Common Pleas (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 749). The House referred the question to the judges, and the further consideration was then adjourned sine die.

On Monday and Tuesday last, Castrique v. Imrie was argued. The facts of the case were briefly these:—Claus, a British subject, and the duly registered owner of a British ship, transferred her while on her voyage to Harrison by bill of sale. Meanwhile the master of the ship, Benson, had drawn a bill for necessities at Melbourne on Claus in England, which, the latter refusing to accept, was dishonoured. The ship having touched at Havre, the holder of the dishonoured bill endorsed it to Trotteux and Co., French subjects, resident at Havre, who thereupon commenced proceedings in the Court of the Tribunal of Commerce there against Benson and against the ship.

Benson did not dispute the claim, and in pursuance of the judgment of the above court the ship was seized and sold, the buyer being Imrie, the respondent. Castrique, having become entitled by assignment to the above bill of sale, brought an action against Imrie to recover the ship, and it was held by the Exchequer Chamber, reversing the judgment of the Common Pleas, that the plaintiff could not recover, for that the proceedings in the French court were in rem, and consequently the sale under its decree passed the property in the ship. The case will be found reported in 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180, and 4 Ib. 143.

The Queen on the Prosecution of the Mayor and Corporation of Southampton v. The Port and Harbour Commissioners of Southampton (see 30 L. J., N. S., 234 Q. B.) was argued on Wednesday and Thursday last.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

The Judicial Committee was occupied with the hearing of Indian appeals, during all the days of sitting from Thursday, June 24, till Tuesday last. None of these require notice.

On Wednesday the case of Brett v. Ellaiya was heard, which was in some respects a singular one. This was an appeal from the High Court of Madras. The original suit was brought by the respondent, a holder of four shares of a village called Neikarapatti, against the appellant, a collector of the Tillah, to recover a sum of upwards of 300 rupees, collected from him in three years (from 1853 to 1856) in excess of the permanent assessment with which his shares had been originally assessed. The above village was held under a religious tenure, called Aghaharam, i.e., a maintenance allowed to the Brahmins, and Government, from motives of charity, allowed the original shareholders of the village to hold the lands on very easy terms, at an assessment much below the survey rates. This favourable assessment was called Jodigy. In 1852, however, the payments of Aghaharam having fallen much into arrear, the village was attached, and, subsequently, on nonpayment, was re-assessed at the full survey rates on the usual conditions of lands not held on tenures of a religious or charitable nature. The respondent was not proved to have been one of the defaulting shareholders, but he was required to pay the increased assessment, and it was to recover the excess so paid that the suit was brought. Mr. Forsyth, Q. C., and Mr. Herman C. Merivale, having argued ex parte for the appellant, the committee reserved judgment.

Giraud v. Paterson, on appeal from the Consular Court of Constantinople, was heard on the same day. The appellant brought an action, originally in the English Consular Court at Smyrna, on the ground that certain farms near Smyrna had been demised to him by the respondent, and that before forfeiture the latter re-entered, seized, and sold the stock, &c., and retained the proceeds. 9000*l.* was claimed as damages. Appellant entered under the above lease, and cultivated the lands in the manner usually adopted, and with the crops usually grown in Asia Minor. Disputes, however, soon arose principally concerning the rights of peasant labour, the peasants having refused to yield the appellant the labour that they were bound to give in lieu of rent. The peasants also refused to pay for pasture on the appellant's lands. The peasants alleged that these pasture-rents could not be leased to the appellant. It was in consequence of these disputes that the above re-entry of the respondent took place. The committee, after hearing counsel for the appellant, dismissed the appeal with costs, without calling on the other side.

At four o'clock on Wednesday the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of York, Sir William Erle, Sir James Colville, and Sir Joseph Napier were present, when judgment was given on the appeal of Sheppard v. Phillimore and Bennett (see 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 623). We reported the argument in last week's "Sayings and Doings." It will be remembered that the only point then argued was as to the question of the effect of the Church Discipline Act on the discretion of the Court of Arches to accept or refuse letters of request. The Lord Chancellor delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee to the following effect:—The letters of request in this case were, in themselves, valid and sufficient to bring the case within the cognisance of the Court of Arches. The Church Discipline Act, by sect. 13, gave two powers—one enabling, the other obligatory. The question was only as to the latter. The section enabled the bishop, if he should think fit, to send a case to the Arches Court; and the only question was whether that court was bound to accept letters so sent. The Dean, as it appeared from his judgment, considered that he had authority to determine whether the bishop was justified in sending the letters of request, and that he could refuse acceptance of the letters when sent. But the court was satisfied that, on the true construction of sect. 13 of the Church Discipline Act, the Dean of Arches cannot refuse to accept jurisdiction. The terms of that section enabling the bishop to send "the case" by letters of request to the Court of Appeal of the Province, "to be there heard and determined according to the law and practice of such court," showed that it was intended to create a duty in the latter court to accept the cause so sent. The cases of Golithly v. Bishop of Chichester, 2 Ell. & Ell. 209, and Sherwood v. Ray, 1 Moo. P. C. 397, cited by the judge below, did not affect the question. The above view of the construction of the statute had been sanctioned by the judgment in Brookes v. Cresswell, 4 Notes of Cases, 429. Letters of request should not be considered as a command compelling an onerous duty, but as an honour conferred; the bishop, by sending them, asking the aid of greater knowledge and larger judicial experience than his own. The committee, therefore, although Mr. Walter Phillimore had most ably argued to the contrary, must hold that the acceptance of the letters of request was, in this case, compulsory on the Court of Arches, and accordingly the Queen would be advised to direct the Dean to accept them. There would be no costs of the appeal. Mr. Walter Phillimore said, that on behalf of the Dean of Arches, he was instructed to say that the intimation of the opinion of their Lordships would be at once acted upon by him.

ROLLS COURT.

The Trinity after sittings in this court commenced on Tuesday, the 22nd ult.; but his Lordship, being engaged on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, did not sit again till last Saturday, when the new Chancery Queen's Counsel were called within the bar by his Lordship. The new common law Queen's Counsel did not come into this court, as there was no sitting on Wednesday, the 27th ult., when they were called within the bar of the other Chancery Courts.

A few cases have occurred worthy of notice during the past week. In Re The Progress Insurance Company, a petition was presented by a creditor for the compulsory winding-up of the company. On behalf of the company, it was stated that an agreement had been entered into for the transfer of the business to another company, that this agreement was in the course of being carried out, and that a resolution had been passed for a voluntary winding-up. The company were willing to submit to be wound-up under the supervision of the court. The petition was supported by numerous creditors of the company. His Lordship made the usual order for a compulsory winding-up.

Hall v. The Metropolitan Railway Company was a petition by the plaintiff in the suit that certain premises taken from him by the company for the purposes of their railway might be sold to pay his purchase-money, interest, and costs. The suit had been instituted by the plaintiff against the company for specific performance of an agreement entered into by the company for the purchase of the plaintiff's premises at the price of 7000*l.* The plaintiff obtained a decree for specific performance and for payment of the purchase-money within a limited period, with a declaration that he was entitled to a lien on the land for the unpaid purchase-money. As 2000*l.* still remained due at the expiration of the period limited by the decree, the present petition was presented. His Lordship made an order in the terms of the prayer of the petition, upon the usual affidavit of service.

Wallace v. Attorney-General, a suit which was instituted for the administration of the trusts of certain testamentary documents executed by Lord Henry Seymour in the French language, now came on for hearing upon further consideration. By one of these documents he gave all his personality not otherwise disposed of to "Les Hospices de Paris et de Londres." The ambiguity of this language gave rise to much litigation, the claimants under the term "hospices" being very numerous in London. His Lordship previously decided that "Londres" included the cities of London and Westminster and the borough of Southwark, and the ground contiguous thereto covered with buildings. Under this decision, and under the definition of the word "hospices" given by the Lords Justices on appeal, eighty-four charities, out of 180 claimants, were admitted to share in the testator's personality not otherwise disposed of. There was in court a fund of over 46,000*l.* to be divided among the "hospices," and this sum would be further increased on the expiration of certain life interests created by the will. There was also some leasehold property of small value, to which the few charities which were entitled to hold land waived their claim in order to simplify matters. His Lordship ordered a sum of 1100*l.* to be sent to France to make the fund in that country equal to the fund in court, and directed the residue of the fund, after payment of the costs of the suit, to be divided equally among the charities found to be entitled to it. One of the testamentary documents contained a gift of such a sum as would produce 10,000*fr.* a year to the London Hospital for Lunatics, subject to a life interest therein created by the will. There being no hospital bearing that name, his Lordship held that St. Luke's, Old-street, and Bethlehem Hospital were entitled to this gift in equal shares; the question was covered by many previous decisions.

Wilkinson v. Lindren also came on upon further consideration. The suit had been instituted for the administration of the trusts of the will of Mrs. Mary Davison, who died in 1842. By her will, after giving certain legacies to several charitable institutions, she gave the residue of her personal estate to and among the different institutions, or to any other religious institutions or purposes as her executors in their absolute discretion might think proper. On behalf of the next of kin it was argued that this gift was void for uncertainty, this case being quite similar to James v. Allen, 3 Mer. 17, where a bequest in trust for such benevolent purposes as the trustees in their integrity and discretion might unanimously agree on, was held to be void for uncertainty. His Lordship was of opinion that the gift of the residue in the present instance was void for uncertainty, and that the residue was accordingly distributable among the next of kin.

Re The Contract Corporation (Limited), Robinson's Case, was an application by Joseph Robinson and Co. that they might be paid three sums, amounting to some 4600*l.*, which they had in 1866 advanced upon the security of a call then about to be made. The official liquidator submitted that he was entitled to set-off this amount against the calls due from Mr. Joseph Robinson on certain shares held by him, on the ground that the amount was in fact advanced by Mr. Joseph Robinson out of his own private moneys, and not by the firm. He was formerly deputy-chairman of the company, and it was alleged that he owed 16,000*l.* for calls, which he was unable to pay. His Lordship said that, having regard to the fact that Joseph Robinson alone (and not the firm) was a party to the mortgage of the call, and to the terms of the resolution passed by the board of directors when the three sums were advanced, and to the other circumstances of the case, he must infer that the amount so advanced belonged to Robinson himself, and not to the firm. It was, therefore, clear that the official liquidator was entitled to set-off the amount against the calls, and that Robinson's debt to the company must accordingly be reduced by the amount due on the mortgage.

Lord Brougham v. Cawin was a suit instituted by the late Lord Brougham against the defendant who had been engaged to assist him in the preparation and arrangement of an autobiography. There was a dispute about the defendant's remuneration, and the bill was filed to get back certain papers from the defendant. At the hearing in April 1868 his Lordship decided that the defendant was entitled to retain the papers until he had been paid for his services. The suit was revived by Lord Brougham's executors, and now came on upon further consideration. The chief clerk had certified that 330*l.* was the sum to which the defendant was entitled for his services. The only question for his Lordship's decision was how the costs of the suit should be borne. His Lordship reserved his judgment.

V. C. STUART'S COURT.

The following cases worthy of notice have been decided during the past week:—

Alton v. Harrison—Poyser v. Harrison, in which the question was whether certain instruments were valid or not. The Vice-Chancellor in delivering judgment said: "In this, as in all other cases of the same kind, the question is as to the bona fides of the transaction. If the deed of mortgage and bill of sale was executed by Harrison honestly for the purpose of giving a security to the five creditors, and not a contrivance resorted to for his own personal benefit, it is not void, but must have effect. This case is not within the operation of the bankruptcy laws, nor is it a good objection to the validity of the transaction that a preference and security were given to the five creditors; for it is well settled that such a preference may be given to one or more creditors after others have commenced their actions; moreover, it was clearly laid down in Wood v. Dixie, 7 Q. B. 892, that a sale of property on a good consideration, although made with intent to defeat an expected execution by a judgment-creditor, is not void at common law, or by the statute of Queen Elizabeth. The result of the authorities show the question to be whether the transaction is bona fide or a contrivance for the benefit of the debtor. There is in the present case only one circumstance which occurs to raise a doubt. One of the marks of fraud in such cases is the continuance in the possession of the property by the debtor who has conveyed it. There is in this case an express trust that Harrison should continue in possession of all the property, and on the first impression this appears stronger from the defeasible nature of the trust which is so framed that he is to have the possession and enjoyment, so as not to let in any execution or sequestration, and in case any such should be enforced the trust for his possession is to cease. It would seem from this as if the first and immediate purpose of the trust was to secure possession to the debtor. But on consideration this objection cannot prevail. It is no objection to the deed that it is a mortgage, and is redeemable for the benefit of the creditors; and it is consistent with such a security in the ordinary form that the mortgagee should continue in possession till default in payment. On behalf of the creditors under this security, it has been properly argued that the frame of this trust as to possession is more favourable to them than the ordinary clause. It gives only a defeasible enjoyment to the debtor, and it is defeasible for a purpose more effectively securing their preference. This objection being removed, all the other objections argued on behalf of the plaintiff must fail on grounds well established by the authorities. There being, in my opinion, no sufficient ground for holding that the mortgage and bill of sale were executed for any other purpose than bona fide for securing the debts of the five creditors, the certificate must be varied by finding that the trustees under the deed have an interest in the said estate, against which the sequestrators cannot hold it."

Mortlock v. Mortlock was a motion on behalf of the defendant in the suit for leave to take the bill off the file under these circumstances. The bill was filed on the 10th June 1869 by John Frederick Mortlock, of Chesterton, Cambridgeshire, against Edmund John Mortlock, praying for the appointment of new trustees to complete the execution of the trusts of the will of John Mortlock, formerly a banker of Cambridge; that all the testator's estate might be deemed vested in such trustee; for certain accounts, and that the defendant might pay the costs. The defendant having demurred successfully five times to this bill, had obtained special leave to serve the present motion, which was in these terms:—"That the order, dated the 10th June 1869, made by the Master of the Rolls on the application of the plaintiff, whereby it was ordered that the plaintiff should be at liberty to prosecute this suit in forma pauperis in person, might be discharged; and that the bill filed in this cause might be taken off the file of the court, such bill being the fifth bill filed by the plaintiff for substantially the same object, and he having also brought ejection to recover the estates sought to be recovered by him by his present and former bills, and the bill in this cause being wholly unjustifiable, improper, and vexatious, and the plaintiff having designedly and improperly omitted to mention or notice therein, as he had in his fourth filed bill, the fact of his bankruptcy, and having wholly suppressed in the bill in this cause the statement of many material deeds, although upon the hearing of his first bill, he was told by the Master of the Rolls to the effect that he could have no case unless such deeds were set aside, and the omission of all reference to such deeds being an abuse of the indulgence of which he was availing himself of suing in forma pauperis; and that the plaintiff might be ordered to pay the defendant's costs of this application, and of this suit, or that such other order might be made as to the court might seem meet." In opposition to the motion it was contended by the plaintiff, in person, that his bill was neither vexatious, unjustifiable, nor improper. It was, in effect, for the appointment of a new trustee. The defendant had made no affidavit himself, but the affidavit made in reference to the former bills was by his solicitor, who had no interest in the matter, and he had not stated all the facts, the former bills having been dismissed upon demurrers, and not upon a hearing, this motion was irregular. He (the plaintiff) claimed to be entitled as heir-at-law to all the real property of his father which did not pass under his will, and all that he wanted was the appointment of a new trustee to complete the execution of the trusts. The object of the bill was very different from the preceding ones. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's argument the Vice-Chancellor told him that his conduct was absurd—worse than absurd—it was vexatious. His bill must be ordered to be taken off the file, and he must pay all the costs.

Cope's Trust was a petition presented under the Trustee Relief Act, under which the British Empire Mutual Association had paid 500*l.*, the amount of a policy effected with them by a Mr. Cope, into court. The policy which was on the joint lives of Mr. and Mrs. Cope, for the benefit of the survivor, had been deposited by Mr. Cope with Messrs. Attwood and Spooner, bankers at Birmingham, to secure advances. Their business being taken by the Birmingham Bank, the policy was assigned by both Mr. and Mrs. Cope to them. Mrs. Cope survived her husband, and the amount secured by the policy being claimed by both Mrs. Cope and the bank, the insurance company paid the amount into court. On behalf of the Birmingham Bank, it was contended that the contract was entirely one with Mr. Cope; that the assignment passed both his and his wife's interest in the policy; that this was not a reversionary chose in action of the wife's; and that the transaction amounted to a binding direction to pay the money due on the policy to the bank instead of to the survivor of the husband or wife. The Vice-Chancellor, however, was of opinion that the bank only acquired such interest as the husband had, and that Mrs. Cope was entitled to the amount secured by the policy.

V.C. MALINS' COURT.

Since the last notice, one or two cases of popular interest have occurred, deserving of a passing record.

Re Watnough's Trusts was a petition which was heard at the close of last week, involving a question as to the validity of a gift under the will of a Wesleyan minister, the Rev. A. Watnough, "towards the erection of a new Wesleyan chapel in the town of St. Helen's, Lancashire, when such erection shall take place." After the testator's death, but before the gift became payable, a new Wesleyan chapel was commenced, on land purchased for the purpose, and the trustees of the chapel asked that the fund, which had been paid into court, might be applied towards the completion of the edifice. The Vice-Chancellor, adhering to the rule, which had been established by a long line of authorities, that a gift towards the erection of a chapel necessitated the purchase of land on which to erect the chapel, held that the gift was void under the Statute of Mortmain.

Llewellyn v. Rose was a case in which Mary Billings, a native of Liverpool, by her will gave various legacies, and inter alios, 200*l.* to the Liverpool Infirmary, and all the rest and residue to three charities there, namely, the Bluecoat School Hospital, the Orphan Asylum for Girls, and the Orphan Asylum for Boys. The question then arose as to the payment of the general and charitable legacies, with respect to the fund out of which they were payable; whether out of the mixed or impure personality, or out of the pure personality, having regard to the fact that the testatrix directed that the charitable gifts should come out of that fund by law applicable to bequests of that nature, which of course raised the whole question. A great deal of argument ensued upon the point, and several cases were cited, particularly Robinson v. Geldard (3 Mac. & G. 735), and it was strongly insisted on behalf of the charities that the mixed fund must be considered applicable for payment of the general bequests, and the pure personality last resorted to; whereas the next of kin raised a contrary contention. A question also arose as to how the costs were to be paid. The Vice-Chancellor at first thought that the charity legacies were demonstrative, and that so far as the residuary gift was concerned, it mattered nothing whether it was a gift to a charity or to an individual, but eventually he decided that the contention of the next of kin must prevail, and the words interpolated by the testatrix be considered inoperative.

The next case was that of Briant v. Tebbutt, which raised a point of equity subject to a question of fact, namely, whether the plaintiff was so injuriously affected by the percolation or soaking of water from the defendant's dock as to entitle him to a remedy in this court. The plaintiff was an extensive rope manufacturer at Limehouse, and the defendants had a large dock adjacent which abutted wedge-wise on the plaintiff's premises, a part of which consisted of a large bobbin warehouse, admitted to be in a somewhat dilapidated condition. However, the basement of it was used to store or temporarily keep hemp in. The defendants in 1865 built an additional or new dock and a part of it, where it joined the plaintiff's premises, was secured by a wall, the rest by plankings. Immediately previous to its completion, water was let in for a trial, and found its way into the basement of plaintiff's premises. The parties, however, were then amicable, but subsequently the plaintiff alleged that the lower part of his buildings, especially the bobbin warehouse, was prejudicially affected by damp, and applied for an injunction, and the case now came on at the hearing. A great deal of engineering evidence had been gone into, and Mr. Beardmore made a report for the assistance of the court, whereby he found that no water escaped from the new dock into the plaintiff's premises, and Mr. Bazalgette and others considered that it could not if it was properly done. But, as usual in such cases, there was a great conflict of evidence, and that adduced on behalf of the plaintiff was positive as to the fact of water coming in, and of his being unable to use the basement for keeping hemp. Under these circumstances the Vice-Chancellor went down with the concurrence of both parties, and personally inspected the premises, and after argument, was of opinion that although it was certain the plaintiff had sustained injury, it might be compensated for by a moderate sum of money, and the remedy was at law and not in this court. Moreover, he had acquiesced in the formation of the new dock, and had a reference to chambers been ordered under Lord Cairns' Act, the Vice-Chancellor considered that the injury was not such as to justify it, but he would give no costs. It was then proposed that the plaintiff should, at his own expense, be at liberty to go upon the defendants' premises to make a dry area, but this was refused by the defendants.

The next case was Pugh v. Arton, and involved an important question as to tenants' fixtures. The plaintiff was the landlord of the Golden Cross, Worcester, used as a bookseller's shop, and let by him to John Vaughan in Feb. 1865, upon a term not yet expired. In the lease there was a proviso that if the tenant did certain acts, and inter alia, made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, there should be a right of re-entry. In March 1868 Vaughan executed such an assignment, and the plaintiff formally entered and gave notice that he should treat the lease as forfeited. It appeared that Vaughan had purchased certain trade fixtures on the premises, and they were in turn then taken from him by the defendant, who stood in his shoes as to them, and was proposing to remove and sell them (which was eventually done), when the bill was filed to restrain that sale, and the cause was now heard. It was discussed at length, and a great many cases cited, especially Lyde v. Russell, 1 B. & A. 394, where the rule is laid down by Lord Tenterden and the other judges. The Vice-Chancellor was clearly of opinion that the law was now in the same state, and held that the lease was forfeited, and that the fixtures not having been removed during the time when the lease was in existence, there was no right to remove them afterwards; that the rule laid down by the older authorities was still law, the right to remove only existing during the term. As, however, the suit was an unconscionable and ungracious one, no costs would be given.

Another case was Ramshire v. Bolton, which came on upon a demurrer to a bill filed to recover 237*l.*, advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant on the representation that a bill of exchange was a good security, and that the drawer and acceptor were solvent, knowing, as he did, that such representations were untrue, the whole transaction being part of a scheme to induce the plaintiff to give the defendant the money. The bill was dishonoured, and the present suit was for a declaration that the plaintiff was induced to advance the money on a false pretence, and for payment. After considerable argument, the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that although no doubt there was a legal remedy, there was also concurrent jurisdiction in this court, and overruled the demurrer.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

The sittings out of term were resumed on the 23th ult., before Justices Lush and Hayes, and the following cases of interest were argued and decided on that and the two following days:

Johnson v. Skafte was an appeal from the ruling of the County Court judge of Liverpool. An action had been brought against the defendant in the County Court "to recover compensation for the injury and loss sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's wrongfully allowing certain rent payable by him, as the tenant of a warehouse, No. 4, Argyle-street, Liverpool, to be in arrear and unpaid, whereby the goods of the plaintiff (who occupied one of the rooms of the warehouse as tenant to the defendant) were lawfully distrained by the defendant's landlord for such arrears of rent, and the plaintiff was compelled to pay to such landlord certain moneys in order to obtain the release of his goods, and was put to great inconvenience, and was injured in his credit." The defendant pleaded his order of discharge in bankruptcy, he having become bankrupt after the distress and payment by the plaintiff of the money above mentioned. The legal point involved was, whether the claim for which the action had been brought was one provable in bankruptcy under the 153rd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861; if it were, the order of discharge would be a sufficient answer to the action, but not otherwise. The learned judge ruled that the claim for which the action had been brought was not one provable under the above-mentioned section, and therefore that the order of discharge was not a bar to the action. The question was now argued on appeal by Mr. Wheeler on behalf of the plaintiff, and by Mr. R. G. Williams on the part of the defendant. The 153rd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, provides that "If a bankrupt shall, at the time of adjudication, be liable by reason of any contract or promise, to a demand in the nature of damages, which has not been, and cannot be, otherwise liquidated or ascertained, it shall be lawful for the court, acting in prosecution of such bankruptcy, to direct such damages to be assessed by a jury, either before itself or in a court of law, and to give all necessary directions for such purpose; and the amount of damage, when assessed, shall be provable as if a debt due at the time of the bankruptcy: Provided that, in case all necessary parties agree, the court shall have power to assess such damages without the intervention of a jury, or a reference to a court of law." Was the present case where the bankrupt was liable "by reason of any contract or promise, to a demand in the nature of damages, &c.?" After a very able argument on both sides, the court were of opinion that the damages recovered in the present action were not provable under the above section; that the section was intended to apply only to cases of express contracts, and chiefly those of a mercantile character.

Cummings v. Heard, argued on the same day by Mr. Anstey on behalf of the plaintiff, and Mr. Jelf on behalf of the defendant, was a demurrer to a plea. The declaration was on the ordinary money counts. The defendant, amongst other things, pleaded to the claim in the declaration beyond the sum of 145*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, that after the accruing of the causes of action, a dispute arose between the plaintiff and defendant as to the amount due by the latter to the former, and the question in dispute was by consent of the parties referred to the award of an arbitrator, who had made his award for 145*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* The main objection urged against the validity of the plea, which it was admitted was a novel one, was that it was an attempt to set up as a defence by way of estoppel that which would be otherwise a plea of accord without satisfaction. On behalf of the defendant it was contended that the plea was a good one when pleaded, as it was, not to the amount awarded by the arbitrator, but to the sum claimed in the declaration over and above the amount so awarded; the defendant being entitled to say to the plaintiff, "You are not at liberty, by virtue of your agreement to refer, to allege that the sum owing to you is greater than that awarded by the arbitrator; you are estopped from saying so." The court (consisting of the same judges) reserved their judgment on the point till next morning, when they pronounced in favour of the validity of the plea, on the ground that it was in effect a plea of res judicata.

In Kilshaw v. Jump a variety of points arose as to the mode of giving assents in writing to a deed of composition made by a debtor. One was whether the assent of a banking company could be given by a manager, without the use of the company's common seal. It was contended by Mr. Quain, Q. C. (with whom was Mr. Wheeler), that the assent of the bank could only be given by its common seal, as the giving of such assent could not be considered an ordinary trading act. The court (Justices Lush and Hayes), without calling on Mr. Holker, Q. C., who represented the other side, considered that this objection was got rid of by sect. 37 of the Companies Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), which provides that "any contract which, if made between private persons would be by law required to be in writing, and if made according to English law to be under seal, may be made on behalf of the company in writing under the common seal of the company, and such contract may be in the same manner varied or discharged. (2) Any contract which, if it were between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing, and signed by the parties to be charged therewith, may be made on behalf of the company in writing, signed by any person acting under the express or implied authority of the company, and such contract may in the same manner be varied or discharged." Another of the objections to the validity of the deed was, that the assent of one of the creditors was not given in writing, though his agent had assented in writing. The court overruled this objection also, being of opinion that it was not necessary that the agent should be appointed by writing. A further objection was that the debtor had not himself drawn up an account of his debts and liabilities; but an account having been drawn up by an accountant employed for the purpose by the trustees, the court were of opinion that this was sufficient, and held the deed of composition valid.

Does the word "cattle" include horses? In several Acts of Parliament it does; in others it does not. Whether it does in the Act of 28 & 29 Vict. c. 60 (An Act to render the owner of dogs in England and Wales liable for injuries to cattle and sheep), was argued in the case of Wright v. Pearson, which was an appeal from the decision of a County Court judge. The Act provides that "the owner of every dog shall be liable in damages for injury done to any cattle or sheep by his dog; and it shall not be necessary for the party seeking such damages to show a previous mischievous propensity in such dog, or the owner's knowledge of such previous propensity, or that the injury was attributable to neglect on the part of such owner. Such damages shall be recoverable in any court of competent jurisdiction by the owner of such cattle or sheep killed or injured. Where the amount of the damages claimed shall not exceed five pounds, the same shall be recoverable in a summary way before any justice or justices sitting in petty sessions, under the provisions of the Act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43." In the present case the defendant's dog bit a mare belonging to the plaintiff as he was driving her in a gig. The County Court judge held that the mare was not "cattle" within the meaning of the Act, and that in order to make the defendant liable it was necessary to show a knowledge on the part of the defendant of the mischievous propensity of his dog. Mr. Kemplay argued in support of the appeal from this decision; Mr. A. Wills in support of the decision. The court held that horses are "cattle" within the meaning of the enactment; and that, therefore, the County Court judge was wrong in thinking that proof of scienter was necessary in order to fix the owner of the dog with liability for the injury done to the plaintiff's mare.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

On Wednesday, the 23rd June, the case of Thomas v. Hayward was argued in the Exchequer, and raised a point of some interest with relation to the question, what covenants will run with the land? The action was by the assignee of the lease of a public-house against the lessor for breach of a covenant contained in the indenture of demise. The demise contained a covenant by the lessee for himself and assigns to continue to use the premises as a public-house, and for no other business whatever. The lessor covenanted for himself and his assigns not to build, erect, or keep, or be interested in building, erecting, or keeping, a house for the sale of beer or spirits within half a mile of the demised premises, and it was for breach of this latter covenant that the action was brought. It was contended for the defendant that this covenant would not run with the land, being merely a personal and collateral covenant. The court were of opinion that this contention was correct, inasmuch as the covenant, though it incidentally affected the beneficial occupation of the premises did not touch or concern them directly so as to run with the land. They therefore gave judgment for the defendant.

In the case of Cranwell v. The Corporation of London, various points arose of some interest in reference to compensation to a yearly tenant under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act and the Holborn Valley Act 1864. The question was whether the taking of the plaintiff's premises under the powers of these Acts was justifiable, and that appeared to depend on the validity of an order made by an alderman adjudging that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation for the taking of his premises. It was stated that the alderman had made the order upon the authority of a case of Reg. v. The London and Southampton Railway Company, 10 A. & E. 3. The court (Barons Bramwell, Channell, and Cleasby) seemed very much inclined to think that that case was not good law at the present day, but doubted whether they were not bound by it, being the decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. On consideration they came to the conclusion that it was not really in point. The question there was whether the Court of Queen's Bench should, in the exercise of its powers, grant a mandamus to the company to issue a warrant for a compensation jury. The court, coming to the conclusion that in that case the tenant was not entitled to compensation, refused to do so. Here the question was not directly whether the plaintiff was entitled to compensation, but whether the order of the alderman was good. The court were clearly of opinion that it was not good, inasmuch as it was clear, from the authorities, that the tribunal provided by the statute for the assessment of compensation, whether a jury or a magistrate, had no the quantum of compensation. It was clear that jurisdiction to determine questions of title, but only the only construction that could be put upon the order was, that the alderman had decided the title and had thereby exceeded his jurisdiction. That being so, the order was null and the proceedings based upon it void; the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover in trespass. It appeared in the course of the argument that the order did not show on the face of it that the plaintiff's was a yearly tenancy, and it was contended that this made the order bad, inasmuch as it was only in cases of such tenancies that the jurisdiction to assess compensation was given to an alderman. The court thought the order was bad on that ground also, it being a long-established and fundamental principle with respect to special and limited jurisdictions, that the facts necessary to give jurisdiction must appear on the conviction or order. The judgment of the court was therefore for the plaintiff.

In Toplis v. The Real and Personal Advance Company, which was likewise argued on Wednesday the 23rd, a question arose as to the effect of a judgment which had been signed in an action on a bill of exchange under the Act for summary procedure on bills of exchange. It appeared that the judgment had been signed prematurely on the ninth day after the service, the Act providing that twelve days must elapse before signing judgment. The action was brought for trespass in levying an execution upon the judgment. The court were of opinion that the judgment could not be a nullity, and not having been set aside operated as a justification.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE QUALIFICATION BILL.

The EARL OF ALBEMARLE rising to move the second reading of this Bill, remarked that the object of the Act of the 18 Geo. 2, c. 20, was to place the criminal jurisdiction of the rural districts of England and Wales exclusively in the hands of landed proprietors, and that in proposing its repeal he wished to divest the magisterial office of this exclusive and invidious character, and to give the Lord Chancellor and lords-lieutenant of counties power to appoint any persons qualified by education, character, and social position for exercising the duties of that office with advantage to the public. Several of these property qualifications existed up to the reign of William IV., all being traceable to feudal times, when agriculture was the principal occupation of the people, and when the owners of land were the governing class. No person, for instance, was allowed, unless he were a landed proprietor, to keep game, or to sit in Parliament; but those Acts, so contrary to the spirit of modern legislation, had one by one been abrogated. Those who had not given attention to the subject might suppose, indeed, that this particular qualification originated in the reign of George II., and was therefore comparatively modern; but it was really more than 400 years old, for it was an Act of Henry IV. which prescribed that a justice of the peace must possess lands or tenements of the value of 20*l.* a year, and the latter Act simply raised the qualification to 100*l.*, such being the supposed difference in the value of money between the two periods. Now, he submitted that an Act passed at the time of the Wars of the Roses was not likely to be suited to the seventeenth year of the nineteenth century. The preamble of the Act of George II. recited that by many recent Acts of Parliament the power and authority of justices of the peace had greatly increased, and this was one of his reasons for introducing this Bill, since not only had that power and authority increased, but the number of country gentlemen to undertake the duties had become quite insufficient. This was proved by the wholesale introduction of country clergymen into the commission. Why, then, should not the office be thrown open, and the authorities be allowed to appoint persons whom the enormous increase of wealth and the spread of education had called into existence since the passing of the Act? Their Lordships' eldest sons were specially exempted from its operation, so that by necessary implication their younger sons, unless possessed of real property, were declared to be of too mean estate to sit on the bench at petty sessions. Oke's Magisterial Synopsis, the vade mecum of county magistrates, contained 1200 pages. Now, was it not absurd to expect such an amount of professional knowledge from unprofessional men, and to deprive them of the co-operation of those who had made the law their profession? The only qualification for the office of Lord Chief Justice of England was fitness, and that surely ought to be the sufficient and sole qualification of these inferior criminal judges. By enabling lawyers to be qualified for the office of justice of the peace, we should only be reverting to the ancient law of the land; and even in the comparatively modern Act of Henry VI., passed about 400 years ago, there was a special clause empowering the Lord Chancellor to appoint any persons learned in the law, although they might not have the necessary property qualification. He would ask were we to be more exclusive than the Edwards? To pass from the learned to the unlearned professions, to one of which he belonged, he would ask why officers of the army and navy were to be excluded from acting as justices of the peace unless they had property qualification. They were accustomed to act judicially from their boyhood; and, personally he was liable to be ordered on a court-martial before he had attained the age of sixteen. His attention was first called to the subject by the inconvenience which he personally experienced when, as an acting magistrate for one of the petty sessional divisions of the county of Norfolk, he often found himself the only magistrate who answered a summons to attend a petty sessions. In that district there were two gentlemen, one a lieutenant-general and the other a commander in the navy, and although both were in the commission of the peace they were disqualified from rendering any assistance by the Act which he sought to repeal. Two distinguished ornaments of this House, both of whom had been Secretaries of State, had advocated the admission into that House of mercantile representatives, and, following them at a humble distance, he would say place mercantile representatives on the magisterial bench in petty sessions. To show how this class viewed their exclusion from a participation in labours that ought to be common to all, he read a letter which said that in the district in which the writer lived this Bill was hailed with great satisfaction, because it had long been felt a great hardship that merchants and others, who invested a large amount of capital in giving employment to thousands, could not take part in the administration of justice, while a clergyman of a small parish, the tithes of which were worth 100*l.* a year could do so. The Act of Geo. 2 produced great dissatisfaction in the districts where game abounds, and especially where it is in very few hands. Game was the exclusive property of landed proprietors; and the Act, in effect, declared that they were to be the sole judges in the rural districts of offences against the game laws. The feeling was general that the landlord was more or less an interested person; and the feeling was very strong in Scotland, as was shown by the fact that two Bills before another House, although materially different from each other, were at one in regard to taking the administration of the game laws out of the hands of the county justices. He did not go so far; but he asked that other classes besides landowners should be allowed to take part in the administration of them. The rivers of Wales belonged to landed proprietors, who were justices of the peace, and justices of the peace were ex officio members of the boards of conservators; so that as conservators these gentlemen originated prosecutions, and as justices of the peace they adjudicated upon them. A case had come before the Court of Queen's Bench in which a millowner was convicted by the magistrates for an offence against the Salmon Fisheries Act, and he obtained a writ of certiorari on the ground that the convicting magistrates were interested persons. The case was argued before the Lord Chief Justice, and Justices Blackburn and Mellor. They were unanimously of opinion that the magistrates were interested, and that substantially they were the prosecutors, and the conviction was quashed. This would probably not have happened if the millowners had been represented on the Bench. To show the state of feeling produced by this state of things he cited Land and Water as an authority for the statement that the fishermen of a certain district, considering themselves persecuted by a justice of the peace, revenged themselves when he was ill by holding a meeting to pray that he might die. (Laughter.) Upon the grounds he had stated he moved the second reading of the Bill.—The Duke of RICHMOND protested against the Bill and against the reasons adduced for bringing it forward. He had listened in vain for some substantial reason and argument for altering the law, which had existed for several hundred years. He protested against the position in which the proposed change would place any noble and learned lord who sat upon the woolsack. If this Act were repealed it would be a puzzle to him to know whom he should recommend to Her Majesty for the honour of being placed in the commission of the peace. The noble lord had, as he had understood, produced a copy of Oke's Synopsis, containing something like 1200 pages, and had asked their Lordships if they had read the work. Did the noble lord think that lords-lieutenants should pass an examination like candidates for the army and navy or for the Civil Service, and that the routine of examination should comprise questions on this book? (A laugh.) With regard to what the noble lord had said about officers of the army and navy, those officers were for the most part engaged in serving their country elsewhere; but the noble lord's argument would not apply, because in the different benches of magistrates in this country many retired officers of both services were to be found. (Hear, hear.) Again, the noble lord had said that magistrates ought not, in counties where there was game, to deal with game cases, because they were interested parties.—The Earl of ALBEMARLE had carefully avoided insinuating that justice in such cases was not administered. He had simply stated that such was the impression which prevailed in many quarters.—The Duke of RICHMOND said that, unless it was urged that in these cases justice was not administered, the argument fell to the ground. He believed there was no difficulty where magistrates were required in getting fit and proper persons to perform the duties (hear, hear); and, under those circumstances, he would ask their Lordships to read the Bill a second time that day three months. (Hear, hear.)—Lord PORTMAN observed that his noble friend, in advocating the abolition of the existing qualification for magistrates, appeared to forget that that qualification was necessary, because it was by the magistrates that the county finances were administered. (Hear, hear.) None of the arguments employed in favour of the establishment of county financial boards went the length of saying that a single shilling was wasted or misspent under the existing system. While these finances were administered by the magistrates, moreover, no one could say that they were not administered by the ratepayers of the county, because the magistrates under their qualification were ratepayers. (Hear, hear.) He contended that his noble friend's Bill was inopportune, because it was introduced at the very time when a Bill relating to the administration of county finances was engaging the attention of the House of Commons. In Scotland there was no qualification required, so that his noble friend's arguments with reference to the Game Laws had certainly no application there. His noble friend had discovered that this qualification had existed since the time of the Roses, and he certainly believed that, if it really was a hardship, his noble friend would not have been the first person to propose its repeal. (Hear, hear.) He trusted that his noble friend would withdraw his Bill, and not put the House to the trouble of a division. (Hear, hear.)—The Earl of ALBEMARLE was far from being convinced by the arguments to which he had listened. He did not, however, desire to give their Lordships unnecessary trouble, and would, therefore, for the present withdraw the Bill, though he hoped at some future time again to introduce it, and to fortify its claim to their Lordships' attention by stronger arguments.—The Bill was then withdrawn.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Mr. W. LOWTHER asked how many so-called friendly societies existed in England; whether they are not bound to send to the barrister-at-law appointed to certify the rules of savings banks every year a statement of the funds of the society, and how many such returns were received in 1867 and 1868.—Mr. BRUCE stated that the number of enrolled and certified societies was 24,308. By the Act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, certified and enrolled societies were bound to send to the registrar every year a statement of the funds of the society, and in 1867 forms were sent out to all the societies actually established, numbering 23,807; but the returns received were only 10,678. In 1868 forms were sent out to 23,174 societies, and the returns received were 11,408. Hon. members would, therefore, see that more than half the societies did not comply with the Act.

THE ELECTION INQUIRY COMMISSIONS.

Sir J. ELPHINSTONE asked the Attorney-General whether the dates had been fixed on which the commissioners appointed to inquire into corrupt practices at Beverley, Bridgewater, and Norwich were to commence their sittings; and what steps had been taken, or would be taken, by Her Majesty's Government to enable the commissioners to report before the close of the present session.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said the commissioners had not yet issued, but he believed they would issue shortly, and he understood that before the commissioners could actually commence the inquiry a preliminary investigation had to be made by the secretary in order to ascertain what evidence would be forthcoming. Under these circumstances it was not probable the commissioners could report before the Long Vacation, or that legislation could follow the report of this session. The hon. baronet was doubtless aware that the Government had no control over the commissioners; it was for the petitioners and others interested to act in the matter, but he was quite sure there would be no improper or unreasonable delay.

BETTING-HOUSES.

In reply to Mr. EYKYN, Mr. BRUCE said that the prosecutions against the persons to whom the hon. gentleman's question referred were instituted on the authority of the Chief Commissioner of Police, and with his own full consent and approval. These prosecutions were based generally upon the Act for the Suppression of Betting-Houses. He was not aware that it was necessary to lay information under any particular section. As no decision had yet been arrived at, it would be impossible for him to say how far other establishments might be affected, especially as he did not know the special circumstances under which betting was carried on in them, or whether they would come under the Betting-House Act.

DEBTS OF DECEASED PERSONS.—A Bill to abolish the distinction as to priority of payment which now exists between the specialty and simple contract debts of deceased persons has been published. It was prepared and brought in by Mr. Hinde Palmer, Mr. Locke King, and Mr. Headlam.

MARAVILLA COCOA FOR BREAKFAST.—The cocoa (or cacao) of Maravilla is the true Theobroma of Linnaeus.—The Globe says: "Taylor Brothers' Maravilla Cocoa has achieved a thorough success, and supercedes every other cocoa in the market. For homeopaths and invalids we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage." Sold in packets only, by all grocers.

STOCK AND SHARE MARKETS.

Thursday.

There is a good demand for discount at the Bank of England, but the half-year being now turned there is again distinct ease in the general market, and the return to $\frac{1}{4}$ as the maximum for short first-class bills is already an indication of the course the market will probably take during the next month, and which it is generally believed will lead to a reduction to 5 per cent. in the Bank rate upon the Stock Exchange.

IMPORTANT TO HOLDERS OF GOVERNMENT STOCK.—We are in a position to announce that it is the intention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to propose that the dividends on the Government securities shall be payable quarterly instead of half-yearly. This is a manifest advantage to the holders, the Bank, and the Government. To the former, because they will receive their interest on stock or annuities at four instead of two periods of the year; to the Bank, because the pressure of such payments will be more equally divided; and to the Government, because it will not have to provide so heavily for such demands at two periods of the year. To persons of limited income, such a division as above mentioned will be a great and valuable boon, and advantageous to all recipients, whether great or small, and the convenience cannot be too highly extolled. The Bank of England, at the same time, will experience the advantage of more regular division of its labours and resources. At present, dividends cause a long continuance of payments into its coffers, followed by a heavy efflux at the close of each six months. This system, it will readily be seen, involves many questions of financial policy and monetary disorder, which it is desirable to rectify. To the Chancellor of the Exchequer (or the Government) it is especially a boon, because the payment of the interest on the National Debt becomes more easy and regular, and therefore less troublesome and perplexing to him. Then, as regards the general interests of the country, the increased subdivision of payment will prove most advantageous, as monetary affairs will be less subject to certain fluctuations, which greatly disturb the money market and mercantile operations. Altogether, therefore, it will be seen that there is a manifest advantage to every interest concerned in the application of the policy referred to, and we therefore heartily hope to see the proposed plan speedily carried out. A proposal, we believe, has been made to the Government by two of the joint-stock banks to perform all the duties now undertaken by the Bank of England in its operations with Government for one-half the sum now paid by the State to the Bank, and this has given rise to the question whether the privileges granted to the Bank are not in themselves sufficient payment for all the services it renders to the Government or nation in its character as financial exponent or operator of the national finances. We are perfectly aware that these and other great financial considerations are now under discussion and negotiation between the Government, the Bank of England, and two other joint-stock banks.—Railway News.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

EVIDENCE TO GO TO A JURY.—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE.—Plaintiff was a servant of a railway company, and defendants were builders employed by the company in repairing their station. Plaintiff, in course of his usual duty at night, closed some gates between this station and a warehouse also belonging to the company, and in doing so was struck by a heavy plank and seriously injured. Defendant's servants were seen at work upon the wall just above these gates a few hours before the accident, and it was suggested they had placed this plank across the gates whilst open for the purpose of a scaffolding, and left it there when they finished their day's work. One of the gates was fastened back by a rope, which the plaintiff had to untie before he could shut it. There was no evidence that defendants or their servants knew these gates were usually shut at night. Plaintiff was nonsuited: Held, that this nonsuit was right, as the evidence fell short of raising any presumption of negligence against the defendants: (Pearson v. Plucknett, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 662. C. P.)

PLEADING.—PATENT.—NOVELTY OF INVENTION.—Where a bill stated the plaintiff's patent for "a new method of manufacturing and applying artificial pearls and beads:" Held, that an express allegation of the novelty of the invention was unnecessary: (Amery v. Brown, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 654. V. C. J.)

EQUITY.—PLEADING.—EXCEPTIONS TO ANSWER.—INSUFFICIENCY.—In every bill for redemption and foreclosure it is relevant for the plaintiff to interrogate the defendant as to the dates of his securities, the amount of money which he has actually advanced, and the rates of interest reserved: (Beavin v. Cook, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 689. V. C. S.)

PRACTICE.—SUPPLEMENTAL ORDER.—The number of a class of defendants to the bill had been increased by the birth of a child after decree, and of another who had been actually born before decree, but whose existence was not known to the plaintiff. The court thereupon made an order for a supplemental order without the filing of a new bill: (Grunwell v. Gardner, 20 L.T. Rep. N. S. 693. Q.B.)

COUNTRY BANKER'S CHEQUES.—A country banker who receives from a customer a cheque upon a banker in another town is not bound to send it to that town for presentation, but may send it to his London agent to pass through the clearing house: (Prideaux v. Criddle, 20 L.T. Rep. N. S. 695. Q.B.)

ACTION BY SHERIFF FOR NOT ARRESTING—BANKRUPTCY DEED.—In an action against the sheriff for not arresting a judgment-debtor on a ca. sa., the defendant pleaded the certificate of registration of a bankruptcy deed, and the plaintiff replied that the deed was pleadable but was not pleaded to the action, and that the sheriff had notice thereof: Held, a good replication: (Godwin v. Stone, 20 L.T. Rep. N. S. 711. Ex.)

CONSPIRACY—"NURSING" BY OMNIBUSES—CIVIL ACTION.—A number of persons engaged in running omnibuses from one part of London to the other, agreed among themselves to "nurse" the vehicles of a rival independent proprietor, the plaintiff. They accordingly ran one omnibus before and one behind each omnibus of the plaintiff, and generally interfered with the carrying on of his business, thus driving him off the road. Held, that an action of conspiracy would lie. It is enough that defendants conspire to encourage acts to be done by others by connivance or suggestion: (Gill v. Williamson, 20 L.T. Rep. N. S. 712. Mellor, J.)

LIBEL—FICTION—NAME OF PLAINTIFF SUPPOSED NOT TO BELONG TO ANYONE—INTERPRETER.—A writer furnished to a magazine an article based partly on fact and partly on fiction, which contained, amongst other matter, certain anecdotes told him six years ago when he was in Spain, by a friend whom he called Don R. One of these anecdotes related to a General Plantagenet Harrison, who was spoken of in the article as a notorious English swindler, who had forged and cashed circular notes, usually issued by English bankers, whose names were paraphrased. The article mentioned various towns at which General Plantagenet Harrison was said to have done various disreputable things. The writer of the article, however, was not aware that any person bearing the name of General Plantagenet Harrison existed, but believed, from its incongruous nature, that it had been assumed for temporary purposes. The article having been published, an action was brought by General Plantagenet Harrison for libel, he having been at the various places mentioned in the article at the times referred to. Held, that the action would lie, as the writer intended to portray the character of some one, and that it was no defence that he did not believe that the name he used was the name of any living person. Secus, if the character portrayed had been merely a creation of the brain to which a name had been given which was borne by some living person. A defendant may act as interpreter in his own cause: (Harrison v. Smith, 20 L.T. Rep. N. S. 713. Lush, J.)

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

(Sittings at Nisi Prius, in London, before BOVILL, C. J. and a Special Jury.)

COLLETTE V. BRUCE.

The plaintiff in this case was a solicitor in Lincoln's-inn-fields, and the defendant, Mr. Brudenell Bruce, was a barrister, practising in equity, and he also on the occasion now in question had undertaken to report the proceedings of the Rolls Court for the Times newspaper. The action was to recover damages for an alleged libel.

O'Brien Serjt. and M'Namara appeared for the plaintiff; and Huddleston, Q.C., and Thesiger for the defendant.

From the opening statement it appeared that in December last the plaintiff was solicitor to Messrs Eley, in the Chancery suit of Daw v. Eley and others, which had reference to an alleged infringement of a patent for making cartridges: About this time a discussion was going on in the Volunteer Service Gazette as to the Boxer and the Daw cartridges, and the plaintiff took part in the discussion and wrote under the signature of "Copper Cap." He supported the Boxer as against the Daw cartridge. The consequence of this was that Mr. Daw instructed Mr. Jessel, Q.C., to move the Master of the Rolls to commit Mr. Collette for contempt of court in writing the letters. The application was made accordingly, and the defendant published a report of it in the Times. The plaintiff now complained of the following passage in this report as being untrue and libellous:—"Mr. Jessel said that what the plaintiffs complained of was, that Mr. Collette had written letters anonymously, containing misrepresentations, for the purpose of misleading the public with reference to the plaintiff's patent. It was a contempt of court to make fair comments on a case which was awaiting decision. How gross a contempt of court, then, was it for the solicitor of one of the parties, of all persons in the world, to write anonymous letters to a newspaper, which misrepresented the facts of a case which had not yet been heard." The learned serjeant, in continuation, said that one reason for Mr. Collette taking an interest in the cartridge question was that he himself was a volunteer. Another circumstance in the case was, that Mr. Collette, upon the report appearing, communicated with Mr. Jessel, who, in consequence, stated in open court that the report was inaccurate, and the Master of the Rolls concurred in this statement, but no notice whatever of the correction was published in the Times.

Mr. Collette, the plaintiff, was called and gave his recollection of what took place when the motion to commit him was made. He said it did not spare him, but said that his conduct was very reprehensible. He also said that his motive must have been to assist his client, and that he was anticipating the course of justice, but he never imputed to witness that he had falsified any of the facts.

Huddleston explained that how the report got into the papers was thus: Mr. Holt, the regular reporter for the Times in the Rolls Court, being ill applied to Mr. Bruce to attend to his court for him in his absence. Mr. Bruce, however, received an invitation to visit his uncle, Lord Ailesbury, and he applied to Mr. Comberbach to do the court work. It happened that this last named gentleman had an engagement in another court, and he applied to a fourth learned gentleman, who attended and wrote the report in question.

In the course of the case, his Lordship made a suggestion to the parties, which resulted in a settlement of the litigation.

Huddleston said that the reporter insisted that his report was correct, but also said that it was never intended to impute to Mr. Collette that he had stated what he believed to be untrue, but that what Mr. Jessel complained of was that he had given the public Messrs. Eley's version of the facts, which was altogether opposed to Mr. Daw's version. The learned counsel added that when the report was complained of, Mr. Bruce, in a chivalrous manner, took all the responsibility of it upon himself.

O'Brien Serjt., said that his client was satisfied with the explanation that had been given.

A juror was then by consent withdrawn.

The death of Professor Barry, who held the chair of English Law in Cork College, is announced.

THE TOWN CLERK OF MANCHESTER.—The Prime Minister has, in very flattering terms, communicated to Mr. Heron, the town clerk of Manchester, her Majesty's approval of his recommendation that the honour of knighthood should be conferred upon Mr. Heron, in recognition of his high character and position, and his long services to the community with which he has been immediately concerned.

THE SHRIEVALTY.—It is understood that Mr. A. J. Baylis, of Church-court-chambers, Old Jewry, will be appointed under-sheriff to Mr. Alderman Causton, and the present under-sheriff, Mr. Alexander Crosley, to Mr. Vallentin. Mr. Baylis was under-sheriff to Mr. Alderman Challis, so that both have been fully initiated into the responsible duties of their office.—City Press.

THE NEW LAW COURTS.—Some Parliamentary returns relative to the battle of the sites have been issued. Mr. Henry A. Hunt, surveyor of Her Majesty's works and public buildings, in his report to Mr. Layard (dated the 18th inst.) on the several proposed sites, maintains that a change of site will not involve delay in the carrying out of the scheme. One year must, in any event, be occupied in the preparations of the working drawings, and of the necessary calculations upon which builders are to form their estimates; and whether the Carey-street or Embankment site be adopted, these preliminary proceedings will be the same. If the Bill for acquiring the land should be passed this session, the whole of the property can be purchased and the site cleared before the expiration of twelve months from the passing of the Act; but if the Act should not be passed this session then, of course, delay would arise. Mr. Hunt appends a minute in which he endeavours to show that, although the notices to owners and occupiers were not given at the time prescribed by the standing orders, the course which he recommends, so far from being a harsh proceeding, would give honest claimants advantages which they have never yet possessed. As to the relative advantages of the two sites, in respect to light, air, and approaches, Mr. Hunt confidently states that the Embankment site has singular advantages. There is no reflector or ventilator equal to a broad tidal river; and the road, railway, and footpath on the Embankment, and the line of steamers on the one side, and the four streets which open from the Strand to Howard-street, on the other, furnish ready-made approaches, without any additional cost beyond that involved in the widening of Essex-street, at least as good as those ordinarily obtained for new public buildings. Moreover (Mr. Hunt continues) if the Howard-street site be adopted, there can be no projects for enlargement except towards the north. King's College and Somerset House on the west, and the Temple on the east, bar the way in those directions, and the only available means of spending money will be between Howard-street and the Strand. This argument may, of course, be used against the Howard-street site on the very ground that extension on the east and west will be impossible and that no public building ought to be so hemmed in as to preclude enlargement. But considering the temptation to spend public money, it is a great point, Mr. Hunt thinks, that there will, in this case, be no opportunity of doing so except in one direction. According to my view (he adds), the great merit of the Howard-street modification of the Thames Embankment site (as that site was originally proposed by Sir Charles Trevelyan) is that, while it reduces within manageable limits a scale of accommodation which had latterly grown out of all proportion, it leaves space for any additional buildings which actual experience may hereafter show to be necessary. There will however, be no such limitation to expenditure on the Carey-street site. Mr. Hunt ventures to say that this is no one-sided view of the question, and that a personal inspection of the site and its surroundings will prove that he has not overstated the case.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

BANQUET TO HER MAJESTY'S JUDGES.

The Sheriffs' banquet to the Lord Chancellor and Her Majesty's Judges was given on Saturday evening last in the hall of the Haberdashers' Company by the present holders of that office, Mr. Alderman Cotton and Mr. Hutton. Among the numerous guests were the Lord Chancellor, his Highness the Nawab of Bengal, Prince Solomon Kudr Bahadoor, Prince Ali Kudr Bahadoor, the Lord Chief Baron, Vice-Chancellor Stuart, Vice-Chancellor James, Vice-Chancellor Malins, Mr. Baron Martin, Mr. Justice Hayes, Mr. Baron Pigott, the Judge Advocate-General, Sir R. J. Phillimore, General Sir John Aitchison, G. C. B., Alderman Sir B. W. Carden, Mr. Alderman Carter, the Attorney-General, Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir J. Yorke Scarlett, G.C.B., Mr. Alderman Dakin, Alderman Sir Sydney H. Waterlow, Alderman Sir F. G. Moon, Mr. Alderman Sydney, Mr. Alderman Salomons, M.P., Alderman Sir Benjamin Phillips, Rear-Admiral Ommamney, C.B., Alderman Sir Thomas Gabriel, Mr. Alderman Besley, Mr. R. N. Fowler, M.P., Colonel Frederick P. Layard, Mr. M'Arthur, M.P., Mr. Alderman Stone, Sir Charles Hood, Mr. Holms, M.P., Mr. Alderman Causton (sheriff elect), the Mayor of Southampton, Sir Thomas Henry, Sir Richard Bagallay, Q. C., Mr. Digby Seymour, Q. C., Mr. Serjeant Robinson, Mr. Serjeant Sleight, the Hon. George Denman, Q. C., Mr. Pollock, Q. C., Sir George Honynman, Q. C., Mr. E. K. Karlake, Q. C., Mr. Serjeant Parry, Mr. Locke, Q. C., M. P., Mr. Serjeant T. Atkinson, Mr. Serjeant Cox, the Master of the Haberdashers' Company, Mr. Watkin Williams, M. P., the Master of the Mercers' Company, Mr. Huddleston, Q. C., Mr. Giffard, Q. C., the Master of the Skinners' Company, Mr. Marmaduke Sampson, the Master of the Vintners' Company, Mr. James Valentin (Sheriff elect), Mr. Spinks, Q. C., Mr. Roxburgh, Q. C., Mr. Serjeant Simon, M. P., Mr. Serjeant Payne, Mr. Serjeant Sargood, Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. E. T. E. Besley, the Rev. Mr. Blomfield, M. A., Mr. H. B. Poland, Mr. Under-sheriff Crossley, Mr. Under-sheriff Slee, Rev. W. F. Elliott, M. A., Dr. Lankester, Mr. Deputy Fry, Mr. Secondary Potter, Mr. M. Soulsby, Mr. S. Dilberglue, Mr. H. Harben, Mr. W. H. Collingridge, Mr. James Grant, Mr. Charles White, Dr. W. Saunders, Mr. R. Harrison, &c.

The after dinner proceedings were inaugurated with the civic ceremonial of passing the loving cup, after which the usual loyal toasts were proposed by Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Cotton. To the toast of "The army, navy, and volunteers," proposed by Mr. Sheriff Hutton, General Aitchison responded for the army, Admiral Ommamney for the navy, and Lieut. H. E. Edmunds for the volunteers.

Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Cotton, in proposing the health of the Lord Chancellor, said that it was a toast which must be peculiarly acceptable to the citizens of London, when it was remembered that the father of the distinguished holder of that office was at one time an alderman of London, that he had not only filled the offices of Sheriff and Lord Mayor, but that he was also a great politician, and had been one of the strongest advocates of those principles which, though then in their infancy, his son had lived to see generally recognised and adopted. (Cheers.) In the successive offices to which the present Lord Chancellor had been called he had won for himself the esteem, respect, and affection of the country at large. (Cheers.)

The Lord Chancellor, in responding, attributed the kind and flattering remarks to which they had just listened—remarks which went far beyond his deserts—to a regard and esteem, which, to his mind, were of infinitely greater value than any expression of opinion, however gratifying as to his merits. Born almost immediately in the neighbourhood of the spot where they were that evening assembled, he was proud of the distinction of being a native of a city which he believed to be more remarkable than any that had ever existed. No doubt there were other cities which could boast of greater antiquity, but there were none that could show a longer possession of a civic government with all its privileges and advantages—a possession not of doubtful, misty, or mythical celebrity, but of marked and definite history. (Cheers.) He had seen a charter of the Conqueror, and under that charter they had been governed for over 800 years; but previously to that they had undoubtedly enjoyed all the privileges which could be conferred by the Roman municipal form of government—privileges which the charter itself only confirmed. The charter announced that the citizens of London "were law worthy"—a fine, noble word, which he was proud to say they had always deserved. Will all their violence and arrogance, for such qualities might undoubtedly be attributed to our Sovereigns down to the time of Edward I., the Norman conquerors had never ventured to assail the liberties of London. The citizens of London had never dreamt that happiness consisted solely in the acquisition of wealth and importance. Even looking in advance, they had kept in view those two principles upon which human civilisation and advancement depended—while holding firmly by the past they had struggled for further advancement in the future. (Cheers.) To have been born in a city which could boast such citizens was, he believed, a just source of pride. (Cheers.) When very early in life he paid a visit to the Central Criminal Court, he felt greatly interested in the law; but at the same time his mind was greatly revolted against what he then witnessed, because he could not but view with horror the condemnation of some seventy-four or seventy-five men and women, who, under the horrible and barbarous code which Romilly strove long and vainly to repeal, were sentenced to death, all knowing that only a small portion would really be executed, and the more confident laughing and gibing even in the dock at their less fortunate companions. Passing the Old Bailey one morning shortly afterwards, he saw the preparations for the erection of a scaffold, and on that scaffold were executed six persons, none of whom, as he subsequently learnt, had attained the age of twenty-four, and none of whom had committed a crime attended by the least violence. It was a matter of heartfelt thankfulness to him that a different state of things now existed. (Cheers.) Without trenching too much upon politics, he might also, he trusted, be permitted to express his satisfaction at finding the advantages generally recognised of principles which he had formerly heard abused as most dangerous in their character, and that he had lived to witness the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts, the emancipation of Roman Catholics, the repeal of the Corn and Navigation Laws, the extension of Reform carried, and approved by all parties in the State. (Cheers.) In the progress and adoption of those measures the citizens of London had taken a distinguished and a noble part. As a citizen of London, he had learnt the value and witnessed the results which attend the exercise of industry and independence. By a firm adherence to those two principles any man might get on in the world, and it was to steadfastly keeping them in remembrance that he attributed, under God, all the progress that he had made in life. (Cheers.) By the exercise of these two qualities it was within the power of any man, not, perhaps, to attain the precise office which he now held, but to attain a high position in the State. (Cheers.) The House of Lords had never stiffened and hardened into a caste or stagnated into a useless or languid institution, because the acknowledgment of this principle had led to a constant introduction of fresh blood, while in the persons of the younger sons of the nobility there was a constant absorption of the aristocracy among the people. (Cheers.) It was to these two circumstances that he in a great measure attributed the vitality which the House of Lords enjoyed as an institution. Upon such foundations, in his belief, rested those social, civic, and corporate privileges which this great nation had enjoyed—privileges which, inherited from our fathers would, he trusted, be carefully preserved and improved for the benefit of those who were to follow. (Cheers.)

"The Lord Chief Baron and Her Majesty's Common Law Judges," proposed by Mr. Sheriff Hutton, was responded to by the Lord Chief Baron; Vice-Chancellor Stuart returned thanks on behalf of "the Equity Judges," proposed by Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Cotton; Mr. Alderman Sidney replied on behalf of "the Corporation," proposed by Mr. Sheriff Hutton; Mr. Fowler, M.P., returned thanks for "the House of Commons," and the Hon. G. Denman, Q. C., for "the Bar of England." Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Cotton next proposed the health of the Nawab of Bengal, whose fidelity and attachment to this country during the Indian Mutiny had earned our gratitude and esteem, and to the toast his Highness responded shortly and in excellent English. The Lord Chancellor proposed "the Sheriffs," and both Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Cotton and Mr. Sheriff Hutton returned thanks. A few other toasts were proposed and duly acknowledged, and the company separated shortly after 11 o'clock.

SIR WILLIAM A'BECKETT, late Chief Justice of the colony of Victoria, died at his residence, Church-road, Upper Norwood, on Sunday last, after a long and severe illness, in his sixty-third year. He was educated at Westminster, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's-inn in 1829. He was afterwards Solicitor and Attorney-General of New South Wales, and resident judge at Port Phillip, and was Chief Justice of Victoria and Judge of the Admiralty Court.

MR. GOLDWIN SMITH.—We have no desire to comment upon Mr. Goldwin Smith's career in America if it is painful to the feelings of his admirers, but we presume that there is no profanity in quoting what the American papers say on the subject. We observe, then, that the Philadelphia Age remarks that it "always regarded him as an ignorant political charlatan"—language which we totally disapprove—and expresses satisfaction that he is "at last finding his level among the Radicals." The more decorous New York Times says:—"We fear Mr. Smith's opinions of the beneficial working of democracy in some directions will not be strengthened by his personal experiences in this country."

NEW POLICE MAGISTRATE AT LEEDS.—Last week Mr. W. Bruce, of the Midland Circuit, who has recently, on the requisition of the Town Council, been appointed stipendiary magistrate for Leeds, took his seat for the first time in the court of daily petty sessions. He was introduced by Mr. T. W. George, the Mayor, and accompanied by nearly all the old borough magistrates. Many members of the town council were also present, and the legal profession of the borough was numerous represented. Mr. Crawford, barrister-at-law, in the absence of Mr. Middleton, congratulated Mr. Bruce on his appointment, Mr. T. T. Dibb, solicitor, did the same for his own branch of the Profession. He observed that they were not at all insensible to the integrity and impartiality of the old Bench; but they felt great confidence that the legal knowledge which Mr. Bruce possessed in a high degree would tend to the maintenance of greater uniformity in the decisions of that court. Mr. Bruce replied that the way in which he had been received on that occasion was especially gratifying, inasmuch as both branches of the Profession appeared there to compliment him on his appointment. He knew that a person placed in his position would have many difficulties to contend with; but he hoped by having a careful consideration for the feelings and wishes of the gentlemen by whom he saw himself surrounded, both magistrates and gentlemen who from time to time appeared there as advocates, he should win for himself their kindest approbation. He hoped the public, too, would ever find that they were sure of a patient hearing and of the exercise of his best judgment in the matters to be brought before him. He hoped the generous consideration which had hitherto been shown to him by the Profession in Leeds would still be continued to him, and that he would ever be found deserving of it. The Mayor said the old Bench would act with the greatest cordiality and good feeling towards Mr. Bruce. The presence on that occasion of so many gentlemen of influence showed the importance which was attached to the appointment, for the first time, of a stipendiary magistrate for Leeds; and he could assure them that there was not the slightest feeling of jealousy on the part of the honorary magistrates in giving Mr. Bruce this welcome. As to a greater uniformity in the decisions of the Bench, he hoped every improvement in that respect which seemed to be anticipated would be fully realised. Mr. Ferns, solicitor, took occasion to pay a well-merited compliment to Mr. Robert Barr, who for many years had been clerk to the magistrates, and that gentleman feelingly responded.

BREAKFAST—EPPS'S COCOA—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—The very agreeable character of this preparation has rendered it a general favourite. The Civil Service Gazette remarks:—"The singular success which Mr. Epps attained by his homeopathic preparation of cocoa has never been surpassed by any experimentalist. By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills." Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold by the Trade only in 4lb., 2lb., and 1lb. tin-lined packets, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homeopathic Chemists, London."

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

APPRENTICESHIP—PARTNERSHIP.—B., on 8th April 1865, was bound apprentice to C. and D. for five years. No premium was paid. On Dec. 9 in the same year the partnership was dissolved, C. continuing to carry on the business. At the time of the dissolution B. was told that he would be required to work out his apprenticeship with C., which he agreed to do, and continued so to serve until Aug. 3, 1868, when he absented himself. It was held that by the dissolution of partnership B. ceased to be under any obligation to continue to serve C.: (Brooks v. Dawson, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 611. Q. B.)

NUISANCES—ON WHOM ORDER OF REMOVAL TO BE MADE.—A nuisance was caused on the premises of B. by the overflow of the sewage from cesspools, to which ran the sewage of several occupiers of houses at a considerable distance from them. The premises of the respondent and the others contributing to the sewages were in all respects properly secured, and no nuisance arose upon their premises. The question was on whom the order of removal should be made, upon the person on whose land the nuisance was found, or the persons who contributed to it from far off. The magistrates dismissed an information against one of the occupiers of the contributory houses, being of opinion that their authority was only to order a nuisance to be abated where it existed in fact, and that it was no part of their duty to trace it to its source. On an appeal from this decision, the court held that the order should be made upon the contributors to the nuisance, and they directed the justices to find specially if in their judgment the respondent contributed to the nuisance: (Guardians, &c., of the Hendon Union v. Bowles, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 609. Q. B.)

POOR-LAW—SETTLEMENT BY RENTING—EVIDENCE.—A declaration of a deceased occupier that he rented of B. at 22l. per annum, and paid the rent for the same, is good evidence not only of the tenancy, but of the amount and payment of the rent. It seems that, apart from such declaration, the undisturbed occupation of premises for some years is of itself a presumption of the fact that rent was paid: (Reg. v. Inhabitants of Exeter, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 693. Q. B.)

POST-OFFICE—DELIVERY OF LETTERS OTHERWISE THAN BY THE POST.—By the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 33, the Postmaster-General has the exclusive privilege of conveying letters from place to place, with this exception (inter alia), "Letters sent by a messenger on purpose concerning the private affairs of the sender or receiver thereof." The appellants were a company formed in London, called "The Circular Delivery Company (Limited)," the purpose being "to deliver for or on behalf of its shareholders and members circulars, newspapers, &c." One Jules Clavelle, who was a shareholder, delivered a business circular to the offices of the company, in an envelope, to be delivered according to its address, "Messrs. Newell and Son, 5 Eccleston-street, N. W." The company caused it to be delivered accordingly at its address. Held, that this was a violation of the Act, and was not within the exemption: (Circular Delivery Company v. Clare, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 701. Q. B.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—CONTRACT—INFORMATION.—An information under sect. 9 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 14 is good, although not framed in the alternative requiring defendant to pay damages or to fulfil the contract. B. applied to the Free Labour Registration Society for labourers, and there filled up and signed a form headed "Form to be filled up by employers requiring hands from the Free Labour Registration Society," stating the terms and the probable duration of the employment. This was read to C., who signed a document stating that he had accepted employment at D. (B.'s address), and that he would not quit without just and reasonable cause. This document was held to refer sufficiently to the document signed by B., and that the two constituted a good contract in writing: (Crane v. Powell, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 703. C.P.)

The death of Colonel Smyth, of Heath Hall, near Wakefield, is announced. For many years the deceased gentleman represented York, and was well known and respected throughout the county, having taken an active part in magisterial business, especially in the West Riding. He was father-in-law of the Earl of Harewood.

A VERY GRAND JURY.—A curious scene occurred at the Tralee quarter sessions. While the grand jury were considering the bills of indictment the chairman having disposed of the business in hand, sent to request that they would bring into court, any bills that might have been found, in order that the trials might be proceeded with forthwith. The grand jury peremptorily refused to send down any bills until they had considered the whole. The learned chairman then sent for the grand jurors themselves, and soundly rated them for their disrespect to the court.

COUNTY EXPENDITURE.—The accounts of the county treasurers of England and Wales for the year ending at Michaelmas 1868, show that the valuation on which the assessment for the county rate is made amounted in that year to 86,385,448l. Generally the valuation greatly increases, but in 1867 an enormous increase of more than ten millions occurred, and that great advance has not been quite maintained. Several counties, indeed, show an increased valuation in 1868, but they are more than counterpoised by two reductions. The assessment for West Sussex, which in 1866 was 435,455l., was advanced in 1867 to 993,525l., but in 1868 was reduced to 558,070l.; and Warwickshire, raised from 1,412,104l. in 1866 to 2,664,688l. in 1867, was reduced in 1868 to 1,410,266l. The receipts from county and police rates in all the counties of England and Wales amounted to 1,290,658l. in 1865, 1,358,762l. in 1866, 1,446,937l. in 1867, 1,500,566l. in 1868. Including Treasury allowances and all other receipts, the total receipts of county treasurers amounted to 1,956,350l. in 1865, 2,426,682l. in 1866 (including the exceptional item of cattle diseases rate, 368,000l.), 2,287,347l. in 1867, and 2,292,949l. in 1868. The total expenditure has been 2,009,691l. in 1865, 2,415,837l. in 1866 (including 350,262l. under the Cattle Diseases Act), 2,278,640l. in 1867, 2,326,846l. in 1868.

VAGRANCY.—A committee of Northamptonshire magistrates, appointed by the Court of Quarter Sessions for the consideration of the above question, met at the county hall, Northampton, on Saturday last, presided over by the Right. Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., the chairman of the court, and agreed to the following resolutions:—1. That in the opinion of this committee the relief of tramps and vagrants throughout England and Wales, and the sole control over all buildings, wards, and cells, for the lodging of such persons, ought to be intrusted to the police. 2. That the expenditure for the foregoing purposes should be charged upon the county or borough rate. 3. That it is desirable that a ticket-of-way system for the repression and regulation of vagrancy be made universal by law. 4. That the separate system should be adopted in all buildings provided for the reception of tramps and vagrants, and that cleanliness should be strictly enforced. 5. That householders and others ought to be further protected from the intrusion of vagrants and the curtilages of their dwellings in the day time, by making it penal for a person to be found within the same, having no fixed residence, and not being able to give a good account of himself. 6. That the costs of the prosecution of vagrants ought to be charged upon the county or borough rate.

TURNPIKES.—The Commons' Select Committee on the annual Turnpike Acts Continuance Bill have made their report upon the various trusts named in the schedule to the Bill. The committee state that they have in several cases hesitated to recommend the discontinuance of a trust where otherwise they would have thought it expedient to do so; for the evidence taken has led them to the conclusion that, although the present turnpike system is vexatious in its mode of collection, in many cases costly in its management, as well as arbitrary and partial in its operation, still in the present state of the highway laws to abolish turnpike trusts singly, as they become free from debt, is a course often attended with injustice to the parishes on which the liability for future repairs falls, and one which, in some instances at least, leads to the deterioration of the roads. A new and heavy burden is frequently imposed on the ratepayers of the parishes through which the road passes, without relieving them from the obligation of paying tolls on other trusts in their immediate neighbourhood. The committee are of opinion that a measure dealing with the whole system of the roads in England and North Wales should be brought forward by the Government at the very earliest opportunity; and that in order to render the management of roads, which have ceased to be turnpike roads, efficient and economical, and to secure the equitable distribution of expenses, it is desirable that the area of management should be extended considerably beyond the limits prescribed by the existing law; and, the present Highway Act having proved unsatisfactory, the committee are of opinion that the operation of any general road measure should be made uniform as far as possible. They add that no greater cases of prospective hardship on parishes came before them than where the line of road, with a very heavy mineral and trading traffic between large towns, or to and from railway stations, passed for a considerable distance through agricultural parishes; and they consider that whatever may be the provisions of a general measure as regards other parts of the country, some special provision will have to be made to meet these cases.

VAGRANCY.—Mr. C. E. Thornhill, chairman of the board of guardians of the Woodstock Union, offers the following suggestions for the relief and treatment of the casual poor:—"Repeal the existing laws having reference to settlement and removal. Then every destitute person must be relieved by the union in which he may become destitute. But the resident and non-resident poor must not be dealt with alike. Every person who at the time of his application for relief should have resided as occupier, lodger, or servant for four weeks continuously in any one place of abode within the union should be a resident; every other person should be a non-resident. Provide for the relief of the resident poor as at present. Provide for the relief of destitute persons non-resident in the manner following: Establish in every union a non-resident workhouse, containing cellular accommodation for males and females; workyard and workrooms adjoining to, but not in communication with, the existing workhouses. Admit every destitute non-resident applicant on condition (to be explained to and accepted by him) that he should remain not less than fourteen days. Impose hard labour, by piecework, to be superintended by work-masters who should have the authority of constables; the hours of labour, and the nature and value, by piece, thereof to be settled from time to time by the guardians, with the approval of the Poor Law Board. The value of the labour should be so fixed that it would yield to a man working with industry a small daily balance beyond the cost of his maintenance. The diet should be of the simplest character consistent with health. Every person who should receive non-resident relief, and should wish to be discharged, at any time not less than fourteen and not more than twenty-eight days, should be started for such place as he should specify, with a ticket-of-way, and should be entitled to the value of his labour, over and above the cost of his maintenance; but such value should not in any case be given in money, it should be given in kind—clothing, for instance, provisions for his onward journey, railway fare, &c. Every person who should receive non-resident relief, and should not be willing at the expiration of twenty-eight days to proceed on his journey, should be deemed to have acquired the position of a resident, should be admitted to the ordinary workhouse, and should have his case laid before the board at the next meeting, but he should not in such case, be entitled to any portion of his earnings. The board should have power, under certain circumstances, to impose a further term of service in the non-resident workhouse before final admittance to the ordinary workhouse, and for certain specified offences should have power to send able-bodied residents receiving relief in the ordinary workhouse to the non-resident workhouse. No non-resident applicant should be exempted from the probationary service in the non-resident workhouse, except in cases of sickness duly certified, and then, the sickness being past, the probation should commence, or be completed, as the case might be; or except in the case next provided. "It should be lawful for the board of guardians of every union to grant to any poor person resident in the union who should prove to the satisfaction of the board his desire to proceed on a journey to any specified place or places in search of work, or for any other reasonable purpose, and his inability, for want of means to do so, a ticket-of-way, showing the proposed journey and other particulars; and every person who should produce a ticket-of-way at any workhouse on the route indicated thereby, should have food and lodging for one night, and should be allowed to proceed without work on the following day, notice of the relief being indorsed on his ticket-of-way. If it should be proved that a person making application for non-resident relief had received similar relief at the same or any other union within eight months preceding the application, such person should be liable to imprisonment as a vagrant."

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WILL—DIVESTING CLAUSE—SURVIVORS OR SURVIVOR.—A testator gave all his real and personal estate upon trust for B. for life, or until her marriage, and after her death or marriage, upon trust to transfer the same to five named persons in equal shares and proportions, their interests to be vested interests respectively from the time of his decease. By a codicil, after reciting the gift of the residue in his will, the testator directed his trustees to pay the residue, not only to the five persons named in the will, but also to three other named persons in equal parts, shares, and proportions, and he directed that, in case of the death of any one of them before B.'s death or marriage, the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying, should go and be paid to the survivor or survivors of them equally share and share alike. All the parties named in the will survived the testator, but pre-deceased B., who died unmarried in 1864: Held, that the divesting clause in the codicil applied to the legatees named in the will, as well as to those named in the codicil, but that, inasmuch as all died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, it had no operation, and each of them took his original gift, transmissible to his representatives: (Marratt v. Abell, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 690. V. C. M.)

PARTNERSHIP ARRANGEMENTS.

107. Deed of dissolution of partnership.

This indenture made, &c., between A. B. of, &c. [retiring partner], of the one part, and C. D., of, &c. [continuing partner], of the other part. Whereas the said parties hereto on the day of 18, entered into partnership as at in the county of for the term of years thence next ensuing, upon certain terms and conditions then agreed upon between them, and it was among other things agreed that they should be interested in the profits and losses of the said partnership in equal shares. And whereas the said A. B. having determined to retire from the said partnership, and the said C. D. being willing to continue and carry on the said business on his own account, it has been mutually agreed between the said parties hereto that the said partnership shall be dissolved, and the said partnership is this day dissolved accordingly, and the said A. B. shall on the signing hereof retire from the said concern, and a notice of such dissolution signed by the said parties hereto is intended to be inserted in the London Gazette. And whereas the said A. B. has agreed to assign his share in the profits, goodwill, fixtures, capital, stock-in-trade, credits, profits, and effects of the said partnership, and all his interest in the tenancies of the places of business occupied by the said partnership unto the said C. D. in consideration of the said C. D. paying to the said A. B. the sum of £ in cash by instalments of £ per and accepting and delivering to him and duly paying at maturity a certain bill of exchange for the sum of £ bearing date the day of 18, drawn by the said A. B. on the said C. D. payable after date. Now this indenture witnesseth that in pursuance of the said recited agreements and in consideration of the covenant on the part of the said C. D., for payment of the said sum of £ by instalments, at £ each, and for payment of the said bill of exchange hereinafter contained, he, the said A. B., doth by these presents assign, transfer and set over, ratify, and confirm unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, All that the one equal moiety or half part, and all other the part, share, and interest of him the said A. B., of and in all and singular the goods, wares, merchandise, stock-in-trade, profits, capital, credits, fixtures, goodwill, books, property, and effects belonging or due and owing to them the said A. B. and C. D., as such partners as aforesaid; And all the estate and interest of him the said A. B. in the tenancies of the places of business occupied by the said partnership, and all the estate, right, title, and interest, both legal and equitable, of him the said A. B., of, in, and to the hereby assigned premises, and every part thereof. To have, hold, receive, and take the said one equal moiety, or half part, and all other the part, share, or interest of and in the said goods, stock-in-trade, profits, capital, credits, fixtures, goodwill, books, property, tenancies, and effects, and all and singular other the premises hereby assigned unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own proper goods, chattels, credits, and effects absolutely. And for the better enabling the said C. D., his executors, or administrators, to recover and receive the said partnership credits and effects, he, the said A. B., doth by these presents constitute and appoint the said C. D., his executors, or administrators, to be the true and lawful attorney and attorneys irrevocable of him the said A. B., in the names of the said A. B. and C. D., or in the name or names of the said A. B., his executors, or administrators, or otherwise, as occasion shall require, but for the exclusive benefit and at the sole risk and cost of the said C. D., his executors or administrators, to ask, demand, sue for, recover, and receive of and from the person or persons to whom it shall or may belong, to pay and deliver the same, all and singular the credits, sum, and sums of money and effects of the said partnership, and to give effectual receipts, or other sufficient releases and discharges for the same, and to employ such legal or equitable ways and means for enforcing the payment and getting in of such credits and effects respectively, as may be deemed expedient, and one or more substitute or substitutes for all, any, or either of the purposes aforesaid, to substitute or appoint, and such substitution or appointment at pleasure to revoke and generally to do, or cause to be done, whatsoever shall be necessary for giving the said C. D., his executors or administrators, the full benefit of the assignment hereby made, and the said A. B. doth hereby, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, in manner following (that is to say), that he, the said A. B. hath not contracted any debt or obligation, whereby or by means whereof the said C. D., his executors or administrators, or the joint stock and effects of the said partnership, may be charged or prejudiced, and also that he, the said A. B., hath not received or discharged any credits of the said partnership that have not been duly entered in the books of the said partnership, or done, or permitted any act, deed, matter, or thing whatsoever, whereby the share of him, the said A. B., in the said premises hereby assigned, or any part thereof, can be charged, incumbered, or prejudicially affected, and also that he, the said A. B., his executors, or administrators shall, and will, from time to time, and at all times hereafter, at the request and costs of the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns enter into and execute all such further assurances for the more perfectly or satisfactorily vesting the said premises hereby assigned in the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, or enabling him and them to recover and receive the same as he or they, or his or their counsel in the law, shall require, and as shall be tendered to be done and executed. And moreover that the said A. B., his executors or administrators, will not at any time hereafter revoke or attempt to revoke the power or authority hereinbefore given, nor receive, compound, or discharge any of the said partnership credits, nor release, disavow, become nonsuit, or in anywise interfere in any action or suit that may be commenced or prosecuted by the said C. D., his executors or administrators, in pursuance of the powers and authorities hereinbefore contained in respect of the said hereby assigned premises. And the said C. D. doth hereby, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with the said A. B., his executors or administrators, that he, the said C. D., his executors or administrators, shall and will well and truly pay unto the said A. B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, the said sum of £ by instalments of £, on the day of every until the whole of the said sum of £ shall be fully paid and satisfied, the first payment to be made on the day of 18, and also that he, the said C. D., his executors, or administrators, shall and will duly pay at maturity to the said A. B. or other the holder thereof the said bill of exchange hereinafter mentioned for the said sum of £, and also shall and will pay all rents hereafter to accrue due in respect of the premises occupied for the purpose of the said partnership business, and will pay all the debts and liabilities owing from the said A. B. and C. D. in respect of the said partnership. And also shall and will from time to time, and at all times hereafter, well and sufficiently protect, defend, save, harmless, and keep indemnified the said A. B., his heirs, executors, and administrators, and his and their lands and tenements, goods and chattels, of from and against all costs, damages, and expenses in respect thereof respectively (except such debts, if any, as the said A. B. may have contracted on the partnership account, and not entered in the books thereof), and also of from and against all costs, damages, and expenses which shall or may be incurred in or about any action, suit, or other proceeding that shall or may be brought or prosecuted by the said C. D., his executors, administrators or assigns, in the name or names of the said A. B., his executors or administrators, by virtue of the power or authority hereinbefore contained, or in anywise in relation thereto. And this indenture also witnesseth that in consideration of the premises, the said A. B. doth by these presents acquit, release, and discharge the said C. D., his heirs, executors, and administrators, and his and their estates and effects whatsoever and wheresoever (but subject nevertheless, and without prejudice, to the covenants herein contained), from and of all actions, suits, accounts, reckonings, claims, and demands whatsoever both at law and in equity, which the said A. B., his heirs, executors, or administrators now hath or ever had, or shall or may at any time or times hereafter have, claim, challenge, or demand against the said C. D., his heirs, executors, or administrators on account of the said hereinbefore mentioned agreement of partnership, or any clause, agreement, matter, or thing therein contained, or on account of any other matter or thing whatsoever relating to the said partnership business, or in any way connected therewith. And this indenture further witnesseth that in consideration of the premises, the said C. D. doth by these presents acquit, release, and discharge the said A. B., his heirs, executors, and administrators, and his and their estates and effects whatsoever and wheresoever (but subject nevertheless and without prejudice to the covenants herein contained), from and of all actions, suits, accounts, reckonings, claims, and demands whatsoever, both at law and in equity, which the said C. D., his heirs, executors, or administrators now hath or ever had, or shall or may at any time or times hereafter have, claim, challenge, or demand against the said A. B., his heirs, executors, or administrators, on account of the said hereinbefore mentioned agreement of partnership, or any clause, agreement, matter, or thing therein contained, or on account of any other matter or thing whatsoever relating to the said partnership business, or in anywise connected therewith. MERCANTILE LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SALE OF GOODS—DESCRIPTION.—The plaintiff bought of the defendants rice for shipment to America, described as "best Siam rice in double bags." The bags meant were gunny bags. The defendants delivered rice in single cotton bags, which were thicker and closer made than the gunny bags, and the rice arrived in America in perfect condition, but the plaintiff refused to accept it because it was not in double bags. It was proved that in New York rice in double bags was more saleable than rice in single bags, and that double bags were considered as essential for transit to the west. Held, that the mode of packing affected the quality and description of the thing sold, and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to reject the rice: (Makin v. The London Rice Mill Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 705. C. P.)

ANSWERS TO THE FINAL EXAMINATION QUESTIONS.

TRINITY TERM 1869.—FIRST DAY.

I. PRELIMINARY.

Questions 1 to 5 inclusive.

II. COMMON AND STATUTE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS. (a)

6. Attachment of judgment debts.—A judge may, upon the ex parte application of the judgment creditor, upon affidavit by himself or his attorney, stating that judgment has been obtained and is still unsatisfied, and to what amount, and that any other person (called the garnishee) is indebted to the judgment-debtor, and is within the jurisdiction, order that all debts owing from such third person to the judgment-debtor be attached to answer the judgment debt; and the garnishee may be ordered to appear and show cause why he should not pay the amount due from him to the judgment-debtor in satisfaction of the judgment. If the garnishee does not pay the amount, or dispute the debt, the judge may order execution to issue. If the garnishee disputes his liability, the judge orders a writ to issue to try the point: (See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 66, 67; Digest, 100, 5th edit.)

7. Covenants.—In respect of such covenants as run with the land; as a covenant to pay rent: (See Spencer's case, 1 Sm. L. C.; Digest 3, 5th edit.)

8. Chose in action.—This phrase is sometimes used to signify a right of bringing an action, and at others the thing itself which forms the subject-matter of that right. But it more properly includes the idea, both of the thing itself and of the right of action as annexed to it. Thus, money due on bond is a chose in action; for there is no possession till recovered by due course of law (Digest, 10, 163, 5th edit.)

9. Distress.—A distress for rent arrear must be made by day, and for this purpose day commences at sunrise, and ends at sunset: (Tutton v. Darr, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 361.) But a distress damage feasant may be made by night, lest the cattle should escape. The distress should be on the premises. An outer door cannot be broken open for this purpose. But when the party making the distress is in the house, an inner door may be broken open: (Seymour's case, 1 Sm. L. C. 38.) And where goods have been fraudulently removed and locked up to prevent a distress, the landlord may within thirty days after, by the assistance of the peace officer of the parish, and oath having been made before a justice, in case it is a dwelling-house, of a reasonable ground to suspect that such goods are concealed therein, break open, in the daytime, the place where the goods are. (11 Geo. 2. c. 19; 3 St. C. 362, 363, 5th edit.; Digest 117, 5th edit.)

10. Recovery of specific chattels.—Yes; detinue may be brought; and by the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, if there be a contract to deliver specific goods for a price, the jury may, by leave of the judge, at the trial, find what the goods are, what the plaintiff has to pay for the same; and by the leave of the court or judge execution may issue for the goods on payment of the price: (See Digest 40, 5th edit.)

11. Lien.—A lien is the right of retaining the possession of a chattel from the owner until a certain claim upon it is satisfied. A general lien is a right to detain a chattel until payment be made, not only for the particular articles, but for any balance that may be due on a general account in the same line of business; thus attorneys have a general lien on all papers in their hands belonging to their clients for their general costs. A particular lien is given to every person to whom a chattel has been delivered for the purpose of bestowing his labour upon it. Thus a tailor is not bound to deliver clothes which he has made until the price for making them be paid: (2 Steph. Com. 81. 4th edit.; Digest 9, 5th edit.)

If a vendor has a lien on goods for the price, this is not destroyed by the Statute of Limitations governing personal actions: (Digest 45, 5th edit.)

12. Property—Loss.—The loss of the first lot of 100 bales of cotton falls on the buyer; for as the parcel was ascertained and distinguished at the time of the contract, the property in the cotton passed to the buyer. But as to the 100 bales unselected and unascertained, the loss will fall on the vendor, for no property therein passed to the buyer by the contract: (See Blossam v. Saunders, 4 B. & C. 948; Tarling v. Baxter, 6 B. & C. 360.)

13. Contribution.—Yes; the whole may be levied against one; but, if the action be founded on contract, he has a right to compel the other to contribute, though not if founded on tort, as a general rule: (Merryweather v. Nison, 2 Sm. L. C. 296; Digest, 42, 98, 5th edit.)

14. Distress.—Replevin is the usual remedy for an illegal distress, and, if no rent be due, trespass will lie, or the tenant may waive the trespass and bring case or trover for the value of the articles taken, or detinue for the things themselves. If some rent is due, case, and not replevin, is the proper remedy (Arch. L. & T. 230, et seq., 2nd edit.); for if a man having a right to distrain for 5*l.* distrain for 500*l.*, a replevin, without making a sufficient tender before the impounding, is not the proper remedy: (Wood, L. & T. 794, 9th edit.; Skate v. Reale, 4 Jur. 766, 767.)

15. Inspection of documents.—Either party, on an affidavit of his belief that any document to the production of which he is entitled for the purposes of discovery or otherwise, is in the possession or power of the opposite party, may obtain an order that such party state, on affidavit what documents he has in his possession or power relating to the matters in dispute, and whether he objects to their production, and, if so, on what grounds, and such further order is then to be made as is just: (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 50; Sm. Act. 104, 9th edit.)

16. Debts.—(1) Reasonable funeral and testamentary expenses; (2) specialty debts and arrears of rent; (3) simple contract debts; (4) specific legacies; (5) general legacies: (Digest, 304, 5th edit.)

17. Parties to sue.—Bankruptcy.—The court may authorise the assignees to sue C. in their own name and that of the remaining partner (B.) for the price of the goods. But B. is to have notice of the application, and may oppose it; and if he claims no benefit in the matter, he is to be indemnified as to costs: (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 152.)

18. Bill of exchange.—The holder should present the bill for payment to the acceptor when due and payable, and in case of dishonour give notice thereof to the drawer: (See Bickerdike v. Bolman, Sm. L. C. vol. 2; Digest, 21, 5th edit.)

19. Principal and agent.—If the vendor at the time of the sale knew the principal and still elected to give credit to the agent, he cannot afterwards recover the value against the known principal. But if the principal be not known at the time of the sale to the agent, then, as a rule, either the agent or the principal may be sued: (Paterson v. Gaudasequi, Sm. L. C. vol. 2, Digest, 13, 5th edit.)

20. Tender.—No tender of part of an entire demand is invalid: (Chit. Cont. 711, 7th edit.)

III. CONVEYANCING.

21. Settlement of realty.—The real estate of the intended husband would be vested in trustees to the use of the husband for life, with an allowance for pin money for the wife, and a rentcharge or annuity by way of jointure if she should survive her husband. Subject to this, and to the payment of portions for younger children the realty is settled upon the first and other sons successively in tail, and then to the daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between the daughters, the ultimate limitation being to the husband in fee. The 10,000*l.* might be either given to the husband, or settled upon the younger children, as their portion, instead of making the portion a charge on the realty: (2 Prid. Conv. 237, 4th edit.; Digest 236, 5th edit.)

22. Settlement of personalty.—The property should be vested in trustees to pay the income to the wife for life for her sole and separate use without power of anticipation; and after her death upon trust for the husband until he become bankrupt, or made any charge or assignment thereof, or should die; and after the death of both, or death of wife and bankruptcy, &c., of husband, to the issue of the marriage as husband and wife or survivor should have appointed; and, in default of appointment, in trust for issue, &c.; and, in default of issue, to the next of kin of wife, or as she should appoint by will: (See Digest, 220, 221, 4th edit.; 235, 5th edit.)

23. Farming lease.—After the date, parties, demise, habendum and reddendum, follow reservations of timber, underwood, rights of entry, way, sporting, &c. Covenants by the tenant to pay rent and taxes; to keep in repair buildings, gates, hedges, watercourses, &c.; and to cultivate in a husbandlike manner; restrictions against converting pasture into tillage, or sowing or planting flax, &c., under penalty of an additional rent; and against selling or removing dung or compost; and against assigning or under-letting. Covenants to pay stated damages for waste, &c. Powers of re-entry for the landlord on bankruptcy or insolvency of the lessee, or on nonpayment of rent or breach of covenant. These are the ordinary terms, but special covenants are often requisite: (Digest, 175, 5th edit.)

24. Lease—Forfeiture.—Before 1859, a licence to break a covenant, as to part only of the property contained in a lease, extended to the whole; and, consequently, the subsequent assignment of the other part was no forfeiture; but by the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 2, it is provided that a licence with respect to part only of the property demised, is not to destroy the right of re-entry as to the remainder of the property: (Langley's Trustee Acts, p. 6.)

25. Lease—Executors.—A lessee is liable, notwithstanding any assignment; but he usually requires the assignee to indemnify him against the rents and covenants. So his executor is liable as such to the extent of the assets; and formerly even after he had assigned the lease, and may even become personally liable. The 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, however, now protects an executor (liable as such on the covenants in a lease of his testator) from further liability, if he has satisfied all claims in respect thereof due up to the time when he assigns it over to a purchaser, and has also set apart a sufficient fund to answer any future claim that may be made in respect of any fixed sum covenanted by the lessee to be laid out on the demised property, although the time for laying it out has not then arrived: (Sect. 27, Digest 177, 5th edit.)

26. Search for incumbrances.—Search should be made by the purchaser's solicitor, in the Common Pleas Registry Office, for judgment, its pendens, and Crown debts, for a period of five years back and for annuities (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 22; 18 Vict. c. 15); and if any judgment is found registered which was entered up after the 23rd July 1860, also for registered writs of execution for a period of three calendar months back (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, ss. 1, 2). After five years have run from the 29th July 1864, it will not be necessary to search for judgments, only writs of execution. Where the property lies in Middlesex, Yorkshire, Kingston-upon-Hull, or the Bedford Levels, search must be made in the local register (2 to 7 Anne; 8 Geo. 2, c. 6). Search is also sometimes made for bankruptcy and insolvency: (See Sdg. Conc. V. 394, &c.; Digest, 215, 5th edit.)

27. Will, &c.—The solicitor should inform his client that as the will is framed only to pass personal estate, his intention of equally dividing his property between his two children will be defeated unless he alters his will so as to meet the new form of property acquired; for of course the newly-purchased realty would descend upon the son as heir-at-law, even before the conveyance was complete. But see and consider the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, s. 2, and Piper v. Piper, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 458, with reference to this question.

28. Duties of solicitor as to insurance.—Heshould inquire whether the house is insured against fire, and in what office, and to what amount; and if the premises are insured to a sufficient amount, he should wait upon the insurance company and obtain their consent to an assignment of the policy, for no assignment of it can be made without this consent. If the company decline to give their assent to the assignment a new insurance should be effected in a good office and for a sufficient sum: (See Will. P. P. 161, &c., 5th edit.)

29. Estate tail.—Assuming the word "reversion" in the question to mean remainder, and that the tenant for life is the protector of the settlement, such a disposition would create a base fee only: (see 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, ss. 21, 22, 34); but after the death of the tenant of life the tenant in tail has power to enlarge the base fee into a fee simple absolute (s. 19) by a disposition under this Act (s. 41). The mortgagee should therefore get the tenant in tail when he creates the base fee by way of mortgage to enter into a covenant to enlarge the estate on the death of the tenant for life, to which may be added a policy of assurance upon the life of the tenant in tail which should be assigned by way of collateral security: (Hughes' Conv. 363.)

30. Dower of widow.—As to the freeholds of inheritance, the widow may, on the death of her husband, claim dower out of equitable as well as legal estates of inheritance in possession, excepting, of course, estates in joint tenancy; also out of lands to which the husband had a right merely. On the other hand, no widow is entitled to dower out of lands which have been absolutely disposed of by the husband in his lifetime, or by his will. And all partial debts, estates, &c., created by the husband, are effectual as against the widow's dower. The husband may also bar her right, either wholly or partially, by any declaration for that purpose made by him, by any deed, or by his will. As to the copyholds, the widow's freebench is regulated by the custom of the manor. She has no claim to dower out of leaseholds: (Digest 168, et seq., 5th edit.; 1 St. C. 267, et seq., 4th edit.)

31. Descent among collaterals.—The father being dead, and all his descendants having failed, the inheritance will next pass to the paternal grandfather of the purchaser, but he being dead, his issue must be exhausted; which being done, the issue of the paternal great grandfather of the purchaser next inherit. All the male paternal ancestors of the purchaser and their descendants having failed, the female paternal ancestors are sought out, and their heirs admitted. And it must be remembered that in this line the mother of a more remote male paternal ancestor and her heirs are admitted before the mother of a less remote ancestor, and her heirs. After the female paternal ancestors and their heirs comes the mother of the purchaser with respect to whom the same process is to be pursued as has before been described as to the purchaser's father. Her issue failing, the issue of the male maternal ancestor is taken in proper order; and lastly, the descendants of the female maternal ancestors inherit; and when these are resorted to the mother of a more remote male maternal ancestor and her heirs are taken before the mother of a less remote ancestor: (See the Table, Will. R. P. 102, 7th edit.)

32. Perpetuities.—This rule declares that property cannot be tied up for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years after, allowing a further period for gestation if it actually exists. If the limitation exceeds this period, it is void, and the property will fall into the residue, if one, unless it is the residue itself that is thus limited; in which case, or if there be no residuary gift, it descends to the heir-at-law of the testator: (See Cadell v. Palmer, Tud. L. C. C.; Digest, 253, 6th edit.)

33. Scintilla juris.—The doctrine of scintilla juris was a debated point, but the better opinion was, that if there were uses in esse and also contingent uses limited by the settlement, that no actual seisin remained in the seisinee to serve the contingent uses when they arose, but only a possibility of seisin or scintilla juris, to take effect when the contingent uses became vested: (See Chudleigh's case, Tud. L. C. C. 200.) This doctrine is now abolished, the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 providing that all uses, whether immediate, future or contingent, shall take effect as they arise by force of the seisin originally vested in the trustee to uses; and the continued existence in him of any seisin or scintilla juris shall not be necessary to give effect to future or contingent uses, &c.: (Sect. 7; Digest, 198, 5th edit.)

34. Covenants.—All the covenants contained in the original lease, save that as to renewal, for covenants for renewal, are construed more in favour of lessor than lessee: (Hughes Conv. 498.)

35. Lease by tenant for life—Reversioner.—Supposing the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 32, does not apply, the lease of the tenant for life ends with his death, unless made under a power, so that the remainderman cannot by his own act confirm it. But in such a case acceptance of rent, as rent, by the remainderman, will be evidence of a new tenancy from year to year, so as to render a notice to quit necessary: (Arch. L. & T. 10, 2nd edit.) However, it must be remembered, that if the lease be of a farm at rack rent the tenant is to hold over until the end of his current year's tenancy, instead of taking emblements, and then quit without notice, and the remainderman is entitled to a fair proportion of the rent: (14 & 15 Vict. c. 25.)

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SEQUESTRATION—CLERGYMAN'S LIFE ESTATE.—A writ of sequestration may issue, although a partial levy has been made under a former writ. The clergyman having only a life estate in certain freehold rents, in consequence of which the sheriff could not make the usual return of nulla bona. (Rabbitts v. Woodward, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 693. V.C.J.)

CHURCH BUILDING ACTS—DEATH OF INCUMBENT—NOMINATION TO INCUMBENCY.—The church of the Holy Trinity, Hotwells, Bristol, was built in 1830 by subscription, under the provisions of 5 Geo. 4, c. 103. In April 1864 one of the three life trustees, who until that time had been duly elected as vacancies occurred under sect. 7, died, and the other two life trustees and Fowler, one of the plaintiffs in this action of quare impedit, were the only three surviving original subscribers of more than 50*l.* each. In April 1866 one of the said two surviving life trustees died, and in July of that year Fowler, not being aware that the other life trustee was alive, formally nominated himself life trustee upon notice given under sect. 7. In April 1867 the said last surviving trustee died; in Aug. 1867 the incumbency of the said church became vacant, and in the same month Fowler presented the co-plaintiff to the vacant incumbency. Although at the building of the church a pew was allotted to Fowler, he was not a pewowner or renter at either of the other dates mentioned. On the 5th Sept. 1867 Fowler gave notice a second time of a meeting to elect life trustees; on the 7th of the same month he became the owner of a pew; and on the 20th he again nominated himself life trustee, and immediately afterwards again presented the co-plaintiff to the incumbency. The incumbent of the parish, one of the defendants, had, however, before the last-mentioned date, presented one of his co-defendants to the incumbency, and the bishop of the diocese, the other co-defendant, inducted him accordingly. Held, upon a special case for the opinion of the court as to the validity of these two presentations, that Fowler did not become a life trustee by election either in 1866 or 1867: Held, also (per Brett, J.), that whilst Fowler was alive, although he was not an owner or renter of a pew, "all the subscribers entitled to elect trustees" mentioned in sect. 12 were not dead therefore the presentation by the incumbent of the parish was invalid: And that Fowler became a life trustee under sect. 8, upon the death of all but three subscribers of sums over 50*l.* in April 1864, and, therefore, the presentation of the co-plaintiff was valid: Held, however, by the majority of the court (Willes and Keating, JJ.), that the 8th section applied only to a case in which the original subscribers of 50*l.* each were limited to three: "that, all the subscribers entitled to elect trustees" in sect. 12, must refer to the qualification by pews as well as subscriptions, therefore the presentation by the incumbent of the parish was legal and valid, he being at that time the sole trustee: (Fowler v. The Bishop of Gloucester, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 706. C.P.)

PROSECUTION OF BISHOP COLENZO.—The Solicitor-General, Sir Roundell Palmer, and Dr. Deane, Q. C., have given an "opinion" on the subject of a prosecution of Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, for unsoundness of teaching. The "query" put to them was—"Assuming that the present Bishop of Natal has been guilty of an ecclesiastical offence, what steps can be taken to bring him to trial, and before what tribunal?" After citing a variety of authorities, and examining the case in all its branches, the learned gentlemen agree in saying:—"We are, therefore, of opinion that no means at present exist for trying, before any tribunal competent to decide the question, whether or no Dr. Colenso, the present Bishop of Natal, has advocated doctrinal opinions not in accordance with the doctrines held by the Church of England; and assuming the present Bishop of Natal to have been guilty of an ecclesiastical offence, no steps can be taken to bring him, as such bishop, before any tribunal. We do not, however, think that upon the present materials it would be satisfactory or proper for us to enter upon the question whether if Dr. Colenso were present within the jurisdiction of an English ecclesiastical court, and were in this country to commit any offence against the laws ecclesiastical, he could or could not be proceeded against under the Church Discipline Act as a clerk in holy orders of the Church of England."

COUNTY COURTS.

BRECON COUNTY COURT.

(Before T. FALCONE, Esq., Judge.)

JENKINS v. MID WALES RAILWAY COMPANY.

Carriage of cattle by railway.

Bishop for the plaintiff; and Games for the defendant.

This was a jury case. The plaintiff sued for 25*l.* damages sustained by the non-carriage of some bullocks. By a general rule of the company, cattle are not carried by passenger trains, but notwithstanding this rule, cattle are occasionally so carried, and had been so carried for the plaintiff. On Friday, April 30, at about half past eight in the evening, the plaintiff informed the clerk at the Brecon station that he should want three cattle trucks for the 5.40 train on Saturday. The luggage or cattle train leaves at about two o'clock. The cattle were to arrive at four o'clock. There was, at that time, only one cattle truck at the Brecon station. The plaintiff was of opinion the clerk promised him to have other trucks at the time required, and the clerk represented that he promised to do his best. The clerk found it to be too late to procure an answer by the telegraph that night, and he sent a message for cattle trucks along the line by the first train the next morning. The cattle arrived at Brecon about four o'clock, but the two cattle trucks sent for were not forwarded. Ten of the cattle were sent in the cattle truck, at Brecon, by the 5.40 or passenger train, and sixteen bullocks were left there. These sixteen lost the Leominster fair, and were, by direction of the plaintiff, forwarded on Tuesday to the Hereford fair. The plaintiff sued for his loss on a difference of price at the two fairs, for the extra expenses he had incurred by delay, and the depreciation in the value of the animals through their delay at Brecon.

His Honour held that there was no question for the jury. The company did not undertake to carry cattle by the passenger trains; on the contrary, cattle are not to be carried by such trains. The cattle had not arrived at Brecon when the ordinary two o'clock cattle train left, and the company had done nothing to induce the plaintiff to bring them at a later hour to the station. The rule that cattle are not to be carried by passenger trains is for the security of the public, and the plaintiff could not ask for damages because this rule was not disregarded in his favour—though on other occasions it might have been disregarded. In the case of Bignell v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, LAW TIMES, vol. xlvii, p. 45, the plaintiff, on the morning of the 21st March 1868, proceeded to a fair at Odiham, and told the station-master at Winchester he should want two trucks to take home cattle that afternoon. The station-master said he would do his best, and telegraphed for them. The plaintiff bought some cows and calves at the fair, and came with them to the station, and no trucks arriving, they were left there until Monday. The company, by their rule, required two days' notice to be given of an intention to send cattle from a station. The jury found that there was negligence, on the part of the railway company in not getting trucks, and in leaving the cattle exposed during the time of getting them. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, without calling on the counsel for the defendants, made absolute a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the railway company had done all in its power, and that there was no negligence on their part. In this case at Brecon, apart from the efforts made to procure trucks, the company could not have carried the cattle by the passenger train, except in violation of a rule the officials of the company were bound to observe, though occasionally neglected. There was, therefore, no legal obligation on the part of the company to carry by the 5.40 passenger train.

A nonsuit was directed to be entered.

OTLEY COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. W. T. S. DANIEL, Esq., Q.C., Judge.)

DOBSON v. HAINSWORTH AND ANOTHER.

Right of support to land—Excavation—Right of action.

Hartley conducted the case of the plaintiff, and Fawcett defended.

This action, said the JUDGE, was brought to recover 30*l.* as damages for injuries done to the property of the plaintiff under the following circumstances:—The plaintiff was the occupier as tenant under Butterfield, of property at Ilkley, including a coachhouse in which the plaintiff, a cab proprietor, kept his vehicles for hire. The defendants were the contractors for the erection of buildings on land belonging to Crichley, adjoining the land on which the coach-house stood. In execution of their contract the defendants excavated the soil on Crichley's land for the cellars of the intended buildings. After the excavation had been made, and in consequence of it, the intervening soil gave way, and the coach-house fell. Two carriages in the coach-house at the time it fell were broken and damaged, and for this injury the action was brought. The case was first tried before me at the March court, and upon the evidence then adduced it appeared that the coach-house had not been built twenty years, that the defendants had conducted their work with ordinary care and skill, and without negligence, and that but for the weight of the coach-house the soil would probably not have given way, and the injury to the plaintiff's land would not have happened. Upon this evidence the plaintiff was nonsuited. He afterwards brought the present action, which was tried before me at the last May court. The facts as established by the evidence then given are somewhat different from those which appeared in the former trial. On the present trial it was proved satisfactorily that the coach-house was originally built more than twenty years ago—namely, in 1841—but it was also proved that about ten years ago an adjoining building, in the occupation of Shoesmith, had been converted from a pig-stye into a shop, and for that purpose a new wall has been built upon the top of the pig-stye wall, and the ends of the new wall had been let into the wall of the gable end of the coach-house. The excavation extended along the side of the shop, and this shop first fell and brought with it the coach-house. It was also proved that the subsoil in which both the shop and coach-house stood was very loose—a sort of quicksand, a sandy, watery soil—and Crichley (who was called by the plaintiff) stated that in consequence of the unexpected quantity of water which came into the excavation from the plaintiff's and other property above, it was necessary to construct a new drain to carry off that water. It appeared also, as upon the former trial, that the defendants had acted with ordinary skill and care, and without negligence. The defence was rested upon two grounds—1. That the burden of support required for the coach-house had been materially increased within twenty years, and that such increase had caused or had materially contributed to the accident. 2. That the defendants had acted merely as agents, and on behalf of Crichley, and that as they had not been guilty of any negligence, he alone was liable. It was also insisted that the damages claimed were excessive. I will first dispose of the second ground of defence. It was insisted that the absence of negligence in the defendants placed them in the position of innocent agents, lawfully acting as such for a known principal, and that the rule respondent superior would apply, and Crichley alone was responsible. The absence of negligence would, no doubt, remove this case from the influence of those authorities which have held contractors liable when being independently employed they or their workmen have been guilty of negligence: (Reedie v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 4 Ex. 244; Knight v. Fox, 5 Ex. 721; Allan v. Haywood, 7 Q. B. 960; Rapson v. Cubitt, 9 M. & W. 710; Overton v. Freeman, 11 C. B. 867.) Those cases establish the liability of the contractors in exoneration of the principal, but have no bearing upon the question of the liability of the principal in exoneration of the contractor. The law, I conceive to be that every person who does an act which directly causes injury to the property of another is personally liable to make compensation in damages to the party injured, whether he was acting for himself, or for, or on behalf, or for the benefit of another: (See Addison on Wrong, 160.) In Stone v. Cartwright, 6 T. R. 411, Lord Kenyon said, "I have always understood that the action must be brought against the hand committing the injury, or against the owner for whom the act was done." And in Quarman v. Bennett, 6 M. & W., Parke, B. delivering the judgment of the court, says: "The immediate cause of the injury is the negligence of the coachman. The question of law is whether any but the coachman is liable to the party injured; for the coachman undoubtedly is." In the present case the defendant personally made, or assisted in making, the excavations, and if that was a wrongful act, I am of opinion that whether Crichley would be liable or not, or would or not be liable to indemnify the defendants if they should be held liable, the rule respondent superior would not apply as between the defendants doing the wrong and the plaintiffs complaining of the wrong done. It therefore becomes necessary to consider and dispose of the first ground of defence; the substance of which is that the plaintiff has failed to show that the consequence of the excavation, though it caused loss to him, was a violation of any right which he possessed as against the defendants, they for this purpose being treated as possessing the rights of Crichley. What the defendants did was simply to dig a hole in Crichley's land—an act in itself lawful—and of which the plaintiff cannot complain, unless he can show that it injuriously affected a right of property to which he was entitled; and for this purpose he will be entitled to set up the rights of his landlord Butterfield. The right asserted is the right of lateral support from Crichley's land to the coach-house, and this right is based entirely upon twenty years' enjoyment. It appeared, as a fact in the case, that both properties had previously belonged to the same owner—Mr. Myddleton—and that both had been recently purchased at the same sale by auction, but the contracts and conveyances were not put in evidence on either side, and the case was left to be disposed of on the footing of the common law rights that would belong to contiguous owners—unaffected, on the one hand, by the question whether, as both properties had until recently belonged to the same owner, an easement could have been acquired, and on the other hand by the question whether Butterfield had acquired a right against Crichley which would prevent Crichley from doing any act on his own land, which should interfere with the enjoyment of Butterfield's property as it was actually conveyed to him by Myddleton. Treating the case, then, as depending exclusively on the common law rights of the respective parties, I am of opinion, upon the evidence, that within the last twenty years there has been a material increase of the burden of lateral support required for the coach-house, and I am led to the conclusion that this increase was material by the fact, elicited from the plaintiff's witnesses, that the shoemaker's shop first gave way, and appeared to bring the coach-house down with it. Whether the coach-house would have stood if the shop had not fallen, or had not been there, would be mere conjecture. The facts proved justified the conclusion that the attachment of the shop to the coach-house by means of the wall increased the burden on Crichley's land, and the easement relied upon by the plaintiff had therefore not been acquired: (Gale on Easements, 501, 4th edit.) There is also a circumstance which, although not made a distinct ground of defence, I think it right to notice, having regard to the recent case of Popplewell v. Hodgkinson, decided in the Exchequer on the 20th June 1868, and affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber on the 15th May last. This case, as affirmed on appeal, establishes the proposition that an owner of land has no right at common law to the support of subterraneous water. A note of the case in the Exchequer Chamber will be found in the Weekly Notes of the 29th May; and a full report of the case will be contained in the next July part of the Law Reports, Common Law series:—and by the courtesy of the reporter, Mr. A. Charles, I am enabled to refer to the proof sheets of that report. In the judgment Lord Chief Justice Cockburn says, "Although there is no doubt that a man has no right to withdraw from his neighbour the support of adjacent soil, there is nothing at common law to prevent his draining that soil if for any reason it becomes necessary or convenient for him to do so." (See also Richards v. Chasemore, 7 H. of L. Cas. 349, and Elliott v. North-Eastern Railway Company, 10 H. of L. Cas. 353.) In this case, looking at the character of the soil on which the coach-house stood and the quantity of water which flowed from it into the excavation, rendering a drain necessary for the express purpose of carrying it off, it seems to me that the fall of the coach-house was attributable as much to the withdrawal of the water as to the effects of the increased burden created by the wall of the shop—at all events, the two things combined would amply account for the accident. Judgment will therefore be entered for the defendants with costs, and it becomes unnecessary to decide the amount of damages, but as the plaintiff will be at liberty to appeal, and my decision may be reversed, it may, should that happen, render further litigation unnecessary if I state upon the evidence I think the damages should be assessed at 20l. The plaintiff having, in my judgment, over estimated his loss of custom regard being had to the season of the year (November) when the accident happened, and the character of the carriages injured, which were for summer rather than winter use, and were not, in fact, sent back from the coachmaker repaired till the following spring. Objection was taken by the defendants to the form of the particulars not being sufficient; but I treat the particulars as amended so as to raise properly for decision the real question in controversy between the parties, according to the stat. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 57; and if for the purpose of appeal, it becomes necessary that such amendment should be made, it will be made accordingly.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. Serjeant WHEELER.)

GOUGH v. CLARE.

Collision—Procedure in the County Court.

In this case the judge was assisted by Henry Cleaver Chapman, Esq., and Staff-Commander Niblett, R.N., nautical assessors.

It was an Admiralty suit instituted at the instance of Mr. Henry Gough, of Eastham, owner of the steamer Eastham Fairy, against Mr. Charles Leigh Clare, merchant, No. 11, Ramford-place, to recover the sum of 150l., damage done to the plaintiff's steamer in a collision with the brigantine Cecil, belonging to Mr. Clare.

T. H. James (instructed by Tyndall) appeared for the plaintiff; and Potter (instructed by Evans and Lockett) for the defendant.

The facts are unimportant, but the judgment is worth recording.

Mr. Serjeant WHEELER said: There is no doubt that if the steam-tug did, as asserted by the defendants, starboard and steady with her head up the river, with a view to round the southern buoy, and so reach the crane, she would have been justified, and in that event it would have been the duty of the plaintiff's vessel—the Eastham steamer—to keep out of the way. But upon the evidence it is the opinion of the nautical assessors that the course thus indicated, and which ought in fact to have been taken, was not taken; and that, on the contrary, the plaintiff's steamer had properly ported her helm, the effect of which would have been to clear the tug, had the tug kept her course. Instead of doing this, however, the tug unaccountably starboarded, and so was the sole cause of the accident. In this opinion he entirely concurred, and therefore the verdict would be for the plaintiff. His Honour added that as this was the first instance in which nautical assessors had sat with him, he could not help remarking upon the great public advantage which the Legislature had secured for suitors by the aid thus given to the court. These nautical cases involved questions with which, from their very nature, the judges must be only imperfectly acquainted, and in which they must be very much "at sea" if they had not the benefit of the practical knowledge and matured experience of gentlemen like those now sitting to his right and left. In this instance the two assessors had favoured him with their concurrent advice, and their opinions coincided with the conclusion he should himself have come to in the matter had the case been tried before him alone. There was one circumstance he also desired to mention, which was, he believed, without precedent perhaps in the English law. This suit was commenced on Saturday last, and, though contested with great earnestness and skill, it had within four days reached its end. He thought that upon this circumstance the judges had very great reason to congratulate, if not themselves, at least suitors, as it seemed to him to be an earnest of the great public ends which, under wise and prudent legislation, may be effected in the administration of justice.

Mr. James and Mr. Potter briefly thanked the judge and the assessors for the attention and patience with which they had listened to the case.

YORKSHIRE COUNTY COURT.

SMITH AND ANOTHER v. NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Lien by railway company on goods in transitu.

In this case Middleton, of Leeds, appeared for the plaintiffs; and W. B. Richardson (of the firm of Richardson and Gutch, York), for the defendants.

The action was for the recovery of 21l. 19s. 3d., being the value of certain goods and chattels which the North-Eastern Railway Company had, it was alleged, wrongfully detained. From the statement of Mr. Middleton it appeared that the plaintiffs, Messrs. Smith and Verity, are wholesale ironmongers, carrying on business at Leeds. Mr. Verity acted occasionally for the firm as traveller, and in the course of his journey was in October of last year at Willington. He waited upon Mr. John Rogers, who was at the time engaged in building operations, and solicited an order. The gentleman named accordingly gave an order for 112lb. sash weights, 300 other sash weights, and various other articles, for the value of which the present action was brought. The contract as to these goods was a merely verbal one, and on Mr. Verity's return to Leeds he immediately prepared to execute the order. A little delay occurred through the plaintiffs' stock not containing some of the articles required; but in the course of a short time the whole of the goods were consigned to Mr. Rogers, at Willington, the carriages having been paid by Messrs. Smith and Verity. The articles in question arrived at Willington, but the North-Eastern Railway Company took no steps to deliver them to Rogers, but detained them on account of a debt of 7l. 10s. 9d. due to them for goods previously carried. The company alleged that they had a lien upon them, under the 97th section of the Railway Clauses Act, which provides that if on demand any person fail to pay tolls it shall be lawful to detain and sell the goods carried, or if the same shall have been removed from the premises to sell the articles in question, and out of the money arising from such sale to retain the unpaid amount, the overplus to be returned or be recoverable by action-at-law. Acting in pursuance of this section the North-Eastern Railway Company considered they were entitled to detain the goods forwarded to Mr. Rogers in payment of the balance due to them. They, therefore, appended to the advice note the statement that he could have the goods delivered to him on discharging the unpaid carriage account. Since this time Mr. Rogers had made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and as last November he was not in very good circumstances and could not obtain these articles from the railway company, he wrote to the plaintiffs and stated that he had better take the goods back. Steps with this object in view were accordingly taken; correspondence ensued, which was read in court, but the North-Eastern Company strenuously refused to surrender the articles till the account of Rogers should be settled.

Middleton then proceeded to argue that the goods being consigned to John Rogers, there was in reality no acceptance on his part until he received them, which he never did. The goods never left the railway in transitu, but were detained as a lien, and the whole question turned on the point whether the goods had passed to Mr. Rogers. This, on behalf of the plaintiffs, he denied, and impugned the legality of their retention. Some of the goods were only consigned to Mr. Rogers as the bailee of them, they having been ordered by other parties at Willington. The railway company were therefore in the transaction the agents of the plaintiffs, who had pre-paid them for the carriage of the goods.

Mr. Verity was then called in support of the above statement, but he had not proceeded far in his evidence before his Honour refused to take it any further, on the ground that it was his (the judge's) opinion that the goods in question had really passed from the plaintiffs to Mr. Rogers, and that being the case the railway company had a right to detain them in discharge of their account against Rogers. The plaintiffs were accordingly nonsuited.

Middleton thereupon gave notice that he should appeal against the decision of the judge, as being opposed to the law as laid down in the various cases he had cited.

TALLYMEN.—Some startling evidence as to the evils of the tally system was given at the close of the month by Mr. McMahon in the House of Commons. The hon. member moved to add to a clause in the Imprisonment for Debt Bill words prohibiting County Court judges from sending debtors to prison in respect of a sum not exceeding 20s. exclusive of costs. He remarked that his attention was directed to this subject about ten years ago by the governor of Stafford gaol, who sent him a return of the persons committed to that gaol by the County Court judges between April 1867 and April 1869. They were 1207 in number, and their maintenance cost the county 7s. per week for each prisoner, amounting in the aggregate to 1412l. Of these 1207 prisoners, 50 were committed for debts under 10s., 255 for debts under 11., and 326 for debts under 21. He might add that 140 of them had been committed at the instance of a tallyman, of which number 25 owed less than 10s., 59 less than 11., 44 less than 21., and 12 less than 31. The cost to the county in respect to these 140 prisoners was 1361.; and the same tallyman had got 63 County Court debtors committed to gaol in Worcestershire in the course of the same two years.—County Courts Chronicle for July.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BANKRUPTCY — ANNUITY — UNJUSTIFIABLE EXTRAVAGANCE.—The bankrupt's income consisted of an annuity to be paid to him and his wife and children, at the uncontrolled discretion of the trustees under his father's will. The bankrupt had anticipated his income by nearly one year's receipts. Since the bankruptcy, the annuity was paid to the bankrupt's wife. At the time that the bankrupt had no income to receive, he incurred debts exceeding in amount the realisable value of his property: Held, that the debts were contracted without reasonable expectation of payment. At the same time, the debts for household expenses all remained unpaid: Held, that the bankrupt had been guilty of unjustifiable extravagance in living. The order of discharge was granted, subject to a condition that the bankrupt should pay an annual sum to the official assignee until 10s. in the pound had been paid to the creditors: (Re Lambert, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 715. Bank.)

NEWCASTLE BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Wednesday, May 26.

(Before Mr. Commissioner ABRAMALL.)

Re RALPH BLACKETT.

The rule as to advertising meetings.

Ingledeu, who represented the assignees, said that bankrupt, who had been adjourned sine die on the 23rd March, had given notice of his intention to apply for his discharge. The notice, however, had been advertised only in the Gazette and one local paper, whereas the rule required that it should be published in two local papers. The matter would have consequently to be adjourned.

HIS HONOUR: Did he not file any accounts?

Ingledeu replied that bankrupt had not done so. He had no estate whatever; he was very confused in his ideas, and he (Ingledeu) could get no information from him. There had been some arbitration, but he could not get at the bottom of the business.

Bankrupt (in reply to Ingledeu) said he had advertised in one local paper, thinking that to be sufficient.

HIS HONOUR observed that it was necessary to advertise in the Gazette and in two local papers fourteen days before the day of meeting.

Ingledeu thought that the accounts not having been filed, was a sufficient reason for the matter being further adjourned.

HIS HONOUR.—It must be adjourned sine die. He would, however, give bankrupt protection.

Ingledeu said he had no objection, and added that Mr. Loekey Harle had formerly appeared for bankrupt, and that, though he had received 300l. from him, he now appeared to have deserted him.

HIS HONOUR asked how that was.

Bankrupt (in reply to Ingledeu) said that he possessed two ships, the last of which he sold in September for 750l. 400l. went to the mortgagee, and the residue was placed in the hands of Mr. Loekey Harle.

HIS HONOUR.—How has he applied it?

Bankrupt said it was intended to pay the colliery rental. A guarantee was given, but Mr. Harle had applied the 300l. to the reduction of his own account.

Ingledeu wished Mr. Harle to give some account.

HIS HONOUR.—How was it the money was not paid to the assignee?

Ingledeu.—It was immediately preceding the bankruptcy.

T. Hoyle shortly afterwards stated that the bankrupt had asked him to apply to his Honour to appoint a day instead of adjourning the matter sine die. The omission to properly advertise the meeting had been the result of ignorance. If he were again adjourned indefinitely, the advertising in the Gazette would be useless. If another day were fixed bankrupt could comply with the rule by advertising in the local papers. Bankrupt was badly off, and no benefit would result to anybody from putting him to inconvenience and loss.

HIS HONOUR was not sure whether he had the power to do as requested; he imagined that all the advertising must be repeated.

Hoyle assured his Honour that on different occasions meetings had been adjourned for the purpose of advertising in the local papers only.

HIS HONOUR reminded Mr. Hoyle that if a new meeting were advertised in the local papers it would not be the same meeting that had been advertised in the Gazette.

Hoyle submitted that all who were informed of the meeting through the Gazette would have been present, if they had seen fit, either to examine bankrupt or to prove their debts. If any such had been present they would have been made aware of the omission, and have learned the day his Honour might fix. Only for the information of those locally interested was it necessary to advertise in the local papers, and if that were now done no party would be prejudiced.

Ingledeu intimated that he had no objection to that course, and the matter was adjourned till the 29th June with his Honour's consent.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT AND BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. J. W. Harden has published the following remarks upon the Bills now before Parliament:—

1. As to imprisonment. The 5th section of the Imprisonment for Debt Bill appears to me to be a gratuitous insult to the judges of the County Courts, insinuating, as it does, that they are in the habit of allowing their subordinates to issue warrants of commitment—a slander too gross to need any denial.

2. The same section modifies the 99th and 101st sections of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, by depriving the judges of County Courts of all power of dealing summarily with cases when it is clearly proved that goods or credit were obtained by "false pretences," "fraud," or "breach of trust;" a power which is very seldom exercised, but the mere existence of which is salutary, and which has never been abused.

3. The Imprisonment for Debt Bill proposes to repeal the Absconding Debtors' Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 52), and if it pass, all the members of the "Long Firm" and all the swindlers in England may walk on board our foreign steamers at noonday, accompanied by a band of music, if they please, playing the "Rogue's March," for then, no power can stop them for debts under 50l., and for debts above that amount, all the difficulties which led to the passing of the Absconding Debtors' Act, will be reimposed.

4. The 11th section of the Bill seems to have been devised to prevent people from visiting the Continent, for if it pass, anyone who has the misfortune to be declared bankrupt, or to be forced into "liquidation," within four months of his going abroad, will, without any proof of fraudulent or dishonest intention on his part, be prima facie guilty of felony, and bound to prove his own innocence, under the penalty of five years' penal servitude.

5. As to bankruptcy—It is proposed to place the metropolitan districts under a different system of administration from Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and other large towns, and exceptional legislation is always objectionable. The judges of the County Courts of Marylebone, Shoreditch, Southwark, &c., have in some respects less work already than their provincial brethren; but what is good enough for Bristol, e.g., can hardly be unfit for Lambeth, and I should deprecate the introduction of needless distinctions.

6. While the administration of bankruptcy law is to be taken from the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, and added to the already onerous duties of the County Court judges, with the exception of eleven, it is proposed that the duties of those eleven shall be performed, not as at present by those who thoroughly understand the work, but by a high functionary, who probably was never in a bankruptcy court in his life, who knows nothing about it, and to whom, no doubt, the duties would be most distasteful.

7. The decisions of forty-nine County Court judges, all of whom have had some, and many of whom have had a very great, experience in bankruptcy, are to be subject to appeal to a judge whose functions are, in the main, similar to and co-equal with their own, and who confessedly knew nothing of bankruptcy until he was transplanted from a congenial soil to displace a more experienced, and (in that department of the law) an abler man than himself, who was content to do the work for less than half the salary, instead of being pensioned off in the prime of life and on full pay.

8. The Lords Justices form an unexceptionable Court of Appeal, and ought to be the only Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy. The proposed Chief Judge would be, in my opinion, as useless as the Court of Review, with its chief and three puisne judges, which was established by Lord Brougham in 1831, and is now almost forgotten. Chancellors have crochets like other men, and the proposed Chief Judge in Bankruptcy is one of them.

9. It is proposed that bankrupts shall be entitled to their discharge as of right, when they have paid 10s. in the pound, but not till then. Many a knave who morally ought not to have his discharge until he has paid 20s. in the pound with interest, can manage to raise 10s., and simply rob his creditors of the other 10s.; and many an honest but unfortunate man may not be able to raise 3s., but may have one or two vindictive creditors who insist upon their pound of flesh, and surely 10s. or any other "hard and fast" line is a mistake.

10. If the number of proceedings be a criterion, seven-eighths of the common law litigation of the country is now absorbed by the County Courts, for by the last returns the number of plaintiffs in the County Courts was 941,877, while the writs of summons in all the Superior Courts only numbered 127,221; in the latter one unhappy defendant in every 14½ was dragged to prison simply for not paying, whether he could pay or not, while in the County Courts no one was sent to prison when he could not pay, and only one in 112½ who could pay, was obstinate enough to go to prison rather than pay. The abolition of writs of capias in the Superior Courts knocks away the last relic of those barbarous times when a man and his wife and children, and all that he had, were liable to be sold to pay his debts, but it creates a break in the system which has existed for centuries, and will doubtless require new machinery or adaptation to supply its place; and that machinery, I would submit, could best be supplied by our local courts. Mr. Norwood has given notice of an important amendment in that direction, to which I would invite the support of all advocates for cheap, speedy, and effectual justice. J. W. HARDEN.

COPIES OF DOCUMENTS.—Will you kindly inform me why 6d. per folio for office copies of documents is exacted by the common law officers, and why such office copies are written in a manner which solicitors would not tolerate from their office boys? B.

BANKRUPTCY—NOTICE OF MEETING.—I shall be obliged if any of your readers will inform me if there is any clause in the new Bankruptcy Bill applicable to the following case. A client of mine has just lost a dividend of 15s. in the pound in an estate in bankruptcy because he did not prove his debt in time; and when he complained that he had not been notified of its being necessary, he was told it was published in the London Gazette, and some other local papers, which he did not happen to see. He contends, and I think very rightly so, that it would be far preferable if the advertisements in the London Gazette and local papers were dispensed with, and in lieu thereof a circular should be sent by post to each creditor, giving them the most direct information as to when and where the dividend would be payable. W. W. G.

MANAGING CLERKS IN THE COUNTY COURTS AND MAGISTRATES' COURTS.—In making the remarks I did on the above subject, in connection with the case of Holland v. Standring, reported in the LAW TIMES of the 27th March last and which remarks appeared in your journal of the 12th ult., I had no intention of exciting the ill-feeling of anybody, and much less of subjecting myself to abuse. My sole object was to call the attention of the Profession to a question of practical importance, in order that the same might be generally and beneficially considered and discussed, with a view to its alteration and amendment. As I think it very improper to make the columns of a public journal the medium of private discussion, I shall make no comment whatever upon "A. B. C.'s" remarks contained in the last LAW TIMES, but leave the Profession to form their own opinion upon meum et suum.

BANKRUPTCY PRACTICE—AFFIDAVIT OF EXECUTION OF LETTER OF ATTORNEY.—I tendered a letter of attorney the other day in one of the district courts of bankruptcy, when it was objected to by another solicitor, who wished to carry the choice on the ground that there was no affidavit verifying the execution of it. The point was referred to the registrar, who appealed to the commissioner on the subject. The commissioner ordered the question to be argued before him at the next sitting. This has been done; but the commissioner has taken time to consider his decision, being still in doubt. My contention is, that sect. 116 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, coupled with the rule made thereunder (10th General Order), and schedule 19 giving form of letter of attorney without any affidavit verifying execution, shows that no such affidavit is now necessary. As a matter of practice, the London courts of bankruptcy, and some of the district courts, do not, I believe, require any such affidavit. However, I should be glad to hear from any of your readers whether the point has been raised in their practice, and how it has been decided. I should be glad to be referred to any reported case on the subject. The point is one of considerable importance in the choice of assignees. The contention on the other side is, that sect. 139 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, which requires an affidavit of execution, is still in force, not having been either expressly or impliedly repealed by sect. 116 of the Act of 1861. NOTES AND QUERIES ON POINTS OF PRACTICE.

Queries.

44. APPOINTMENT OF NEW TRUSTEES—EXERCISE OF POWER.—A testator, by his will, devised his real estate upon certain trusts therein contained, and declared that in case his trustees (A. and B.) or either of them should die in his lifetime or should renounce the execution of the trusts thereby created, or in case they or any trustee or trustee to be appointed as thereafter mentioned should go to reside beyond the seas, or be desirous to be discharged from, or neglect, or refuse, or become incapable to act in the trusts thereby created, then and in every such case it should be lawful for the surviving or continuing trustee, or the executors or administrators of the last surviving trustee as his or their own discretion, to appoint any fit person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying, &c.; and that upon every such appointment all and singular the trust estate and effects should be conveyed and assigned so, and in such manner that the same might be effectually vested in such new trustees or trustee jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee, or solely as the case might require upon, and for the trusts of the will or such of them as should then be subsisting or capable of taking effect, and that all and every such new trustees or trustee should and might thenceforth act in the management and execution of the aforesaid trusts as fully and effectually in all respects as if they or he had been thereby appointed trustees or trustee of that his will. "And testator declared that the receipt of his said trustees or trustee for the time being should be good discharges, &c." Upon the death of the testator, probate of his will was granted to B., A. having renounced, and subsequently died. Soon after the death of A., B. by deed, as if in exercise of the power given him by the will, appoints D. alone for a trustee in his stead, and thereupon renounces. The testator's estate is now about to be sold for the benefit of the parties beneficially entitled, and the question I now would submit for the opinion of some of the numerous correspondents of the LAW TIMES, is whether the above-mentioned power was rightly exercised by B.'s appointing but one trustee in his stead upon his retirement; and whether D. has a good right and title to sell? QUERIST.

45. COMMON LAW COMMISSIONERSHIP.—Can a country practitioner be appointed a commissioner to take affidavits in one of the Superior Courts at Westminster (say the Queen's Bench) alone, without being compelled to take out his commissions in the Common Pleas and Exchequer of Pleas? Will "M. E. S.," or any other reader of the LAW TIMES, kindly furnish me with an answer to the foregoing query? A SOLICITOR.

46. LEGACY DUTIES—REAL ESTATE DIRECTED TO BE SOLD.—A testator has given his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell and pay annual income of proceeds to widow for life. It is not intended to sell realty, but to let the widow receive the rents. 36 Geo. 3, c. 53, s. 42, provides for personalty not reduced into money; but the value of testator's freeholds may not be the same as at the death of his widow. No duty is payable until the latter event happens, although the office has asked for accounts. Will anyone kindly say how I am to return the accounts as to the above freeholds? LEX.

47. COUNTY COURT—BILL OF EXCHANGE—SUMMONS.—Can a summons be issued for amount due on a bill of exchange for goods sold and delivered, under sect. 3 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142? Also, is the registrar justified in asking for duplicate of affidavit grounding application for summons, under the same section? If any of your numerous readers could enlighten me as to the above, they would oblige. A SUBSCRIBER'S CLERK.

29th June 1869.

48. LEGACY DUTY—CONTINGENT LEGACY.—A. having in his lifetime rendered his estate contingently liable for a sum of 2000*l.*, or some portion thereof, by his will directed his trustees to set apart 2000*l.* to meet such liability. And until the happening of the contingent event, he directed them to pay the income of the said sum to B. for life, with remainder to B.'s children, and after the happening of such event, in case his estate should not be called upon to pay the whole or any part of such sum, the income thereof, or such part thereof as should not be required, was still to go to B. for life (if living), and the capital (either immediately or on B.'s death, as case might be) unto and equally amongst B.'s children absolutely. The contingency is still in abeyance. The stamp-office require duty paying on such contingent legacy on the passing of the residuary account. Hudson's Treatise on Legacy Duties furnishes no instance of the kind. Will any of your able correspondents say how duty is to be paid, and what deductions from the capital should be made to meet the contingency? P.

Answers.

(Q. 30.) APPRENTICESHIP.—Would you allow me to call the attention of "W. H. J." to the following decision given in the Court of Queen's Bench by Chief Justice Cockburn: (See 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180.) "If an apprentice wishes to disaffirm his apprenticeship, upon arriving at twenty-one years, he must do so within a reasonable time." I may add that it is the opinion of many professional gentlemen that the law is not altered in this respect, and that the definition of the word "employed," in the Master and Servants Act, is intended to include those cases where persons, not being apprentices, and under the age of twenty-one years, contract with the employer to perform certain work by the week, &c., and leave without giving proper notice, or fulfilling the said contract, but that both they and apprentices must enter into a fresh contract upon arriving at twenty-one years, not being bound to serve under the original one, otherwise the employer might take advantage of the ignorance of the infant, and at an early age induce him to enter into a contract for an indefinite period. Perhaps some of your other correspondents would favour us with their views on this subject. G. J.

(Q. 31.) JUSTICES' CLERKS.—The magistrates are only bound to appoint a suitable person who need not be an attorney. Recently, two gentlemen were appointed clerks to the Liverpool borough magistrates, neither being attorneys. There are two clerks in Huddersfield to the county magistrates, only one of whom is an attorney. At the Mansion-house in London the well-known Mr. Oke is not an attorney. W. E. B.

(Q. 32.) CONVEYANCING.—In a precisely similar case to the one submitted by "A. T.," counsel advised as follows: "I do not consider the omission of the mortgages to execute the mortgage material. It would be assumed to have been drawn pursuant to their directions, and the clause making the receipt of the survivor a discharge for the principal and interest secured, would be binding on the personal representatives of the deceased mortgagee." I. P.

(Q. 34.) BANKRUPTCY—FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE.—I have not the full report of the case at hand at the time of answering this query, but I believe "A. Subscriber" will find an answer to his inquiry with the latest authorities in the case of Martin v. Williams, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 350. W. H. F.

(Q. 35.) DEATH—PROOF OF.—In the case of Leach v. Leach, 13 L. J. N. S. 123 the grant of letters of administration and copy of an entry in the registry of the death of an individual was held not sufficient evidence of the fact, but an affidavit of his death was required. But in a subsequent case it was held that the certificate of the district registrar was sufficient evidence of a person's death: (Traill v. Kibblichite, 10 Jur. 107.) W. H. F.

(Q. 36.) MORTGAGE—POWER OF SALE.—This query is not very clearly stated, but I hope the following references will be sufficient for "P.'s" guidance. Where notice to a mortgagor is required, a clause that a purchaser should not be required to ascertain that notice had been given, and that the mortgagee's receipt should be a sufficient discharge, does not apply to a case where the purchase is made with actual knowledge that such notice has not been given: (Parkinson v. Hanbury, 1 Drew. & Sm. 143). And in a more recent case it was held that, notwithstanding a provision relieving the purchaser from the obligation to inquire; yet, if circumstances should come to his knowledge calculated to raise a doubt as to the propriety of the sale he becomes a party to such conduct, and the sale will under such circumstances be set aside: (Jenkins v. Jones, 8 W. R. 270, V. C. S.; Barry's Conveyancing, 256.) W. H. F.

(Q. 37.) TRANSIT BY RAILWAY.—The proper person to sue as plaintiff on the contract is B., in whom the property was vested when abstracted. The consignee is usually the proper plaintiff, because delivering of goods to the carrier commonly vests the property in him: (Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 Cl. & Fin. 60; Daves v. Sack, 8 T. R. 330.) But if there is a special contract between A. and the railway company, A. must be the plaintiff, and the ownership is immaterial. If the hamper, containing wines and spirits, were sent on approval, the consignment not thereby changing the property, A. should sue: (Stearns v. Shepherd, 1 M. & Rob. 223.) In a question whether consignee or consignee should sue, the answer (in the absence of any special contract) depends upon the inquiry whether the carrier was selected by, or by authority of, the consignee, or was the selected agent of the consignor: (Coats v. Chaplin, 3 Q. B. 493.) In some cases it is probable that either party might sue: (Crouch v. Great Northern Railway Company, 11 Ex. 743; 25 L. J. 137.) W. W. Manchester.

(Q. 39.) WILL.—By 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 7, no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one years shall be valid; beside which, a feme covert is incapable of making a will except of such property as may be settled to her separate use, or over which a disposing power is expressly given to her, notwithstanding her coverture, by the instrument through which the interest is derived: (Allnutt's Practice, 4th edit., p. 4.) W. H. F.

(Q. 40.) COMMON CARRIER—RIGHT TO REFUSE PARCEL WITHOUT THE FEE FOR BOOKING.—If a common carrier demand a certain sum for booking, and refuse to take charge of goods unless such sum be paid, he is not liable to an action if they are left without being paid for, and are lost: (J. Jackson, Peake's Add. Cas. 185.) If goods are tendered to a common carrier for conveyance, he may refuse to accept them for that purpose, unless the person tendering the goods is then ready and offers to pay a reasonable reward for their carriage. Manchester. W. W.

(Q. 41.) MARRIED WOMAN—REAL PROPERTY.—This is certainly a peculiar case, but I am decidedly of opinion that the child in question would legally be considered as the child of the present husband, and would undoubtedly bear his name, and therefore not be entitled to share as parcener with the other daughter. The law regarding a child en ventre sa mere will not hold good in the event of the mother marrying again before the birth of such child. W. H. F.

(Q. 43.) MARRIED WOMAN—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—I can see no necessity for any acknowledgment by A. B. in this case, or even that she should be made a party to the assignment. "A chattel real which the wife separately owns, rests in the husband, not absolutely, but sub modo. Thus the husband is possessed of the wife's term for years in her right, and hence he is entitled to receive the rents and profits of it. He may also sell, surrender in deed or in law, or dispose of it during the coverture, so that even if the wife survived she will have no right to it, unless it is reversionary, and could by no possibility be reduced into possession during the coverture: (Smith's Comp., 3rd edit. p. 1084.) W. H. F.

LEGAL NEWS.

CRIME IN NEW YORK.—The New York Times publishes an "exhibit" of all the business done in the Court of Oyer and Terminer and the Court of General Sessions during the year 1868. The following is a "comparative recapitulation":—

Offences.	Arrested.	Disposed of in the courts.	Unaccounted for.
Assault, felonious	712	24	688
Arson	65	2	63
Bigamy	13	1	12
Burglary	630	154	476
Forgery	113	24	89
Larceny, grand	2413	347	2066
Murder	78	15	63
Picking pockets	303	24	279
Receiving stolen goods	255	3	252
Robbery	130	11	119

The same journal remarks that no facts have been lately given to the public so freighted with concern to the whole community as those embodied in these tables, and the public interest seems to require explicit answer as to what has become of the great army of arrested criminals left totally unaccounted for by the records. Where are the 63 murderers and the 688 ruffians who sought to be such? Where are the 63 incendiaries, the 12 bigamists, the 476 burglars, the 89 forgers, the 2066 thieves, the 279 pickpockets, the 252 receivers of stolen goods, and the 119 robbers? These are questions for the authorities to consider, and until they are satisfactorily answered it is apparent that there is great remissness somewhere. Either the police are constantly making large numbers of the most unwarranted arrests, or they and the judicial authorities are continually and unblushingly engaged in compounding felonies. Either state of facts is sufficiently disgraceful to the city, and the only people with good reason to be content are the criminals, who can from these tables calculate how remote are the chances that their crimes will ever meet with due punishment.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The will of Robert Keeley, Esq., of Pelham-crescent, Brompton, the eminent comedian, has been proved in the London Court under 18,000*l.* personality, by his relict, Mary Anne Keeley, the surviving executor, the other executor appointed was Thomas Frost Goward, Esq., of North-end Lodge, Waltham-green (since deceased). The will is dated Dec. 11, 1867, and the testator died Feb. 3 last, aged 76. He bequeaths to his wife all his furniture, plate, wines, and other household effects absolutely, and leaves her a life interest in his estates, real and personal. He leaves to his granddaughter, Jessie Williams, on the decease of his wife, his Oriental Bank shares; and to his wife's sister, Mrs. Eliza Hulse, an annuity of 30*l.* The residue of his property is to be ultimately divided between his two daughters, Mary, the widow of the late Albert Smith, and Louise, wife of Montagu Williams, barrister-at-law, for the lives of his two daughters, and after their decease, to their children.

Law and the Lawyers.

The Commissioners appointed to conduct the Election Inquiries at Bridgewater, Beverley, and Norwich, have appointed as their secretaries respectively Mr. HENRY F. PURCELL, of the Norfolk Circuit; Mr. JOHN F. COLLIER, of the Western Circuit; and Mr. JOHN H. SECKER, of the Oxford Circuit.

Mr. CHARLES EGAN, a local barrister of some reputation in Warwickshire, died suddenly on Wednesday night, of apoplexy. During the day he had appeared in a case at the police court. He was called to the Bar in 1839.

A REPORTER has chronicled the occurrence of an event which has not its parallel within his memory. Three days before the termination of the sittings at Guildhall the cause list of the Court of Common Pleas was exhausted. This suggests to us a regret that there is no power in the Judges of the Queen's Bench and Exchequer to transfer some of the business of those courts to the Common Pleas. Not only, however, is this out of their power, but by a stupid provision (Common Law Procedure Act 1854, s. 2) two Judges only are empowered to try causes in the same court; and where, last week, the attempt was made to induce suitors to consent to a trial before a third Judge, it failed. Of course, dishonest defendants love delay; and because this Act says that two Judges only shall sit in the same court, and because there is no power to transfer causes to other courts which are wholly unoccupied, these persons escape with impunity for the four pleasant months of the Long Vacation. If the powers here pointed out as desirable were conferred, we should hear less of the law's delay.

THERE are, evidently, many persons who under-rate the advantage which is derived from the orderly conduct of causes by counsel. Certain individuals obtain amongst their friends a reputation for smart conversation and general readiness, and they immediately assume that they can conduct their own cases. We have no desire to say a word in disparagement of the forensic ability of Dr. THOM, but we think that if he had been allowed rope enough in the conduct of the gigantic case which he brings forward, his self-destruction would have been certain, and beyond a doubt it would have had a most salutary effect upon those people who are as yet ignorant how very great a fool a man may have for his client when he advocates his own cause. The best testimony which can be given of the value of the Bar is that so frequently and spontaneously offered by the Judges. It may be said that they are prejudiced in favour of their old calling. We believe, however, that the testimony is genuine and honest. And it was borne out by a well-known solicitor at a recent festival, who spoke strongly against the amalgamation of the two branches of the Profession.

THE Irish Church Abolition Bill has received great and important amendments in committee of the Lords. The proposal to devote a portion of the surplus to the provision of manse and glebes, for the Roman Catholic priests and Presbyterian ministers was defeated by a considerable majority, caused, as we are informed, by the secession at the last moment of the Roman Catholic peers, who, though approving the object, voted against it, fearing that it might impede the success of the Bill. It was to give time for public opinion to form itself on this question that Lord CAIRNS proposed and carried a provision that the surplus fund should be held by the commission to be applied in such manner as Parliament may hereafter direct. When we wrote last week, it was stated in the most trustworthy political circles, that the proposal would be carried by a large majority, and a defeat was fully anticipated by the Government until it was known that the Catholic peers had resolved to oppose the amendment rather than hazard delay.

It now remains to be seen what the Commons, or rather Mr. GLADSTONE, will do with the Bill. It may be anticipated that they will refuse to accept some of the alterations. In such case there will be a conference between the Houses, and the Lords will determine whether to adhere to such as are objected to. If they persist—what next—and next, and next? But a compromise is the most probable result.

LAW OF MASTER AND SERVANT.

A CASE of great importance to employers and servants came before Mr. Justice Hannen and a jury at the after term sittings at Guildhall on Thursday. Bedford v. Cox was an action for wages. The plaintiff had been employed by the defendant as a collector at a salary of 2l. per week, which he had received weekly for more than two years, when he was dismissed in consequence of some inaccuracy in the accounts. The present action was brought for an extra 1l. per week during the whole period of his service, on the allegation that his services were worth more than the salary he had actually received. It was contended for the defendant that the wages paid weekly were conclusive evidence of the terms of the contract, and that it was not competent to a servant who had taken a weekly salary of 2l. per week for two years when, discharged for misconduct to claim 1l. per week more than he had received, on the plea that his services had been insufficiently remunerated. Mr. Justice Hannen, however, ruled otherwise, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for 1l. per week beyond the salary he had received. In consequence of this decision, it will be necessary for employers to protect themselves against similar claims by putting into writing the terms of hiring, to be signed by the servant. Their protection hitherto has been the supposed rule that the wages actually paid were conclusive evidence of the terms of the hiring; but this being now held not to be the law, employers should be very careful to prevent subsequent claims by a written and signed contract which may be as brief as this:—

I agree to serve B. as a clerk at a salary of twenty shillings per week; one week's notice to quit to be given by either party.

A TRADES UNION CASE.

THE divided opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Farrer v. Close, which turned upon the question whether certain rules that permitted of payments being made in aid of "strikes" were illegal as being in restraint of trade, and therefore against public policy, so as to deprive the union of the benefit of the Friendly Societies Acts, has come opportunely to assist the discussion in Parliament on the merits of the Bill presented on behalf of the unions. The question was really reduced to one simple point—Is a "strike" in restraint of trade within the legal meaning of that term? The Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mellor say "Yes;" Mr. Justice Hannen and Mr. Justice Hayes say "No."

The latter have certainly the best of the argument. They contend that with the philosophy of the question, whether a strike is or is not in restraint of trade according to the disputed doctrines of the economists, the court had nothing to do, its business being only to require proof that the act complained of was such a restraint of trade as the law recognises; that is to say, something against public policy because it is injurious to the community, and not where it is a question only between the employer and the employed. In this sense of the term a "strike" is not illegal, for though it affects the master it does not directly affect the public. Otherwise it would be if the combination had for its objects to prevent the use of machinery, to forbid the employment of certain persons, or to impose methods and times of working, for these would affect the free action of other workmen not being members of the union, and be in restraint of the public freedom of commerce.

This definition of the two dissenting Judges is extremely clear, and to our mind conclusive, and it is to be regretted that it did not prevail. But it will be very valuable for guidance in the framing of the new law, which must be passed next year. It is, however, an error to assert that the decision deprives the unions of protection. They have still the criminal law in common with all other subjects, and Mr. Russell Gurney's Act of last session effectually removed from them all disabilities. The judgment deprives them of the remedies given to friendly societies, but of nothing more, and these are not so desirable that there need be regret for the loss of them.

A PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

MR. GLADSTONE has given excellent reasons for the determination of the Government not to impose upon the poor taxpayers the costs of a prosecution undertaken on his own account by a gentleman who had invested largely in OVEREND and GURNEY shares and found them to be a bad, instead of a good, speculation. Had the company prospered, Dr. THOM would assuredly not merely have acquiesced in, but he would positively have approved, the acts of the directors, for which, as they did not produce the expected results of gain to the shareholders, he has thought fit to indict them. If the facts which they are prosecuted by Dr. THOM for concealing had been published, and, as the necessary consequence, the company had collapsed immediately, who can doubt that the indignant shareholders, Dr. THOM included, would have unanimously denounced the directors for the untimely revelations that had reduced the value of their shares to nil. Or if it had been left to the shareholders themselves to say if the facts should be made public that would ruin their speculation at its very birth, who can doubt that they would have voted unanimously for their suppression. Mr. GLADSTONE therefore, rightly asserts that they are entitled to no special sympathy or aid from the public purse. They are a very wealthy body and well able to defray the cost of avenging their own wrongs, if wrongs they have, without asking contribution from the poor taxpayers, who took no part in their speculation and would have shared none of their profits had it been successful. Mr. GLADSTONE suggested, also, that it may be fairly questioned if it is desirable to encourage speculations of this kind by help from the public purse when they fail. People ought to know, or, if they are ignorant, it is well they should be taught by painful experience, that endeavours to obtain the profits of industry without the toil, to trade without the mental labour and responsibility of commercial enterprise, to expect great gain without incurring the risk of great loss, which is the true design and desire of shareholders, is gambling, and as such should receive no encouragement from the State. We repeat our entire approval alike of the decision of the Government, and of the reasons assigned for it both by the PRIME MINISTER and the HOME SECRETARY.

As to the larger question of a Public Prosecutor, there is so much to be said on both sides that it is difficult to arrive at any clear and decided opinion. Upon the whole, our impression is rather in its favour; but certainly it is a subject not to be hastily determined. England is the only country where that officer or his equivalent does not exist, and yet the administration of criminal justice in England will, as a whole, bear comparison with that in any other country. There are faults, it is true; but they would admit of amendment, without the entire revolution involved in the transfer of power to put the criminal law in force from the subject who is wronged to an official, who if he is less likely to be influenced by motives of revenge, will also be less open to the kindly feelings that so often lead to the practical charity of mercy and forgiveness to the sinner in the hope of repentance and amendment. We do not say that this practical mitigation of the necessary severity of the letter of the law may not be attended with counterbalancing evils, or that the advantages of a Public Prosecutor may not outweigh all that can be advanced in favour of the existing system; but it is a question to be carefully considered alike by the statesman and the lawyer before action is taken upon it, and we were pleased to gather from the silence of Mr. BRUCE that he looks upon it in somewhat the same manner.

THE TRADES UNIONS BILL.

THIS Bill, the product of the dissenting minority of the Trades Union Commission, is to be pressed upon Parliament during the present session, in opposition to the declared desire of the Government that so great and grave a question should not be undertaken by private members, and a promise that they would themselves deal with it next year.

Therefore, as the subject is to be formally discussed and a division is to be taken on the merits of this particular measure, no apology is necessary for directing to its details the careful attention of the lawyers in and out of the House.

Some of the newspaper writers, ignorant probably of the text of the Bill, and misled by the studied temperance of the language of its advocates, have praised its moderation and recommended it as a fair compromise. Can it be so accepted?

It commences with a repeal of the existing Combination Acts, and then proceeds to legalise, in express terms, the combination, either of workmen or of employers, for mutual agreement with respect to

1. Wages to be paid.
2. Hours to be worked.
3. The persons by whom any work is to be, or is not to be, done.
4. The mode in which any work is to be, or is not to be, done.
5. Any terms or conditions whatsoever under which any work or employment shall or shall not be done or carried on.

This is in effect to abolish the existing law that makes illegal acts that are in restraint of trade, that is to say, the acts as above defined, Nos. 3, 4, and 5.

The first question that presents itself for anxious consideration is, whether combinations for all or any of these objects can be legalised with safety to the community, with justice to individuals, and without violating personal liberty.

First, for the purpose of regulating wages. As this is a matter that affects none but the contracting parties, it is undoubtedly permissible.

The like may be said of the second proposition, relating to the regulation of working hours. This also is a question solely between the employers and the employed.

Not so is it with the third and fourth proposals, which relate to combination for the purpose of regulating the persons by whom, and the mode in which, any work is to be or is not to be done.

There must be no mistake as to the meaning of this. Its manifest purpose is to legalise that which now is illegal (because it is deemed to be injurious to the community and unjust to individuals), the dictation to the master by the workman, not merely of something which concerns himself, but of that which directly affects other people, and therefore is not merely in restraint of trade but is also in restraint of freedom of labour and of personal liberty. Its meaning, in plain terms, is that it shall be lawful to form combinations to compel the employer not to employ an apprentice, or a workman who is not a member of the union, or one who is, for any cause, obnoxious to the union, or for any other reason that caprice, or malice may prescribe. What an intolerable tyranny would thus be created will be apparent on a moment's reflection—a despotism that would crush, not the masters only, but still more the working men who are not unionists. Indeed, the plain purpose of it is to force all the working people into the unions.

Not less noxious to the community would be the legalising of combinations to prescribe to employers the mode in which any work is to be or is not to be done. The purpose of the provision is to prevent the introduction of machinery, to forbid contrivances to save labour, and to compel arrangements that increase labour, such as the working of marble at the quarry, forbidding a bricklayer to use both his hands, and a mason to carry more than a certain quantity of mortar at one mount. Had this Bill been law forty years ago we should still have been in a state of comparative barbarism—all improvement stayed and all invention paralysed, and its enactment now would be scarcely less mischievous. And as if these specific claims to the regulation of the employer's business by his workpeople were not sufficiently tyrannical, there comes the sweeping provision at its close that legalises combination for "any terms or conditions whatsoever, under which any work or employment shall or shall not be done or carried on." The 3rd section secures members of associations for any of those purposes against criminal prosecutions for any combination to carry out any of these objects. A subsequent section (the 5th) contains a proviso excepting an association formed or maintained with intent to procure the commission of an offence which shall subject the offender to prosecution. But this is quite a needless provision, for no union is formed expressly for the purpose of committing indictable offences. The complaint is, that they too often resort to illegal means to carry out and enforce a legal object. The Sheffield sawgrinders were not associated for the purpose of murdering and rattening, but they encouraged murder and the destruction of property as the illegal means by which they sought to enforce their legal objects.

The next ten sections are devoted to the enrolment of trade societies under the Friendly Societies Acts, and are in themselves unobjectionable, save that they make no sufficient provision for separating the funds of the benefit society from the funds applicable to trade purposes, an omission which should be supplied in committee.

But, having given much consideration to this subject, we have no hesitation in preferring the plan we proposed here to that proposed by the Bill before us. It will be remembered, perhaps, that we suggested the extension to trade societies of the scheme of the Companies Act; that is to say, we would incorporate them, with the same powers and the same responsibilities as a company—with a common seal, articles of association, annual balance-sheets, power to sue and be sued, responsible directors, and liability civilly for contracts and torts. This would give to them great power, it is true, but it would also impose proportionate responsibility in the exercise of that power, and especially it would secure publicity as to the objects and acts of the society, by virtue of its registered articles of association and published accounts, as well as by the necessity for the keeping of minutes of the proceedings of the governing body.

We must confess to entire inability to understand the purpose of an extraordinary provision in clause 12, which expressly prohibits a registered society from enforcing at law or in equity against any of its members "payment of any contribution, fine, or other due whatsoever, whether owing by such member under any rules or not, or of obtaining as against any member the benefit of any agreement made with such member." Does this singular prohibition contemplate merely that all payments by and agreements with members shall be enforced only under the provisions of the Friendly Societies Acts, or is it deliberately designed to prevent enforcement in any manner by process of law? This should be made clear.

Clause 14, however, fetters the members, as the 12th clause limits the powers of the corporate body. It declares that no such society shall be sued as a corporate body, in its own name or in that of its trustees or officers, and further that it "shall not be liable at law or in equity to any of its members for or in respect of any agreement or assurance made between such society and its members."

The meaning of this is obvious. It is designed to relieve the society from all responsibility, not merely to the public, but even to its own members. If, for instance, the society, in the carrying out of some resolution as to work, were to cause its members to do an injury to an employer, by this clause he would be prevented from suing the society for damages, but would be left to his remedy against the individual workman only—who would be practically free from liability, inasmuch as he would not be worth the suing. The same objection applies to the prohibition of members of the society enforcing agreements made with the society. As the Bill stands now, the society might enter into an agreement with a member, but the member would be forbidden by the Act to enforce such agreement.

The 16th section abolishes, alike in criminal and civil proceedings, the plea that the alleged act or offence is in restraint of trade. Thus is directly raised the very important question, whether freedom of trade shall continue to be the subject of legal recognition and protection. The acts of the trades unions to which exception has been usually made are those directed to the limitation of the right of employers and individual workmen to make such bargains as they please. This clause reverses the tendency of modern legislation, which is to remove obstacles to free bargains between individuals, by legalising acts which are in restraint of freedom of trade and freedom of contract. But a proviso in this clause excepts from the operation of it the power of the courts to enforce the performance, or penalty for non-performance, of an agreement considered by such court to be contrary to public policy as being in restraint of trade, due regard being had by such court to the amount of the restriction thereby imposed on the party restrained, together with the adequacy of the consideration to the party restraining," a provision which savours more of a treatise than of positive law. Its meaning is certainly not very clear.

The Bill contains no penal clauses. It deals with this important matter by the simple process of repealing the existing Combination Acts, as they are wrongfully called, for they are not laws to prohibit combinations, but on the contrary they repeal previous prohibitory statutes, legalise associations, and merely impose penalties on certain acts which experience had shown that the associations and their members had been accustomed to do for the purpose of compelling fellow-workmen to join them, or masters to come in to the terms they dictated. The argument is that these societies should be left to the criminal law and not be the subjects of special legislation. But the question is, whether the general criminal law sufficiently meets the specific offence which members of these societies have committed at various times.

The criminal law certainly extends to such grave crimes as are recorded of the Sheffield saw-grinders. It punishes murder, blowing up houses, malicious injuries to property, such as are known by the name of "ratteing," and all acts of violence to persons. But it does not reach picketing, and such like contrivances for personal annoyance, not amounting to positive assault, but even more vexatious. The law, which exists for the protection of individual liberty, is bound to punish every form of invasion of that liberty. There are acts which, not in themselves sufficiently vexatious to call for punishment when done by a single person, are a grievous injury and annoyance when done by many acting in concert, and there is nothing unjust or invidious in making such cumulative acts the subject of special prohibition and penalty. This is what the existing law does—and it is this law which the Bill before us repeals. Is not the liberty of the subject entitled to the protection it enjoys, and would its removal be right or safe? That is the question which Parliament must ask and answer.

THE DIVISION AND DEBATE AS TO THE SALARIES OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

We expressed in our last number the great regret which we felt at the result of Mr. HIBBERT's motion for the increase of the salaries of County Court Judges, and our strong reprehension of the tone adopted by Mr. AYRTON and the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER on the occasion, especially as the lateness of the hour rendered a reply to them impossible. We think the subject of so much importance to the Profession and the public, that we offer to our readers the following additional observations and considerations on the division and on the debate. The division we do not look upon as a defeat. Fifty-eight independent members of the House, including the tellers, registered their votes in favour of the reasonable claims of the Judges, and against the unreasoning refusal of the Government to comply with them. The division included the mover and seconder of the resolution, Mr. HIBBERT, and Mr. ASSHETON CROSS (Lancashire was well represented), Mr. BERESFORD HOPE, Mr. AMPHLETT, Q. C., and Mr. HENDE PALMER, Q. C., Mr. BONHAM CARTER (Chairman of the Committee of Selection), and several other distinguished names. The quarter sessions and other accidental circumstances deprived the Judges of many of their best friends, and amongst others, of Lord STANLEY and Sir JOHN PAKINGTON.

The Scotch and Irish members present generally responded to the Treasury whip, but the distinguished name of Mr. KENELM DIGBY, M.P.

for Queen's County, appeared in the minority. Where alone the division disappointed the supporters of the resolution, was in the default of certain members, who were pledged to support it, and of whom no less than eight actually attended the previous deputation, and stated to the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER their own conviction and that of their constituents in favour of it, and their determination to vote for it. (a) Amongst them we cannot help mentioning Mr. HEADLAM, Q. C., who was entrusted with a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of Newcastle in favour of the resolution, and Mr. NORWOOD, who attended the discussions on the Bankruptcy Bill throughout, and who were both in the House, but failed to vote.

However, the Government majority of 102 votes threw out the resolution, without a pretence of argument or reason against it. Such a defeat so caused, is not a defeat at all, but only the shadow of a certain victory hereafter. With regard to the debate there was in reality, only one speech made, and that was the very able, unanswered, and unanswerable speech of Mr. HIBBERT, who moved the resolution at nearly one o'clock in the morning. Mr. ASSHETON CROSS's few observations were, however, to the point.

Mr. AYRTON stated that there was a large deficit between the income and expenses of the County Courts, but he overlooked alike that it was fast decreasing in consequence of the extended jurisdiction and augmented business of the County Courts, and that if the Judges had continued to receive the fees originally designed for them by Parliament, their salaries would have been much higher, and the deficit would be much larger. He then proceeded to state that the present salary of 1500*l.* per annum was given to the Judges in 1865 on the understanding that bankruptcy business would be added to their duties, although the contrary was the fact, as indeed clearly appears by a question put by Mr. AYRTON himself in that year to Mr. GLADSTONE, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the reply of the latter. Then Mr. AYRTON asked whether the salary of 1500*l.* was to be considered a final settlement, or that any further claims were to be made in respect of any further duties. Mr. GLADSTONE replied in a manner, giving the honourable gentleman no answer, assurance, or satisfaction whatsoever. Mr. AYRTON concluded by stating that the Judges' allowance was probably double what they earned at the bar. How contrary this statement is to the fact is well known to most of our readers. Take any dozen of the Judges from the earliest to the latest appointed; take Mr. BILLINGSLEY PARRY, Q. C., Mr. BAGSHAW, Q. C., Sir WALTER RIDDELL, Mr. GALE, Mr. Serjt. PETERSDORFF, Mr. Serjt. WHEELER, Mr. ELLIS, Mr. WELFORD, Mr. STONOR (who, besides his practice, had an appointment of 1000*l.* a year as the head of the West Indian Commission), Mr. TURNER, Mr. LAKE RUSSELL, Mr. RUSSELL, Q. C. As to all these gentlemen, and most of the other Judges, it may well be said, that not only is Mr. AYRTON's statement untrue, but that the logical contrary of it is, generally speaking, the truth. But what has the question so improperly raised by Mr. AYRTON to do with the matter? If the present Judges are gentlemen whose capacities and abilities of mind or body proved inadequate for the arduous contest which ends in the highest judicial honours of the Equity and Common Law Bench, and who wisely accepted the less onerous duties of their present offices, is that any reason why the duties of the Judges of Superior Courts of Common Law, Admiralty, and Bankruptcy (we omit Equity, for remuneration was granted for that, and establishes the principle we contend for), should now be from time to time thrown on them as by the Amendment and Admiralty Acts of 1867 and 1868, and the Bankruptcy Bill 1869, without additional remuneration?

Both Mr. LOWE and Mr. AYRTON carefully avoided any reference to the cases now referred to the County Courts by the Superior Courts under the Amendment Act 1867, or the cases in which the title to real estate is involved, and in which jurisdiction was also conferred on them by that Act. With regard to the Admiralty jurisdiction, the Act of course will operate on the 1st Jan. 1869, and the rules regulating it have only just been published by the LORD CHANCELLOR and his committee of County

(a) See notice of this deputation in our number for June 12.

Court Judges, and yet in one court to our knowledge there have been forty cases, some of great importance, and we believe there have been an equal number in other courts. With regard to the equity cases, and also the referred cases and those in which title is to come in question, which Mr. LOWE and Mr. AYRTON no doubt purposely ignored, we would refer the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER to the County Courts Chronicle, much known and largely circulated in the Profession, but with which he is perhaps unacquainted. If he will refer to the judgments there reported of the learned Judges of County Courts, and especially of Mr. ELLIS, Mr. FALCONER, Mr. HERBERT, Mr. SHAW, and Mr. WELFORD, and Serjt. WHEELER, we think that he will not venture to repeat his assertions. The gentlemen we have mentioned are only some of whose judgments we have here had opportunities to obtain full and accurate reports, and we have every reason to believe that most of the Judges have discharged their large and multifarious duties as ably as those we have mentioned.

With regard to the quantity of work performed by the County Court Judges, we have no hesitation in saying that whenever it is inquired into it will be found that they are occupied more hours in the public service than the Common Law Judges, and it is to be remembered that they have no secretary, clerk, or attendant, to assist them in their courts.

The friends and supporters of the Judges of the County Courts, the Profession and the public, regard the decision of the House of Commons as an injustice, and the language of the Government as an insult. The House of Lords will soon have to deal with this measure, and we hope that the clause conferring the whole duties of the present Metropolitan Court and the Court of Appeal on Mr. Commissioner BACON, and the duties of the district commissioners on the County Court Judges, will be struck out until the Bill is accompanied with another increasing the salaries of both.

That assembly has lately been charged with "unwisdom," and the country has resented the insult; we hope that in this case it will show its regard for that great maxim of absolute wisdom that "the labourer is worthy of his hire."

DEFENDANTS IN SCOTLAND.

A VERY singular anomaly exists in our procedure as regards jurisdiction over defendants resident in Scotland. This will be illustrated by the following case which has come to our knowledge A, B, and C, are co-partners, carrying on business in a northern county in England. B and C are men of straw, and the partnership property at the place of business consists only of landlord's fixtures. A resides in Scotland, and is the monied member of the firm. A bill of exchange having been accepted by the firm is dishonoured at maturity. It is useless to proceed against B and C, and A cannot be reached by any proceedings taken in this country. The anomaly is this. As our readers know, the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852, by sects. 18 and 19, provides for suing persons out of the jurisdiction, and the former section commences thus: "In case any defendant, being a British subject, is resident out of the jurisdiction of the said Superior Court in any place except in Scotland or Ireland, &c."

This anomalous provision is noticed by Mr. Day in his edition of the Common Law Procedure Acts. In a note to the section he says, "It is to be observed that a writ cannot be issued under this section against a defendant residing in Scotland or Ireland. The words creating the exception were introduced into the Act at the last moment. A Scottish plaintiff may sue an English defendant in the Courts of Scotland if he have any property which can be attached jurisdictionis fundandæ causa, and the latter may never hear of the action till he finds his property seized by a judgment-creditor. An English creditor has no such remedy against a debtor in Scotland or Ireland. He must go to the Scottish or Irish courts, as the case may be; and this, even if the debtor have all his property in this."

In connection with this subject the action of the Legislature has been remarkable, for by the Act of 31 & 32 Vict., c. 54, a judgment obtained in England is, by registration, made effectual in Scotland, and vice versa. To our mind this is beginning at the wrong end of the procedure. A judgment cannot be obtained in this country against a debtor in Scotland, because a writ will not run into Scotland. The only conceivable use of the Judgments Extension Act is to attach in Scotland the property of debtors against whom judgment may have been obtained in England whilst within the jurisdiction.

An early opportunity should be taken of placing this branch of our procedure on a sensible footing.

PROSTITUTES IN PUBLIC HOUSES.

WE have before us an Irish decision which is on all fours with the Haymarket case which recently came before the Middlesex sessions. According to the case stated by the Dublin magistrate, the complainant, an inspector of police deposed that on the night of the 19th Dec. 1868, at about ten minutes past eight o'clock, he entered the public-house of the defendant and went into a tap-room, and saw there thirty or forty soldiers and ten women, three or four of whom he knew to be prostitutes, and the rest he suspected and believed to be prostitutes; they were sitting at table in company with soldiers; the defendant himself was not in the house, as he was ill; but the witness was accompanied by the defendant's wife, who managed the business of the house, to whom he complained that the women were prostitutes, to which she replied that they came in with soldiers and that she did not know who or what they were; there were no other women but the ten that witness could see at the time. On cross-examination the witness said that the women were sitting at different tables, mixed up with soldiers; there were drinking vessels on the table; the women were not talking to each other, but were talking to soldiers, of whom there were about thirty or forty in the rooms, and there was no appearance of improper and disorderly conduct in the room.

For the defendant it was deposed by his shop assistant that none of the women in the room on the occasion of the visit of the police came in alone. That they all came in accompanied by men, and all got refreshments in the ordinary way. They and the men accompanying them came in in different numbers. Witness also added that he received orders from his master, the defendant, never to allow prostitutes in without a man, and that those orders were also strictly observed and enforced.

And on the defendant's behalf it was contended that the presence in his house of ten prostitutes, who came in as described, and only for the purpose of getting refreshments, did not constitute a meeting within the provisions of the statute 5 Vict. c. 24, s. 17, under which the complaint was brought, and that the magistrate should not convict the defendant without some evidence that the prostitutes assembled and met for the purpose of prostitution.

The magistrate, however, considered that the prostitutes, or the majority of them, had been permitted to continue in the defendant's public-house for a longer period than was reasonable or necessary for the purpose of refreshment; and held that such an assembly of soldiers and prostitutes as described was in violation of the Act of Parliament, as being likely to result in breaches of morality and decency. He accordingly convicted the defendant of knowingly permitting prostitutes to meet together and remain in his house contrary to the statute.

This is exactly similar to the decision of Mr. KNOX. It was appealed from to the Court of Common Pleas, which court quashed the conviction after the manner of the Middlesex magistrates.

The court were of opinion that to justify a conviction it was not sufficient that prostitutes were in the house together; that it was necessary that the magistrate should arrive at the conclusion that the women came to the house for the purpose of prostitution or other disorderly conduct; that on the case there was no finding by the magistrate that, as a fact on the evidence, he arrived at the conclusion that the ten women, or any of them, had gone into the appellant's house either in furtherance of prostitution or in the capacity of prostitutes; that he did find that they remained longer than was necessary for refreshment; but the conclusion he arrived at from that fact was not a fact, viz., that they came into the appellant's house, or were there in their vocation, or in furtherance of it; but only a probability that such assembly was likely to result in breaches of morality. And as the magistrate did not appear himself to have come to the conclusion essential in order to bring the case within the statute, the court, without giving any opinion as to whether he would have been justified on the evidence in coming to such a conclusion, was of opinion that the conviction should not be upheld.

The position of this question is, therefore, this: Unless prostitutes are actually proceeding in a manner in furtherance of their wretched avocation there can be no conviction; and stopping in a public-house longer than is necessary for obtaining refreshment is not such a proceeding.

AGREEMENTS FOR LEASES, AND LEASES.

LANDOWNERS and tenant farmers, house owners and house occupiers, are continually asking themselves these questions:—"Is the printed or written paper, under which I hold, or have granted to hold, my premises, sufficient? Is it a lease or only an agreement for one? It is so full and circumstantial that I do not see how a further document would make things plainer, or my position safer; and yet my solicitor tells me I ought to execute one! What is the practical difference between an agreement and a lease; and how am I to know whether this is the one or the other?" These questions, so natural and easy to be put, are not so easy to answer. It is the object of this paper, however, to attempt to do so; and to help the landed interest, if not to dispense with lawyers in the matter, which would be in the last degree dangerous, at least to understand something of the law, which regulates transactions of everyday occurrence to themselves.

It is necessary then, in the first place, to impress on them this fact, that an instrument, although it styles itself an "agreement," or a "memorandum of agreement," or "articles of agreement," may, nevertheless, be a lease. And that, on the other hand, one which on the face of it appears to be a lease, may, all the while, be an agreement only.

How, then, is one to know to which character the instrument belongs? The real test seems to be this: what—assuming that it has complied with the statutory formalities as to its being in writing, or under seal, and as to its stamp (of which presently)—was the intention of the parties to it, at the time of entering into it, as disclosed by its contents? Subsequent acts done by them under it, or their declarations, are not to be relied on as determining its character (Doe v. Powell, 8 Scott N. R. 687), except the acts of entry and possession by the tenant, and of payment of rent by him, and acceptance of it by the landlord. This seems, it must be confessed, rather a vague and unsatisfactory way of stating the test, as it still throws us on the particular terms of each agreement—which are indefinite in their variety—for the discovery of that intention. And yet it seems all that can be said, in a general way. It may be made clearer, however, by a few illustrations. Thus, it may be considered that the words "A. agrees to let, and B. to take;" "A. does this day agree to let;" "You shall have a lease," followed by immediate occupation (a) by the tenant, constitute a lease, even although the instrument contains words pointing to a subsequent lease; for these words may be satisfied by referring them to the execution of a second lease by way, as the lawyers call it, of "further assurance," setting out more fully the terms of the holding, and so "assuring" to each party more completely their respective rights. So, the stipulation that "until a lease is executed the parties shall stand in the same relation as if it had been" is a strong indication of its being a lease; and so, if the instrument contains provisions usually found in actual leases. Again, certainty as to the amount of rent and time of its payment, and as to the commencement and duration of the term, or an expenditure by the tenant on the premises in compliance with the instrument, point to a similar construction.

On the other hand, if the lessor had not at the time the power to grant a lease, it is not one, though in terms it would appear to be so; nor does the absence in it of words pointing to a future more formal instrument show it to be a lease. So a stipulation that the tenant shall hold on "all usual covenants where the premises are situate," is strong to show it an agreement only.

(a) It is true Mr. Platt (Leases, vol. 1, p. 611) says this circumstance does not materially affect the construction; yet he admits cases have decided that it does,

As to the statutory formalities to be observed, the subject may be treated under two heads:

1. As regards interests in lands and houses which do not, and

2. As regards such as do, exceed three years from the making thereof.

First, as to interests not exceeding three years. These, if leases, and reserving rent to the amount of two-thirds of the full improved value of the thing demised, were not required by the (old) law to be in writing (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 2), and therefore need not be by deed (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3), nor even in writing, now. But such a lease by a corporation must be by deed.

If, however, these interests are, as they may be, created by deed or writing, an ad valorem stamp on the amount of rent is necessary: (13 & 14 Vict. c. 97; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, s. 24.) If the lease be of a furnished house for less than a year, and the rent exceed 25*l.*, a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp is necessary, which may be adhesive, and across which every party, if not more than two, must write his name: (24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, sched. B.)

If the instrument be an agreement only, it must be in writing, in order to be valid at law (though if made by an agent he need not be authorised in writing), or at least, and this virtually amounts to the same thing, no action can be brought upon it unless it be in writing: (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4.)

In equity, however, an agreement not in writing will be enforced, if it has been partly performed.

What amounts to a part performance is in itself a long chapter in law, and need not here be gone into.

If the agreement be by a corporation it seems it must be by deed: (Carter v. Dean of Ely, 7 Sim. 211, 227.) Entry under a mere agreement constitutes a tenancy at will (Woodfall's L. & T. 155), and payment of rent a tenancy—or, at least, evidence from which a jury may find a tenancy—from year to year: (Ibid. p. 153.)

The stamp on such an agreement is the same as on a lease for the same rent, term, &c.: (23 Vict. c. 15.) If it be an agreement for a furnished house for less than a year, the stamp is the same as on a lease thereof for such a term: (24 & 25 Vict. c. 21.)

Secondly, as to interests in lands or houses exceeding three years, or—if the reserved rent be not two-thirds of the improved annual value, or the lease is to begin from a day subsequent to the making (a) thereof—not exceeding three years.

These, if leases, must be by deed (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3); but if not by deed, and therefore not valid as leases, they may still be good as agreements, and enforceable as such in a court of equity, or by action for breach of them at law, if founded on what is called in law a "good or valuable consideration." That is, the party making the promise must have obtained some advantage, and the party with whom such promise was made must have suffered some loss, or sustained some injury or inconvenience, in consequence of the making or accepting the promise. And this "consideration" must be mutual, i.e., there must be one moving from the landlord to the tenant, and also from the tenant to the landlord; otherwise it is one-sided, and incapable of being enforced. Thus a tenant, who has stipulated to repair (in an instrument void at law for not being by deed), and has entered and paid rent, cannot allege want of consideration on his own part as a ground for relieving himself from his stipulation. His entry and payment has raised such an equitable obligation in the landlord to fulfil his part of the contract (i.e., to do everything that is properly incidental to a tenancy) as will support the stipulation. And such a stipulation to repair is not inconsistent with a tenancy from year to year: (Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Merral, L. Rep. 4 Ex. 162.)

These interests must, moreover, to be good as agreements, be in writing, for the same reason as agreements for interests under three years: (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4.)

If leases, the proper stamp on them is an ad valorem one on the rent: (13 & 14 Vict. c. 97.)

If agreements for a term not exceeding seven years, they must be stamped as leases for the same term, rent, &c.: (23 Vict. c. 15, sched.) If agreements for terms exceeding seven years, then they seem to require a sixpenny stamp only, as agreements "not otherwise charged," if the subject-matter of them be over 5*l.*: (Ibid.)

(a.) This would seem to mean "from the execution thereof" as an instrument dates from its delivery.

The chief practical difference between an agreement for a lease, and a lease, now that the stamps on them are generally the same, is, that in the former the tenant, not possessing, at least until he has paid rent, the legal estate, the landlord may bring an action of ejectment against him at any time without notice, should he enter and occupy; and his only redress, if any, is to obtain an injunction in equity to restrain him. Whilst, on the other hand, and for the same reason, the landlord cannot, at least until payment of rent by the tenant, have the summary remedy of a distress, for rent in arrear, but will be driven to his action in damages for use and occupation: (5 Davidson's Convey. p. 17.) Not that even a lease passes the legal estate to the tenant by force of, and instantly upon, its execution, unless and until the lessee, as he generally does, or has previously done, "enters:" (Co. Litt. 270, a.) This entry must be an actual one on a part of the premises in the name of the whole, by himself or his agent.

The following advice then, upon the whole, is offered:

Find, first, from the instrument itself, whether it is an agreement or a lease, and then apply the above-mentioned statutes, and see how far it has complied with their requirements, as to its being in writing, or by deed, or being duly stamped. And if it be still in course of preparation, and unexecuted, and the intention be that it should operate only as an agreement, insert in it a clause to that effect, to obviate all future questions about it.

MISSTATEMENT OR FRAUD?

The careers of limited liability companies have done a great deal to illustrate the distinction between misstatement and fraud. This distinction we have seen cropping up again in the case of Jacomb v. Watkin, which has occupied so much of the London sittings in the Court of Queen's Bench, and therefore it may not be labour lost if we look at the judicial decisions respecting fraud and misrepresentation, to use the legal expression, in order to see the reasons which underlie the distinction.

We may notice, in the first place, that strong objection has been more than once expressed to the use of the word fraudulent, and conspicuously so in the case of Turquand v. Marshall, the hearing of which before the Lord Chancellor we report this week (see also L. Rep. 4 Ch. App. 276.) This case was originally before the Master of the Rolls; and his Lordship, upon counsel using the word "fraudulent," interposed by saying, "I do not like the word 'fraudulent,' the expression is 'false.' That is the proper statement. I do not like to have the word 'fraudulent' used unless there is strong proof of it. It means not merely falsehood, but falsehood for the benefit of the persons who utter the falsehood. As the case is put to me, no case of that sort is opened. The case put by Sir R. Palmer has been, negligence and improper conduct, for which they are liable, but from which they did not get the slightest benefit themselves."

Having these observations of the Master of the Rolls, it is interesting to look at the description of the bill given by Lord Hatherley. He said, "The whole scheme of the bill is to represent a series of balance-sheets annually laid before the company at their general meetings, in which were contained false entries misleading the whole of the shareholders into a belief in the prosperity of the company, when it was in fact failing, and hiding from them the fact that one-half of the capital had been exhausted together with the surplus funds." From this it would appear that unless there is a covinous proceeding leading to the aggrandisement of the individual, it is useless to go into equity, on the ground of fraud. The remedy is by a civil action by each individual shareholder against the directors, not for fraud, but for misrepresentation. How difficult it is to prove a case of this kind, Jacomb v. Watkin shows. The proceeding in reality is an attempt to make a trustee liable in damages for a breach of trust, or in equity, to compel him to pay back moneys lost by the ill-management of the business. To represent that a business is flourishing, when it is failing, is a misstatement, but the damage resulting is not so easily ascertainable as in other cases of misrepresentation, as, for instance, of the value of a public-house. Referring to the case of the Western Bank of Scotland, in the Scotch Court of Session, Lord Hatherley remarked, "If any shareholder had been deceived, and induced to remain longer in the concern, and had thereby incurred loss, such a loss might, perhaps, have been recovered by him in an action at law, though the Lord Justice Clerk seemed to have had some doubt, and to have considered the damage very remote. But in that case it was clear that each shareholder must recover for himself the loss which he might have received by having purchased his shares under misrepresentation."

Therefore, we see that, as a matter of inducement, a misrepresentation to be fraudulent must be made for the express purpose of obtaining a benefit for the person making it. There must be an intention to deceive, and damage resulting from the deceit. If, as the Lord Justice Clerk says, the damage sustainable by a shareholder is too remote, fraud cannot be proved against directors of companies in a civil action where they have published a false prospectus. But we must pursue this matter further, and inquire what is the intention of those who publish a false prospectus or who "cook" balance-sheets. That intention undoubtedly is to induce the shareholders to keep the concern afloat as long as possible, and from this concern the directors derive an annual income. Consequently a personal advantage is obtained by the false statements or device; but because that advantage is not direct, as in Gerhard v. Bates, 2 E. & B. 476, and because the proceedings of the directors amount only to "negligence and improper conduct," the Master of the Rolls objects to the use of the word "fraudulent," and substitutes the word "false."

Now taking the great case of Pasley v. Freeman, and the numerous decisions of which that is the chief, we find the principle to be that a mere falsehood is not enough to give a right of action; but if it be a falsehood told with the intention that it should be acted upon by the party injured, that party would have his remedy. This principle was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber in Langridge v. Levy, on the ground that there had been fraud and damage resulting from it. Thus we find a false statement regarded as a fraud and punished accordingly. The result at which we must arrive is that there is very little distinction between a false statement and a fraudulent statement, where the knowledge of the person making it is equal in each case. A learned author, dealing with fraud in the sale of personalty, says, "Although fraud has been said to be 'every kind of artifice employed by one person for the purpose of deceiving another,' courts and lawgivers have alike wisely refrained from any attempt to define with exactness what constitutes a fraud, it being so subtle in its nature, and so Protean in its disguises, as to render it almost impossible to give a definition which fraud would not find means to evade;" (Benjamin's Sale of Personal Property, p. 314.) That is to say that whilst in every knowingly false statement, fraud prima facie exists, it is so difficult to satisfy the law's conception of fraud that its actual presence can rarely be proved. Therefore if the word fraudulent were erased from our legal vocabulary the loss would be rather an advantage than otherwise.

THE LAWS AGAINST BETTING AND GAMING.

A LITTLE pamphlet has very opportunely appeared which enables us to understand, as far as may be, the policy of the Legislature in passing laws for the suppression of betting, and argues well the question whether the betting prosecutions should be directed against Messrs. TATTERSALL's as against minor establishments of a similar kind.

The principal point made by the writer is, that Sir ALEXANDER COCKBURN, who framed and carried the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, declared at the time he introduced the Bill, that it was directed against a practice recently sprung up, and not against Messrs. TATTERSALL's and establishments of that nature, supported as they are by long custom. The words of the Chief Justice are cited to show that TATTERSALL's must be exempt, but we cannot agree with the writer that because the framer of the Bill wished to exempt that famous place of resort, therefore it is exempt. Sir A. COCKBURN said that the difficulty which arose in legislating upon this subject, was to be found in the disinclination which was felt against interfering with that description of betting which had so long existed at TATTERSALL's and elsewhere in connection with the great national sport of horse-racing. This he did say beyond a doubt, and the only question is whether his Bill spoke as clearly as himself, and overcame the difficulty by steering clear of the favoured betting places.

The writer of the pamphlet very ingeniously takes sects. 1 and 2 of the Act, together with the speech of the now Chief Justice, and out of the most comprehensive view extracts the conclusion that what Sir ALEXANDER said he intended he has actually effected. Now for the purpose of seeing whether this is so we must look carefully at the Act. The preamble undoubtedly refers to a new kind of betting-house, the proprietors of which gambled with their customers, a system which the Act designed to suppress. The first section says, "No house, office, room, or other place shall be opened, kept, or used for the purpose of the owner, occupier, or keeper thereof, or any person procured or employed by or on behalf of such owner, occupier, or keeper, or person using the same, or of any person having the care or management, or in any manner conducting the business thereof betting with persons resorting thereto; or for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by or on behalf of such owner, occupier, keeper, or person as aforesaid, as or for the consideration for any assurance, undertaking, promise or agreement, express or implied, to pay or give thereafter any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency of or relating to any horse race, fight, game, sport, or exercise; or as or for the consideration for securing the paying or giving by some other person of any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency as aforesaid; and every house, office, room, or other place opened, kept, or used for the purpose aforesaid, or any of them, is hereby declared to be a common nuisance and contrary to law."

Taken apart from the speech which introduced the Bill, this section can have but one meaning, namely, that all places inducing to the congregation of persons for the purpose of betting should be a nuisance and contrary to law. It satisfies the statute if a person procures another to come and bet with the persons who resort to his place. This person need not be employed, that is to say, made use of for the express purpose, but it is sufficient if he be procured. This distinction is material. A person is equally procured, whether he be paid to do a certain thing or whether he be attracted to do it. If by the attractions provided by facility of meeting with men of his class, a man goes to a place prepared to bet with persons resorting to it, is not a temptation thus held out to the general public to go there and make their bets? And was not the greediness of the public for the excitement of betting exactly what the Legislature meant to check when they passed the Bill brought in by Sir A. COCKBURN?

We are disposed to think, indeed, that TATTERSALL's is more within the Act than are the offices of the betting commission agents which have been attacked by the police, and Mr. POLAND's plea that TATTERSALL's is a club is about the most untenable that could have been set up. Any body of men may form a club by subscribing one penny apiece, and we suppose no one would venture to say that the rate of subscription has anything to do with the question. The word used in the section is "resorting," which, if anything, admits rather than negatives the presumption of an application for admission, and whether a person so applying pays, or whether he does not, is a matter of no moment.

We have taken a view opposed to "LEX," who writes the pamphlet which suggested this article, and we do so because we do not travel out of the Act to look at what Sir A. COCKBURN's intention was. Had the Legislature intended to spare TATTERSALL's and the commission offices they should have done so expressly. As it is, the "club" theory being exploded, we do not see how the ancient institution is to be protected whilst less noxious modern ones are prosecuted. What if an opposition TATTERSALL's started tomorrow—would it be liable and the old one exempt? Clearly a custom in favour of that which is contrary to law is a bad custom, and could not be supported. If the pending prosecutions succeed, a fortiori should a similar prosecution succeed against TATTERSALL's.

THE POWERS OF VOLUNTARY BODIES.

At a time when there is before us a near prospect of what is called voluntarism assuming a prominent position in our social arrangements, it is very important that every one should know what are the powers of voluntary bodies, that is to say, a collection of persons unincorporated, governed by no charter and no Act of Parliament, first where they are acting as trustees of endowment funds, and, secondly, where they are unfettered by any devise, but are free to follow their own inclinations to the limits allowed by law.

From one or two recent decisions we are led to infer that the courts are disposed to uphold the independence of voluntary bodies, to allow them to be judges of their own concerns, and to interfere as little as possible with the administration of their affairs. One of the most important duties of a voluntary religious body is, obviously, the appointment of its minister, and the power of such a body in dealing with its minister is illustrated by the case of Cooper v. Gordon, before Vice-Chancellor Stuart, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 732. There, it is true, there were endowments to be administered by trustees in paying the minister. But the same principle arising in all these cases arose there, namely, the principle affecting the power to dismiss on mere caprice and upon grounds not tenable in the case of master and servant.

The facts in that case are edifying in many respects. Had the minister, who was there the defendant, been guilty of immorality or heterodoxy, the congregation would, of course, have had a right at once to eject him from his office. But Mr. Gordon was not charged with anything of this kind, and there was nothing in the rules of the society with reference to the removal of the pastors. Was, then, the majority to govern the minority? and was a minister to be dismissed upon grounds affecting merely the composition of his sermons? Of course, it will at once occur to the legal mind that the question is one of contract between the parties, and where the contract is not in writing usage must govern. It appeared in the case of Cooper v. Gordon that the objections to Mr. Gordon were not of such a nature as would have justified his dismissal without notice, but were simply as follows:—1. That his sermons were too argumentative, containing trains of reasoning which the people could not carry away with them. 2. The sermons were above the level of the great mass of people, not being sufficiently simple. 3. They were too Arminian in doctrine. 4. They set up too high a standard of Christian life, not taking sufficient account of the influence of trials, &c. 5. There was a deficiency of unction, of Gospel power, and Christian experience. 6. The motives from which Christians were exhorted to act were not those of Christian love, but of dry, rigid duty. 7. The work of the Spirit was not sufficiently dwelt upon. 8. In some of the sermons there was nothing said to unconverted sinners.

And we may briefly say that it was in the power of the majority of the congregation on such grounds as these to dismiss their minister against the wish of the minority.

This doctrine is carried to its full extent in a case more to the point as regards voluntary bodies bound by no trust but governed only by ordinances—the case of Perry v. Shipway, 1 Giff. 1. There it was recognised that a dissenting minister is merely tenant at will of the trustees, and if a majority of the trustees choose to prevent him from preaching they can do so. That was established at law by two cases which it may be wise to notice. They are both reported in 10 B. & C., the first, Jones v. Jones, at p. 718. That case decided that where a dissenting minister was, after his election, placed in possession of a chapel and dwelling house, by certain persons in whom the legal fee was vested in trust, to permit and suffer the chapel to be used for the purpose of religious worship, he was a mere tenant at will to those persons, and that his interest was determinable by a demand of possession, without any previous notice to quit. The other case which follows this is Nicholl v. McKaeg, at p. 721. That case is strictly in accordance with Jones v. Jones, but goes further, and says that the minister is not entitled to reasonable time to remove his goods. Lord Tenterden, in his judgment, said, “It was contended that a mere demand of possession was not in this case sufficient to determine the tenancy, but that a reasonable time ought to have been allowed the defendant for the purpose of removing his goods. We can find no authority in the law for such a proposition.”

Therefore we have it established—and the Attorney-General v. Aked, 7 Sim. 322, is a further authority—that a dissenting minister may be turned out of his pastorate by a majority of his congregation, and that if he is occupying a house belonging to the trustees of the chapel, and which may be in part payment of his salary, he may be ejected after mere demand of possession, and not even allowed a reasonable time to remove his goods.

There remains the question of the rights of the minister in the event of a capricious or improper dismissal by the majority of the society or congregation. In Cooper v. Gordon, the Vice-Chancellor notices that this question was passed over in the judgment in the Attorney-General v. Aked. He says, “The judgment leaves open the question whether, in case of a capricious or improper dismissal, the court might interfere.” And he adds, “This is not very important, because of the improbability that anything done by the majority of the congregation concurring with the majority of the trustees, could be capricious or improper.” Of course, if this is assumed, every voluntary body is entirely exempt from responsibility. A minister may be engaged for no definite term, and may be suddenly dismissed by a majority which has taken some ridiculous offence; he may be turned with his goods out of his house and into the street, and if he makes complaint to any court of law or equity, he is met by the assumption in favour of the bona fides and good sense of majorities. In a case which we reported last week, Hoare v. Anderson, at Nisi Prius, Chief Justice Cockburn went still further than this, where an inmate of a charity complained of wrongful dismissal, holding that to make the voluntary governing body liable for the wrongful act, mala fides must be clearly proved. There his Lordship refused to allow the question to go to the jury whether the governing body had acted improperly and treated the inmate capriciously, assuming, it is to be apprehended, that such a body could not be guilty of caprice or impropriety.

Vice-Chancellor Stuart thinks it a wise law which gives absolute power to the majority of a voluntary body. It may be so, but what is the result? The minority secedes. “When the minority refuse to submit,” he says, “peace is maintained by their seceding, and forming themselves, if they can, into another harmonious congregation.” Such a condition of things must be regarded as intensely unsatisfactory to ministers and minorities. In fact, we cannot look forward with any degree of contentment to the voluntarism of the future. The Vice-Chancellor truly says it is vain to try to confound the position of a dissenting minister, as to the permanence of its tenure, with that of a public officer, of the rector of a parish, or a parish clerk. Instead, therefore of giving some sort of stability to the tenures of all ministers of religion, the tendency now is to bring the Church to the level of instability belonging to the ministers of voluntary societies. If fully carried out, a rector will be in a worse position than his clerk now is; in short, all those whose condition is now assured will become subject to the caprice of the majority of their congregations, and liable to be turned out of their houses, where those houses belong to the trustees of the society or sect, without being allowed a reasonable time to remove their goods.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Thursday, July 1, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chelmsford, and Lord Colonsay, were present, and were assisted by the following judges: Justices Mellor, Keating, and Brett, and Barons Bramwell and Cleasby.

The arguments in The Queen on the Prosecution of the Mayor and Corporation of Southampton v. The Port and Harbour Commissioners of Southampton, in error from the Exchequer Chamber, was proceeded with. The case before the Exchequer Chamber is not reported, but that in the Queen's Bench will be found in 30 L. J. 244, Q. B. The circumstances were as follows:—A mandamus had been obtained calling on the respondents to enforce payment from the Dock Company of Southampton of such a sum as would make up the income of the commissioners from dues on goods equal to 1000*l.* per annum. The corporation of Southampton were the promoters, and their direct interest in the money to be recovered from the Dock Company was supposed to be that they were entitled to one-fifth of that sum, when it should have been recovered from the Dock Company. The money was sought to be recovered from the Dock Company under 6 Will. 4, c. 29, s. 124, and the right of the corporation to have one fifth of the sum recovered from that company was alleged to have been created by 43 Geo. 3, c. 21, s. 19, which established the commissioners. The Court of Exchequer Chamber, being of opinion that the corporation had no right to the fifth part of the money sought to be recovered from the Dock Company, reversed the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, which had turned upon another point. At the conclusion of the arguments the Lord Chancellor put the following questions to the learned judges, who requested time to consider their opinions:—First, whether the writ of mandamus in this case was good and satisfactory; and secondly, whether, according to the construction of the Acts of Parliament relating to the docks and port of Southampton respectively, the income of the commissioners arising from rates, duties, and payments in respect of goods, wares, or merchandise referred to in the 124th section of 6 Will. 4, c. 29, was to be taken as inclusive or exclusive of the one-fifth share payable to the corporation of Southampton out of the said rates and duties. The further consideration was adjourned sine die.

The arguments of the appellants in the Sheddin legitimacy case (Sheddin and another v. The Attorney-General) are at last ended. Mr. Sheddin, following his daughter, addressed the House during the whole of Friday, July 2, their Lordships repeatedly interrupting him with complaints of his unnecessary repetitions and digressions. The Lord Chancellor said that he persisted in giving all sorts of irrelevant details from personal recollection, and in reading at length what his daughter had already read five or six times over; and their Lordships had marked in the printed books of the case that they had before them. The Lord Chancellor added that they were in possession of all the material facts of the case, and urged Mr. Sheddin to argue the points that had been suggested to him for argument. At the end of the day's sitting, Mr. Sheddin was told that his address must be finished early on the Monday following, the Lord Chancellor observing that he had only taken three lines of notes and that the case had not been at all advanced during the day. On Monday last much time was occupied in contention between him and the noble and learned lords; and Lord Chelmsford said that he felt bound to say that the appellants seemed to him to be trying to keep their case as long as possible before the public, disregarding the interests of the public and those of other suitors. When their Lordships were about to adjourn for lunch, the Lord Chancellor, addressing Mr. Sheddin, said: “The time has come when we must declare this painful argument closed. We have repeatedly told you that we should be glad to listen to any argument, but you have substituted declamation and details of family history for argument. The few arguments that we have had from you have been mere repetitions of those used by your daughter. Public time can no longer be thus wasted. If you have anything more to say it must be said within the next five minutes.” Mr. Sheddin begged that he might be allowed another half hour, and added a few more remarks. Their Lordships then retired, the Lord Chancellor previously saying: “You have now been heard between six and seven hours. We realise the importance of the issues to yourself and daughter, and we have been most anxious to give you every possible indulgence. But the issues have been nearly smothered by the mass of irrelevant matter introduced. You have added no new arguments to those of your daughter, and we are of opinion that your case is closed. The questions are these: Ought the court below to have called a jury? Were the inferences drawn from the evidence by the court below right or wrong? Was evidence improperly admitted or rejected by the court below? Does the new evidence, discovered since the trial in the court below, affect the accuracy of the decision then arrived at? We will take time to consider whether we need call upon the counsel on the other side.” The further consideration of this case was then adjourned sine die. It may be interesting to note the time occupied in the addresses of the appellants. Miss Sheddin applied for a further postponement on April 26, but the application was refused by the House, and it was ordered that the case should be proceeded with peremptorily on the following day. On April 27 accordingly Miss Sheddin commenced her address, and continued it on twenty-one days between that date and June 22. She occupied eighteen days in her statement of facts, and three days in arguments of law. Mr. Shedden spoke for one day and a half, when he was stopped by the House. The case of the Shedden family has been before the public in one form or another since the early part of the present century. The question under the present appeal has been as to the legitimacy of Mr. Shedden. In 1860, the appellants presented a petition to the Divorce Court praying that Mr. Shedden might be declared legitimate and a natural born British subject. This proceeding was under the Legitimacy Declaration Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 83). The full court, consisting of the Judge Ordinary (Sir Cresswell Cresswell), and Justices Wightman and Williams, pronounced against the petition. This judgment was the subject of the present appeal. The case in the court below is reported in 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 202; 2 Sw. & Tr. 170. A most interesting account of the remarkable story of the Shedden family will be found in the Law Magazine and Review, vol. 23, p. 344.

The case of the Duke of Queensberry and Buccleuch v. Walfield and Kennedy (with a cross-appeal), was argued on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday last. This is an appeal from a judgment of Vice-Chancellor Malins (reported in 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 462; 1 L. Rep. 4 Eq. 613), by which it was held that where a local inclosure Act had placed the purchaser of land sold to pay expenses, and the lord of the manor, in the ordinary position of the owner in fee of the surface, and the owner of the minerals with rights of user of the surface for the purpose of working the mines, yet the lord of the manor had no right to cause a subsidence of the surface, even though he could not work the mines at all without causing such subsidence. An injunction, at the suit of the purchaser, was accordingly granted against the lord of the manor.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

On Thursday, July 1, and on Monday last, the case of the Bishop of Capetown v. The Bishop of Natal, on appeal from the Supreme Court of Natal was heard. The original suit was brought by the respondent to establish his right to undisturbed possession of the cathedral church of his diocese under the following circumstances:—In 1850 the land, on which the cathedral was afterwards built, was granted by the Crown in fee to the appellant, the Bishop of Capetown, and his successors of the said see in trust for the English Church at Pietermaritzburg. At that time the old diocese of Capetown, including the whole of the colony at the Cape and the Island of St. Helena, was in existence. But the extent of this being found inconvenient, in Nov. 1853 (the appellant having previously resigned), by letters patent, the diocese was divided into three separate and distinct dioceses, viz., Capetown, Natal, and Grahamstown. By these letters patent the respondent was appointed to the diocese of Natal, while, by other letters patent, in December following, the appellant was appointed to the new diocese of Capetown. The cathedral, built on the land granted as above mentioned by the Crown, was completed in Aug. 1854, the charges being paid by donations from England and the colony. In the respondent's letters patent it was declared that the church then in course of erection should henceforth be the cathedral church of the respondent and his successors, bishops of Natal. In consequence of the opinions professed by the respondent (Dr. Colenso), the appellant excommunicated and deposed him, but the sentence was annulled by Her Majesty in Privy Council in March 1865. In November of that year, however, the respondent was obstructed, as he alleged by the appellant's instructions, in various ways in the use of the cathedral. The vestry door was shut in his face, the churchwardens stopped him in the aisle while the sentence of deposition was read, the Bible, Prayer-book, harmonium, and Communion service were taken away, the dean would not let the bells be rung, and stopped people coming to service. The respondent took legal proceedings successfully against the dean and churchwardens, and then brought the present action. The declaration set out the material facts above-stated, and that the appellant kept partial and adverse possession of the cathedral and the land, claimed for further damages, and prayed that the appellant might be ejected, and that the deed of grant might be amended by substituting the respondent and his successors in office as the holders or trustees of the land therein granted. The Supreme Court gave judgment for the respondent, with costs. Hence this appeal. Sir Roundell Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Arthur Charles, for the appellant, argued substantially that the terms of the grant only must be looked to, and that according to these, the appellant was the proper trustee, and the cathedral and land must be vested in him as such. Mr. Wickens and Mr. Westlake, for the respondent, contended that according to the intention of the grant the land was to be held in trust for the bishop of the diocese for the time being.

And further that the question was to be governed not by English, but by Roman-Dutch law, which (following the Roman civil law) makes a trust for pious uses attach to the office, and not the person of the trustee. Their Lordships reserved judgment.

On Thursday, July 1, McClellan v. Dummatt and others was heard. This was an appeal from an order made by the Court of Common Pleas in Barbadoes on the petition of the respondents, declaring the appellant and others insolvent traders within an Act of the Island, and directing a prosecution of insolvency. The appellant rested his appeal on two grounds; first, that at the time when the alleged debt to the respondents was contracted, and when the above order was made, he was an infant, and therefore not liable to be adjudged insolvent in respect of such debt; secondly, that no debt from the appellant to the respondents was proved. After hearing counsel, Lord Justice Giffard said that their Lordships were of opinion that on the second ground stated the contention of the appellant must prevail. The order of the court below would therefore be reversed with costs.

On Wednesday a case of importance on the question of the personal liability of directors was heard. This was the case of Cherry and another v. The Colonial Bank of Australasia, on appeal from the Supreme Court of Victoria. The respondents brought an action against the appellants to recover from them a sum of 4125*l.*, being the amount paid by them to one Clarke, whom the appellants had represented as authorised to draw cheques on account of the Loch Fyne Quartz and Gold Mining Company. The appellants were directors of the company, but were not empowered to give Clarke the authority which by a letter to the respondents they expressly stated they had given him as such directors. The colonial court decided in favour of the claim against the directors, who thereupon appealed. Judgment, after hearing counsel on both sides, was reserved by their Lordships.

On Monday judgment was delivered in two Admiralty appeals, the Great Pacific and the Germania.

The Great Pacific raised a most important question, which was briefly this. The master of the ship borrowed money on bottomry, for the repairs of the ship. Subsequently while on her voyage, the ship was badly damaged in a hurricane, and was sold as unworthy of repairs. The bottomry bond contained the clause: "In case of the loss of the ship, such an average as by custom shall have become due on the salvage," &c. On a suit by the bondholders against the proceeds of the sale, a mortgagee of the ship intervening, Sir Robert Phillimore held, that the bondholders were entitled to the whole proceeds of the sale, there not having been such an absolute total loss as to discharge the borrower from liability; and that the above clause contemplated an event that had not arrived, viz., the ship's ceasing to exist in specie, and débris only remaining. The case below is reported in 20 L. T. Rep., N. S., 44, and similar arguments to those there given were used in the appeal. Their Lordships now affirmed the judgment of the court below, and on the same grounds.

In the case of the Germania, a collision at night having occurred in the English Channel between the vessels the Germania and the Constance Eleanor, a question arose as to whether the latter (a barque) was carrying proper lights, because, if so, it was the duty of the Germania (a steamer) to get out of her way. The vessels were both foreign, but by treaty bound to obey the regulations as to navigation obligatory on British vessels by statute. Sir Robert Phillimore decided this question against the barque. The Judicial Committee now varied that judgment by deciding that the damages and losses must be borne equally by the two vessels, considering both to blame for the collision.

In Brett v. Ellaiya, a note of the hearing of which appeared in our last week's "Sayings and Doings," the appeal was dismissed, but without costs, the hearing having been ex parte.

ROLLS COURT.

The Master of the Rolls disposed of all the further considerations early in the week, and then proceeded with his cause list, which is not very long. Some cases worthy of notice have been decided during the past week.

The first, Foard v. Watkins, was a suit instituted for the purpose of enforcing a charge which the plaintiff claimed on a sum of 800*l.* which the defendant Watkins had agreed to pay to a solicitor named Hanrott, for his trouble in finding a purchaser for certain land which Watkins wanted to sell. In Jan. 1868 Hanrott found one Elwes, who agreed to purchase the property, and Watkins signed a memorandum by which he agreed to pay Hanrott 800*l.* Hanrott soon afterwards borrowed 275*l.* from the plaintiff on the security of this memorandum of agreement. In April 1868 Elwes wished to abandon his contract for the purchase, and after some negotiations Watkins agreed to put an end to the contract on condition that Elwes should pay 750*l.* to him, and 105*l.* to Hanrott for the costs of investigating the title, out of which Watkins was to receive 50*l.*, thus making up 800*l.* Elwes paid the money and the contract was rescinded. The question which arose upon the plaintiff's suit to enforce his charge of 275*l.* on the 800*l.* commission money, was whether the agreement to pay the 800*l.* remained in force, or whether it was annulled by the rescinding of the contract for sale. His Lordship said that the contract with Elwes was a bona fide contract, and that the annulling of it did not, in his opinion, exonerate Watkins from his agreement to pay the 800*l.* It had been argued that this agreement was void because entered into between a solicitor and his client, but his Lordship was of opinion that the relation of solicitor and client did not subsist between Hanrott and Watkins; and even assuming that it did, a contract by a man with his solicitor to pay him a given sum, if he found him a purchaser at a certain price, was perfectly legal and valid. Such an agreement might be made with a solicitor as well as with any one else. The memorandum would clearly have created a charge on the land if the contract for sale had not been rescinded; but the contract for sale was not rescinded until after notice of the plaintiff's charge had been given to Watkins, and after such notice Watkins and Elwes could not alter the character of the charge by annulling their contract. The charge was a charge on the land, and the plaintiff was therefore entitled to stand in Hanrott's shoes, and receive the benefit of his charge to the extent of his security.

Kirkman v. Lewis was a suit for the administration of the estate of a testator, who gave the residue of his personal estate to be applied in the construction of a well and the erection of a pump and tank in any convenient place in the village of Llangorse, and he directed that any surplus should be paid to the rector to be applied for the benefit of the parish schools. The question was raised by the next of kin whether this gift was not totally invalid. On behalf of the Attorney-General it was argued that the gift for the well was not void under the Statute of Mortmain, as it did not necessarily involve the purchase of land; and that even if it were void, the gift of the surplus was good, as it could easily be ascertained what would be the cost of sinking the well and erecting the pump, &c. His Lordship held that the gift for sinking the well, &c., was clearly void under the Statute of Mortmain; and that the gift of the surplus was void for uncertainty, as it was impossible to ascertain how much a well would cost without sinking it. The whole gift therefore failed, and the next of kin were entitled.

Rouland v. Cuthbertson was a creditor's suit for the administration of the trusts of the will of Alexander Cuthbertson. By his will, dated 8th Nov. 1864, the testator, after directing payment of his just debts, &c., devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever situate, and of what nature, quality, or kind the same might be, subject as aforesaid, to trustees upon trust to permit the testator's wife and five children to use his personal estate (not consisting of money), and receive the rents, &c., of his said estate and effects in equal shares as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; but it was his will that the share and interest so given to his said wife should upon her death cease and determine; and from and after her death he directed his trustees to hold the same upon trust for his said five children, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. The testator married after the date when the Dower Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105) came into operation, and he had had real estate conveyed to him without any declaration against dower; the only question which arose in the suit was, whether his widow was entitled to dower out of such real estate. His Lordship was of opinion that she was deprived of her dower by the 9th section of the Act, though not by the 4th section.

Davis v. Jones was a motion to restrain the defendant from obstructing a road called Birchanger-road, leading from the Norwood Junction station to Woodside-green, and to restrain him from further interrupting the plaintiff in the use of the road. The roads on the property had been made by the several owners of the property, and mutual rights of way were given over them by an agreement made in the year 1863. The defendant made Birchanger-road, and the plaintiff who is a brick-maker and builder, had a right of way over it under the agreement. In 1868 the plaintiff, who was building in the neighbourhood, began to cart bricks to his building ground over the Birchanger-road, his own road, which was the nearer way to the building ground, having become impassable owing to the constant traffic of the brick carts. The defendant finding that his road was being rapidly rendered as impassable as the plaintiff's, placed a row of wooden posts across the road so as to stop all vehicles; the posts were cut down during the night, and the defendant then dug a trench two feet deep and several feet in width across the road, whereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit. The defendant deposed that he had closed the road only for the purpose of repairing it, and that when he placed the posts across the road he had put up a placard with the words, "Closed for repairs." His Lordship said that the defendant's proceeding was illegal; that he had no right to close a road over which other persons had a right of way, even for the purpose of repairing it; the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to an injunction in the terms of the motion.

In Lord Brougham v. Cauvin, which we mentioned last week, his Lordship gave judgment on Tuesday on the question of costs, which was reserved at the hearing. His Lordship thought that both parties were to blame before the institution of the suit, the defendant for having demanded the immediate payment of 200*l.*, and the payment of another 200*l.* in a short time, and the plaintiff for having too hastily assumed that it was Dr. Cauvin's intention to use the manuscripts for his own advantage. Soon after the institution of the suit, Cauvin's solicitor had written a most proper and temperate letter, indignantly denying, on behalf of his client, that he intended to make any use of the manuscripts for his own advantage, or that he had entered into any arrangement with Messrs. Trübner or Messrs. Blackwood to publish them, and offering, if the plaintiff would pay him 200*l.* for his services, to refer the question of further remuneration to Mr. Forster, or Dr. Theodore Martin, in whose hands the defendant would place all the documents in his possession, and that the bill should be dismissed, each party paying his own costs. In his Lordship's opinion, this offer ought to have been accepted, but instead of doing so, the plaintiff's solicitors required, as a sine qua non, that the documents should be immediately delivered up to the plaintiff, and added that when this was done, they would willingly refer the matter to arbitration. They asserted that the suit was prosecuted for the sole purpose of getting back the documents; but this was unnecessary, as the defendant had offered to place them in the hands of the referee. The defendant's offer ought to have been accepted; and, as it had not been accepted by the plaintiff, he must pay the costs of the suit from the 17th Feb. 1868, the date of the letter containing the offer; up to that date each party must pay his own costs.

Attorney-General v. The Wax Chandlers' Company was an information praying for a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to certain property which they had since the year 1564 enjoyed under the will of William Kendal, but that they were trustees of the property for charitable purposes. The testator, by his will dated the 31st Jan. 1558, declared that the Master and Wardens of the Mystery of Wax Chandlers should have his housings and tenements in Old Change, in the City of London, for the intent and purpose, and upon condition that they should make certain annual charitable gifts amounting to 7*l.* 15*s.*, including 5*s.* to the master and wardens for their trouble; and that the rest of the profits should be bestowed upon the reparation of the said housings and tenements, and in default of the due performance of this trust he gave the property to his heir-at-law on the like conditions. At the date of the will the property was let for 9*l.* 4*s.*, its annual value is now 330*l.* The defendants had hitherto applied the residue for their own purposes, and claimed to be entitled to the property absolutely, subject to the annual payment and the keeping in repair of the property. At the conclusion of a lengthened argument, his Lordship said that it was a question of considerable difficulty, and that he would read the papers before giving his judgment.

There was no sitting in this court on Friday and Saturday of last week, owing to the illness of his Lordship, who has been suffering from a severe attack of sciatica.

V. C. MALINS'S COURT.

Several cases, involving important questions, have been decided during the past week. In Re Coles' Trust the question was which of two charities at Lincoln were the objects of a testator's bounty, he being a subscriber to one, but both answering the description given in the will. This question, however, was not decided, inasmuch as there was a prospect of a compromise, but the question was determined whether the legacy was given free of duty. The words were, so far as was material upon this question, "To set apart and appropriate such further part thereof (referring to a sum of 37,000*l.* Consols) as at the time of such appropriation shall produce the further clear income or sum of 100*l.* a-year," and the case of Haynes v. Haynes was cited as an authority in support of the proposition that duty was payable out of the legacy. The Vice-Chancellor, however, was of opinion that this word "clear" being here used distinguished the case from Haynes v. Haynes, and that the testator's intention was that the charity, whichever it was, should take 100*l.* a-year, the duty therefore was payable out of the residuary estate.

The next case was Ross v. Tatham, the testator in the suit being lessee of property with respect to which there was a covenant in the lease to build in a particular manner, and within a limited period; and it was admitted that such covenant had been broken. The lessee dying, a suit was instituted, and a decree made for the administration of his estate, and it was now proposed on petition to take a sum out of court, paid in the suit. This was opposed by the executor for whom it was urged (referring to Lord St. Leonards' Act) that supposing an action was brought against him in respect of the breach of covenant, the court would not be able to protect him, the decree therefore not being a sufficient exoneration, and there being no fund to indemnify him against the consequences of the breach. There was also another fund belonging to the widow not proposed to be taken out of court now, and it was insisted for her that, the other fund being gone, this would inevitably be made liable for the broken covenant. The Vice-Chancellor, however, was of opinion, quite irrespective of Lord St. Leonards' Act, that the lessor having a right to come in under the decree like any other creditor in respect of the breach of covenant, and not having done so, the executor was fully exonerated, but the lessor could follow the assets. The order contained a preface referring to the fact which had been brought before the attention of the court, and the order was made as prayed.

Another case of Stuart v. Cockrell also occasioned some discussion, where one party, who had got assignment for value of a fund in the hands of trustees, omitted to give notice to them of such assignment, and the assignor becoming bankrupt, and the assignees in bankruptcy having obtained a stop order on the fund, the question arose, as between the claimant for value and those entitled by operation of law. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that there was no difference between assignees for value and assignees in bankruptcy on the question of priority, and therefore was of opinion that the omission to give notice to the trustees left the fund in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and although there was priority, the fact of the stop order gave the parties obtaining it priority.

The next case was of a very complicated description, but may be shortly stated. It came on in Re The Marine Investment Corporation, upon two claims, one by the Agra Bank, the other by the National Bank of Liverpool, arising in this way. Messrs. Sabel and Searle, merchants, were the owners of three steamers, the Scud, the Foam, and the Petrel, and the above two banks having discounted acceptances with respect to which these ships were a security, and it being desired to renew the bills, and the banks being dissatisfied with the security, the Marine Investment Corporation (the company) was applied to, and certain acceptances of John Gladstone and Co. were to be thrown in as a further security. Pending the negotiation with the company John Gladstone and Co. failed; but ultimately the company gave their acceptances and obtained a commission of 1375*l.* on the transaction. The corporation being in course of winding-up, was the Agra Bank, claims were brought in for 27,000*l.* odd each (the whole acceptances having been 55,000*l.*), and it appearing that the vessels had been handed back, on a mortgage being given, and subsequently put up for sale, but bought in, the claims were opposed on the ground that a guarantee had been given; that the acceptances of John Gladstone and Co. were worth 15,000*l.*; that the acceptances were given under the pressure of the Agra Bank, who were bankers of the corporation and creditors for 100,000*l.*, and that the whole transaction was ultra vires. All these grounds were absolutely denied. After a long argument, the Vice-Chancellor was clearly of opinion that there had been no guarantee, no pressure, the balance having been reduced to 99,000*l.*, and that the corporation had full power to give bills; and he characterised the defence as very discreditable to the corporation.

Another case of some singularity, was Mackie v. The European Assurance Company, which arose thus: The plaintiff was the owner of woollen mills at Stewarton, near Glasgow, and had insured them in the Commercial Union Assurance Company, but from some cause desired to insure them afresh for 2800*l.* He applied to James Waddell, who had been agent for the Commercial Union, and paid him 4*l.*, Waddell gave him a printed form filled up, whereby the premises were held insured for 2800*l.* for a month, that is to give time for the policy to be made out. The plaintiff did not then look at the document, but it turned out that Waddell, having ceased to be agent for the Commercial Union office, had become agent for the European, and had made out the document in that office. The plaintiff wrote to him noticing this fact, and asking if the old office had refused, saying, "I know nothing of the European, and must be satisfied of their respectability and standing before I can consent to give them over all the sums." Two days after, part of the mill was burned, and Waddell sent a copy of a policy for the part not burned, and asked for particulars of the other. The plaintiff applied frequently ineffectually to the office for the 2800*l.*, stating his loss at 3300*l.*, but received no reply, and eventually, having sent down a clerk to inspect the premises, they refused to pay, on the ground chiefly, that the plaintiff's letter to Waddell was a repudiation. After considerable argument, the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the letter was not a repudiation; but the plaintiff, considering himself safe meantime, wished to take the month to consider whether he would accept the European. The defence ought never to have been set up, and he entirely condemned it and made a decree for the plaintiff.

V. C. STUART'S COURT.

The only question of any importance which has been decided during the past week was one arising out of a summons taken out by a Mr. Gardner, to vary the certificate of the Chief Clerk in the causes of Waterlow v. Sharp, and Gardner v. Sharp. The Chief Clerk had found that there was due from the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company to the London and County Banking Company—as a debt—a sum of 64,769*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*, guaranteed as to 50,000*l.* by Sir Morton Peto, Bart., as to 8000*l.* by City Loan B shares of the railway company, and as to 5000*l.* by debenture mortgages, charged on the Western Extension undertaking of the company. He had also found that, at the date of the deed of arrangement, executed by the company on the 19th Jan. 1867 its creditors stood as follows:—

1. Simple Contract.....	2470,549	5	0
2. Common Fund	36,874	18	2
3. Western Extension	14,159	17	11
4. Land Claims	119,702	13	10
5. Costs.....	3032	7	11
6. Debenture Claims.....	2,269,942	12	2
7. Ditto, Non-Claims.....	2,277,424	11	4

Total 25,192,156 6 4

He had further found that all these creditors ranked equally. The summons asked for an order to vary that, by certifying that the debts numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, and 7, ranked equally, and in priority to those numbered 2 and 3, and that the debt to the London and County Bank should be allowed as a "claim" only to the amount insisted on. The summons also asked for an order to reduce a debt due from the company to John Penn and Son, from 3935*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* to 3065*l.* 19*s.* The Vice-Chancellor, in delivering judgment, said—As to the claim of the London and County Bank, there seems to me to be no sufficient reason for varying the certificate. None of the transactions in respect of which this bank claims to be a creditor are other than transactions in the ordinary course of dealing between bankers and their customers. It is in the ordinary course that there should be a fixed amount beyond which the customer is not permitted to overdraw his account. Because the transactions were recorded in an account called the loan account they were not the less transactions in the regular course of banking business. The title of that account was adopted because the amount to which the railway company was allowed to draw was limited. There is therefore no sufficient reason for saying that there was any borrowing or loan in the proper sense of the word, or within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. The next question was as to the right of the holders of common fund stock to be admitted to prove as creditors. Against their claims it has been argued that they are shareholders, and therefore not creditors; that they are merely owners of preference shares. No doubt it is true they are entitled to shares in the common fund; but the question is whether there is not a Parliamentary contract by the company to pay those moneys which are to constitute the common fund. It seems to me impossible to put any other construction on the clauses of the Additional Powers Act of 1862, especially the clauses 95 to 100 inclusive, than that it binds the company to pay the money which is called the common fund. If so, the persons who are entitled to compel the company to pay these moneys are the shareholders in the common fund; having a right to compel the company, they are properly certified as creditors. There remains the question as to the right of the holders of the Western Extension stock. It is argued that they were shareholders, and therefore cannot be creditors; that their only right is to be paid out of profits; that the company are not purchasers of their original stock; that the word "consideration" is not properly applicable to their claims, and that by the terms of the contract between them and the company, they are entitled to vote at public meetings of the company, and, therefore, so far from being creditors of the company, they are able to concur in contracting debts which the company is bound to pay. When the terms of the Various Powers Act of 1831 are accurately examined, they do not support this argument. By that Act of Parliament, the Western Extension shareholders, as a separate class, were authorised to have that undertaking united with the general undertaking. But they were not so united by becoming shareholders in the general undertaking. They were to receive a perpetual rentcharge as the price of giving up their undertaking as soon as the resolutions for effecting these transactions were passed. The right of the Western Extension stockholders was to receive payment of their perpetual rentcharge on a Parliamentary contract by the company to pay that rentcharge as the consideration and price due to them. It is a mistake to say the word consideration does not exist in the Act. The words of the 15th section are for such consideration by way of perpetual rentcharge. Therefore if the company are by contract bound to pay their rentcharge to the Western Extension stockholders as an association, I know no other character in which they can stand than that of creditors when they claim payment, and of that certain price which is due to them upon their contract. As to the argument that they are shown to be shareholders and not creditors by the right they have to vote at meetings, as that right does not in any degree interfere with their right of payment, it cannot make them less creditors. What seems conclusive is, that by the 38th section of the Additional Powers Act they have a right to recover what is due to them by distraining on the company. Upon the whole the summons to vary the certificate on these three matters must be refused.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

On the 3rd inst., the court met to deliver judgments in a number of cases in which they had taken time to consider. Judgments were delivered by all the members of the court in turn.

In Wren v. Weall and another, the court were called upon to determine the admissibility of certain evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff on the trial of an action against the defendants for slandering the plaintiff's title to the patent of certain spooling machines, by writing to various customers of the plaintiff telling them that the machines sold by the plaintiff were infringements of the defendant's patents, and that if they used the machines without paying the defendants' royalties, they would be proceeded against at law. Mr. Justice Lush refused at the trial to receive evidence offered by the plaintiff to show that the defendant's patent was not new, as that was in effect evidence adduced to try the validity of the patent itself, for which a particular mode of proceeding was provided. The case was argued at the sittings after last term, by Mr. Webster, Q.C. and Mr. Baylis for the plaintiff; and by Mr. Quain, Q.C. and Mr. Aston for the defendant. Mr. Justice Blackburn now delivered the judgment of the court (which consisted of that learned judge and Justices Lush and Hayes), in favour of the ruling of Mr. Justice Lush, and against the admissibility of the evidence, on the ground that the evidence tendered failed to show that the defendant did not bona fide believe in the validity of his patent.

The judgment in Simpson v. Yean was delivered by Mr. Justice Mellor. The question involved was one relating to the offence of bribing voters, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102. Sect. 2 of that Act defines bribery thus, "Every person who shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, give, lend, or agree to give or lend, or shall offer, promise, or promise to procure, or to endeavour to procure, any money or valuable consideration to or for any voter, or to or for any person on behalf of any voter, or to or for any other person in order to induce any voter to vote, or to refrain from voting, or shall corruptly do any such act as aforesaid, on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting at any election." In this case the defendant had called on the voter's wife, and told her he came to solicit his vote; she said he did not intend to vote, though he had been offered a handsome sum on the other side, as he would lose so much time in going to vote. The defendant then said if he voted he would be remunerated for his loss of time, and said the same thing to the voter himself next day; but defendant swore that he never mentioned money or offered any. An action for the penalty imposed by the statute on persons guilty of bribery was brought in the County Court of Stafford, but the judge held that the case was not proved, whereupon his judgment was appealed against. The Court of Queen's Bench were of a different opinion, and held that the facts proved did bring the case within the statute. They considered it of such importance that electors should be left free to vote according to their opinions, that they were bound, in construing the Act of Parliament, to give free effect to the plain meaning of the words used, and apply them to the substantial facts of the case, without raising subtle distinctions or requirements as to the precise words in which an offer may have been made or conveyed. They held the defendant, therefore, to be liable to the penalty imposed by the Act.

In Greeves v. The West India and Pacific Steam Ship Company, the plaintiff had taken a through bill of lading of certain merchandise to be carried by the defendant's ship Colombian, from Liverpool to San Francisco. The entire freight was paid to the defendants at Liverpool in advance, freight and primage to be considered as earned, ship lost or not lost. It was stated on the bill of lading that by an arrangement between the defendants, the Panama Railway Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the goods were to be carried from Liverpool to Colon by the defendants' ship, from Colon to Panama by the Panama Railway Company, and from Panama to San Francisco by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. The defendants signed the bill of lading for the service from Liverpool to Colon. It was then handed to the plaintiff, who took it to the agents of the other two companies, who signed it for the service from Colon to San Francisco. The defendants' ship, by which the merchandise was carried, was lost in a hurricane at the Island of St. Thomas in Oct. 1867, and the merchandise was consequently never delivered to either of the second or third companies, having been lost before the vessel reached Colon, the place where the merchandise was to be delivered over to them. The defendants, after receiving notice of the loss of the vessel, paid over to the other two companies the whole of the freight, with the exception of 3*l*. 5*s*. per ton, which they reserved for themselves as their proportion, and the present action was brought to recover the amount of the freight so paid over. The facts not being in dispute were stated in the form of a special case, which was argued by Mr. Benjamin on behalf of the plaintiff, and by Mr. Mellish, Q.C. (with whom was Mr. Day), on behalf of the defendants. For the plaintiff it was contended that on the face of the bill of lading there were two distinct contracts, one with the defendants and the other with the agents of the two other companies, that the freight was apportionable although the share to be received by each of the carriers was not specified on the face of the bill of lading, the exact share being stated in the advertisements put forward by the defendants; and that the defendants in paying over the freight to the subsequent carriers before the goods had been delivered to them were guilty of a breach of the duty which they had undertaken of forwarding the plaintiff's goods. For the defendant it was contended that the contract was an entire one for the carriage of the goods to San Francisco, and that the freight being payable in one entire sum was not apportionable, that the advertisements issued by the defendants were not admissible in evidence, and that the defendants could not be held responsible for the freight which they had paid over to the other two companies, as they had received it as the agents of those companies. The judgment of the court (which consisted of Justices Lush and Hayes), was now delivered by Mr. Justice Lush, and was in favour of the plaintiff on all points. They considered that there were several contracts, and not one entire one; that the freight was apportionable between the different companies; that the advertisements issued by the defendants might be looked at by the court; and that as soon as notice of the loss of the vessel before reaching Colon was received, the amount of freight paid in the first instance to the defendants for the remainder of the journey from Colon to San Francisco was money had and received by them on the part of the plaintiff, and that their payment over of it to the other two companies did not exonerate them from the plaintiff's demand in the present action.

In Stringer v. The English and Scottish Marine Insurance Company was a case which had been argued a good many terms ago, and then sent back to the arbitrator to state more fully certain facts of the case. It was again argued last term, when the court reserved their judgment, which was now delivered by Mr. Justice Blackburn. Certain goods of the plaintiff had been insured in 1863, and shipped from Liverpool to Matamoros. Towards the close of that year the vessel in which the goods had been shipped was seized by a vessel belonging to the United States navy, and taken into New Orleans. A suit was instituted there to have the vessel adjudged a lawful prize, but unsuccessfully, the court giving judgment in favour of the owners. Notice of abandonment was given by the insured on the 12th Sept. 1864, which was refused. Everything that occurred from that date was communicated to the underwriters, the present defendants. They were informed in Feb. 1865 that an endeavour was made to sell the cargo; but neither party took steps, and the goods were sold and the proceeds paid into the American Court. The assured could not have prevented the sale without giving bail to the full value of the goods. After the sale of the goods another notice of abandonment was given, which was also refused. The plaintiff claimed, in the present action, for a total loss, and the court held that he was entitled to do so. Having, on the capture of the vessel, elected not to treat the case as one of total loss, but to litigate the validity of the capture, he could not, so long as the circumstances continued the same, treat the loss as total; but when circumstances did change, and the loss was rendered really total, the assured was not prevented from so treating it. Now, the sale of the cargo, a sale which could not have been prevented without giving bail for the full value of the goods, and that at a time when the American currency was of a very fluctuating character, did alter the case. To give bail under such circumstances was not a step which a prudent owner, uninsured, would have been likely to take. The sale was, therefore, a total loss, and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

In Playford v. The Electric Telegraph Company, an attempt was made to render the Electric Telegraph Company liable for a mistake made by one of their clerks in the transmission of a message. The plaintiff having a cargo of ice to dispose of, sent a message to a customer at Hull, and was pleased to receive a reply by telegraph offering him 27*s*. per cwt. for the ice. The ship and cargo of ice were forthwith despatched to Hull, when it was discovered that the offer of 27*s*. was never intended to have been made, the offer sent by telegraph being 23*s*. per cwt., which the telegraph clerk by mistake read off as 27*s*. The owners of the ice sought in this action to make the telegraphic company responsible for the damages they had sustained, through this mistake of the clerk. The judgment of the court, which was delivered by Mr. Justice Lush, was in favour of the telegraph company, on the ground that as the owners of the ice were not the persons who had sent the message, they were not the proper parties to sue, and the relation between them and the Hull merchant was not that of principal and agent, but that of buyer and seller. There was another point as to the particular terms on which the message was sent, but the court did not think it necessary to determine it.

Farrer v. Close involved a most important question on the subject of the legality of trades union societies, which we shall report next week, and to-day refer to in a leading article.

ELECTION LAW.

VOTE BY BALLOT.

THE Reform Club is about to abolish election by ballot, because a candidate was blackballed whom some eminent men had proposed. The ballot is one of the articles of political faith with the members of that club; and even now they are actively endeavouring to recommend voting by ballot to the acceptance of Parliament. This difference between preaching and practice is very remarkable. They are seeking to force upon others that from which they are striving to emancipate themselves. When the ballot is again debated, a conclusive answer to its advocates will be the conduct of its foremost friend—the Reform Club; which abandoned the ballot in their own practice, because they found it to be ineffective and mischievous.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS (IRELAND).

GALWAY PETITION.

Saturday, June 12.

(Before KEOGH and LAWSON, JJ.)

M'GOVERN (petitioner); Viscount ST. LAWRENCE and Sir R. BLENNERHASSETT (respondents). (a)

The Parliamentary Elections Act 1868—Review of taxation of costs in election petitions where costs already paid.

This was a motion on behalf of the agent and petitioner by way of appeal from Master Burke, that certain costs of Sir R. Blennerhassett, one of the respondents, which had been taxed to 100*l*. 14*s*. 5*d*., be referred back to the master for taxation, and that the master be instructed that the items 9 to 24, and 115 to 159, and 160, 161, and 162, be disallowed or reduced, and that in case the said costs upon re-taxation be reduced below 100*l*. 14*s*. 5*d*., the said respondent should return to the petitioner the amount by which the said costs may be reduced, the said respondents having been paid the said sum of 100*l*. 14*s*. 5*d*.

The costs in question were the costs of objections to the recognisances of the sureties on the petition, to which Sir R. Blennerhassett was declared entitled by an order of Master Burke, made the 4th Jan. 1869, and also the costs of a bill of particulars, which were ordered to be paid by the unsuccessful party, by an order of Baron Fitzgerald, made the 9th Feb. 1869, and to which the respondent had become entitled. The costs were furnished at 139*l*. 7*s*., and on taxation before Master Burke were reduced to 100*l*. 14*s*. 5*d*. on or about the 30th April 1869.

(a) From the Irish Law Times.

The petitioner in his affidavit stated that he objected to the items in question at the time; that the master ruled against him, and being informed at the time, and believing that he had no right to appeal on the ground that the amounts allowed by the master were too high, he paid the costs immediately after the costs were taxed; that he had been informed that the court had since decided that he had a right to such appeal, and that he believed he had just grounds for a review of the taxation on the ground that some items should be struck out, and that some items had been taxed on too high a scale; and he believed that if the costs were taxed in accordance with the scale of costs in the Court of Chancery they would not amount to more than 60l.

From the affidavit of S. P. Redington, agent for Sir R. Blennerhassett, it appeared that these costs were taxed and certified on the 30th April; that he understood the petitioner preferred that the amount of them should be drawn out of the sum lodged in court; he served notice of motion with that object for the 3rd May, but receiving a letter from the petitioner objecting to the motion, and enclosing a cheque for the 100l. 14s. 5d., he withdrew his notice of motion, and never asked for any costs connected with the motion; that the petitioner was entitled, under an order made Jan. 4th, to certain costs against Sir R. Blennerhassett, which he furnished on the 22nd April, to the amount of 35l. 12s.; that those costs were taxed by Master Burke on the same day as the costs payable to Sir R. Blennerhassett to the sum of 23l. 16s. 2d., and were taxed on the exact scale and the same principles as those payable by the petitioner; that the petitioner did not certify these costs until the 10th May, and that deponent sent a cheque for them on May 17th.

Bull, Q. C., with him Seeds, LL. D., for the petitioner.—The court has decided in the London-derry case, 3 Ir. L. T. 366, May 29, that the master had taxed on too high a scale in these election matters, and that they should be retaxed on the scale of the Irish Court of Chancery. That decision was since the taxation of those costs, and we would clearly have a right to have the taxation reviewed if the money was still due, and it would be very unreasonable that a party should be prejudiced by prompt payment. There was a certain amount of pressure to enforce payment by serving the notice of motion, though it was withdrawn.

Coffey, Q. C., and Waters, Q. C., for the respondent.—There has been no case in which costs have been ordered for re-taxation after the amount has been paid, and there was no pressure exercised by the respondent's agent to get the money paid immediately, as the motion was abandoned; besides, the petitioner has waived his right to an appeal, if he ever had it, by taking the amount of his own costs on the precise principle and scale to which he now objects.

KEOGH, J.—Though there was not actual pressure for the payment of these costs, there was the possibility of pressure by applying to have them paid out of the sum lodged in court. The entire practice in election matters is novel, and under this new system, and considering that this court has, since the costs were paid, directed costs in election matters to be taxed on a lower scale than the master adopted previously, we think we should remit both of these bills for re-taxation.

Ordered.—That the respective bills of costs, payable by petitioner to said respondent, and by said respondent to petitioner, be remitted for re-taxation; and thereupon that said master do tax same upon the scale on which costs are taxed in a suit in the High Court of Chancery in Ireland between solicitor and client. Let the petitioner pay the respondent or his agent 7l., costs of this motion.

THE NOTTINGHAM ELECTION PETITION.—A meeting of the central committee for promoting the petition against the return of Mr. Charles Seely was held at the Maypole Hotel, Nottingham, on Saturday evening. Mr. Digby Seymour addressed the meeting, and pledged himself that the petition should be brought to an issue. They had only been defeated by the money of Mr. Seely and his friends. He (Mr. Digby Seymour), considering the great cause for which they were fighting, had made up his mind to go to the poll again, in the event of Mr. Seely being turned out. Mr. Cockayne, solicitor for the petition, said that in the opinion of eminent counsel the evidence, if established, was quite sufficient to unsettle Mr. Seely. The petition was lodged on Wednesday.

AN ELECTION JUDGE ON ELECTIONS.—Mr. Baron Martin, who has been examined before the Elections Committee said he had tried eleven election petitions in different parts of the country, and he was of opinion that bribery was not so prevalent as was generally supposed. In many instances that came before him the allegations were perfectly absurd. At Norwich and Bradford the corruption was extensive. At the latter place out of 150 public houses, 108 were open free. At Salford a great deal of money was expended in drink. The election at Wigan was especially pure. The Liberal candidates, against whom alone a petition was presented, determined that no public-houses should be used at all. It was, however, on the polling day that the necessary rooms could not be obtained anywhere else than at public houses, and they were therefore hired, but the landlords were paid 10l. each for the hire of the rooms, not to supply any drink. The petition at Barnsley disclosed the fact that some 800 persons were bribed ostensibly for the purpose of the municipal, but in fact for the purpose of the parliamentary election. The expenses of the Westminster election were enormous. Mr. Smith, the successful candidate, spent 9000l., and it was his (the learned judge's) opinion that Mr. Smith was robbed throughout the election. There was a very general desire on the part of the candidates who were examined before him to get rid of bribery and corruption.

LEGISLATION AND JURIS-PRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FIRE INSURANCE DUTY.

Mr. H. BEAUMONT asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether in the case of septennial fire insurance policies which had still a few years to run, and on which fire insurance duty commuted at six years was paid in advance, he would be prepared, now that the fire insurance duty was abolished, to return to the insured, through the insurance offices, the amount of duty paid on such policies in respect of the period occurring after the abolition of the duty.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: In reply to the question of the hon. member I have to remark that those who insured seven years in advance obtained the remission of one year's duty, and that the arrangement so entered into was made subject to whatever might be the pleasure of Parliament. If the duty had been raised I do not think that those insurers would have applied for permission to pay a larger sum, and they must, therefore, take their chance of what has happened. Under these circumstances, it is not the intention of Government to make any return whatever. (A laugh.)

COUNTY FINANCE.

In reply to an hon. member, Mr. KNATCHBULL-HUGHES said that the Bill relating to the administration of county finance stood for a second reading on July 19, and if he should then be obliged to withdraw the measure it would be with the full intention of considering the valuable suggestions he had received respecting it during the recess.

STOCK AND SHARE MARKETS.

Thursday.

The Money Market has been dull through the week. The season is fast drawing to a close, and nothing of the anticipated revival has presented itself. Will it never come? Can it be that England has passed the summit of her prosperity, and is descending the hill? It looks very like.

The following are the fluctuations:

Mr. Jones's case.—Re The Land Shipping Company (Limited)—which was before Vice-Chancellor Malins on Wednesday, is another warning to shareholders not to be negligent of winding-up orders. The case in support of the application for the removal of Mr. Jones's name from the list of contributories was that it had appeared in the share register in some manner unexplained, and had thus gone into the list. There had neither been application, allotment, payment, receipts of dividends, nor any part taken in the affairs of the company. It appeared, however, that Mr. Jones had had notice to show cause why his name should not appear on the list, and that his solicitor did appear and urge that he had been induced to take the shares by fraudulent representations. He could not therefore be allowed to make out a new case, and make up for his former negligence when notice was given him to show cause.

In the case of Laurie P. O. v. Schofield, the Court of Common Pleas has interpreted the following as a continuing guarantee:—"In consideration of the Union Bank of London agreeing to advance to the firm of Messrs. Russell and Co., during the next eighteen months, not exceeding in the whole a sum of 1000l., we hereby jointly and severally agree, &c., to pay the same in case of default." It was contended for the defence that the 1000l. having been once advanced and repaid during the eighteen months, the guarantee was exhausted—that it did not cover a subsequent re-advance. The court, however, overruled this, holding that the guarantee applied to any unrepaid advance not exceeding 1000l.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

ARBITRATION—AWARD.—By the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, s. 15, the Superior Court in which any submission has been made a rule is authorised to enlarge the time for making an award, and this power applies to references under the Lands Clauses Act. But the exercise of that power is within the discretion of the court, and where, in a matter between a railway company and a landowner, an award had been referred back to the umpire who had made it, and nothing was done under that reference for a time so long as to render it necessary that the whole of the evidence should be again produced: Their Lordships held, agreeing with Vice-Chancellor James, that the right given by the Lands Clauses Act after such a delay of having the question decided by a jury ought not to be interfered with: (The Dale Valley Railway Company v. Rhys, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717. Ch.)

FOREIGN LOAN.—When a Government negotiates a loan in a foreign country, the contract must be construed not according to the law of the country in which the loan is negotiated, but according to that of the State negotiating the loan: (Smith v. Woguelin, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 724. Ch.)

PRACTICE—SERVICE OF NOTICE OF DECREE—PARTIES OUT OF THE JURISDICTION.—Certain persons interested in property ordered to be sold under the provisions of the Partition Act 1868 had not been made parties to the suit, and were out of the jurisdiction, their addresses being unknown: Held, that the provisions of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 42, rule 8, and Consolidated Order xxxv., rule 18, as to the service of notice of decree, applied to such a case: (Peters v. Bacon, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729. M.R.)

SOLICITOR—RETAINER—FALSE AFFIDAVIT.—A solicitor, who had filed a bill for specific performance in the name of the assignee of a bankrupt without having obtained his consent or retainer, and who had also allowed his client to make an affidavit containing a statement which he knew to be false, was sentenced to be suspended for the space of ten years from practising as an attorney or solicitor. If there be not a written retainer, there must unquestionably be an authority to institute a suit communicated expressly by the client to the solicitor without any intermediate agency: (Re James Gray, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 730. M.R.)

PROTESTANT DISSENTERS—MINISTER—TENURE OF HIS OFFICE.—In the absence of any special rules affecting the dismissal of a minister or pastor of an endowed Dissenting chapel, the majority of the trustees and of the congregation have a right to dismiss him: (Cooper v. Gordon, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 732. V.C.S.)

WILLS.—Where a testator left two wills, one disposing of his property in Australia, and the other of his property in England on the same trusts, the court held that it was unnecessary to incorporate the Australian will with the English will, but directed an affidavit of its contents to be attached to the probate: (In the goods of Cole, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 758. Prob.)

A domiciled Spaniard died without having made a will. His brother made one for him according to his direction. The court, on affidavit that this was a valid will according to the law of Spain, granted probate: (In the goods of Gutierrez, Ibid.)

CHARITY—DISMISSAL OF INMATE—MISCONDUCT—MALICE.—H. was bought into an asylum for incurable patients by the purchase of votes, that is to say, the friends of H. contributed funds to the charity and obtained four votes in respect of each guinea, which votes they gave to H., who was elected an inmate of the asylum. H. was dismissed from the asylum for alleged misconduct. She brought an action for wrongful dismissal: Held, that the action would lie. Held, also, that the question of misconduct of H. was a matter for the board of management of the asylum, and not for the jury, who had simply to consider whether the board had acted maliciously. A non-observance of rules may amount to misconduct: (Hoare v. Anderson, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 759. Cockburn, C.J.)

UNCLAIMED STOCK AND DIVIDENDS IN THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

[Transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, and which will be paid to the persons respectively whose names are prefixed to each, in three months, unless other claimants sooner appear.]

FORBES (Caroline L.), Castle New, Aberdeenshire. Dividend on 2121s. 10s. 3d. Reduced Three per Cents. Claimant, said Caroline L. Forbes.

A question has been raised whether so large a sum as 5000l. is necessary for the Overend, Gurney, and Co. prosecution. Messrs. Lewis and Lewis, in reply to some remarks on the subject in the Pall Mall Gazette, reiterate that "to cover the original fees and daily refresher of eminent counsel, the preparation of briefs, the briefing the voluminous documentary evidence, and not least, the attendance of about forty witnesses during a trial which will probably last ten days, it is a moderate estimate, and one which has been so considered in the Profession."

CASH DEPOSITS.—The necessity of caution in dealing with advertisers who require cash deposits is strikingly shown by some extraordinary disclosures which have been made in a case before the Bristol Bankruptcy Court. The bankrupt, John Walker, carried on business as a dyer, and towards the close of 1867, he inserted advertisements in the Christian World and other newspapers, for "a manager for a branch establishment in a fashionable watering place." The appointment was to be permanent, and a liberal salary and interest on the business transacted was promised. For all these "advantages" one condition was imposed—the applicant was required to deposit 75s. with "the firm." It was subsequently explained that the reason "the firm" insisted on the cash deposit was that they had been losers by the defalcation of a manager at Brighton; and in another instance, where they had taken the security of a guarantee society for a manager in the north, who had also become a defaulter, they had experienced considerable difficulty in bringing the sureties to book. For so "eligible" a situation, of course, there were numerous applicants; and this fact seems to have led "the firm" to increase the deposit until it reached 150l. In September last two applicants, named Cross and Webber, paid 125s. each as deposit, and were thereupon appointed "managers" at Exeter. When they arrived in that city, they discovered that the firm had no business premises there. In March last, Mr. Thomas Stott, of Manchester, was tempted to reply to one of the bankrupt's advertisements, and, being "accepted," he paid a deposit of 150l., and was appointed manager at Penzance. Mr. Stott proceeded to that town with his wife and family, and when he arrived there he found himself in the same predicament as Messrs. Cross and Webber. The bankrupt seems to have retained several hundred pounds as "security," none of which he has returned.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

LAW COURTS COMMITTEE.

At the first sitting of this committee there were present Lord Stanley (chairman), Lord Grosvenor, Lord John Manners, Lord Enfield, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Messrs. Layard, Beresford Hope, Ward Hunt, Corrance, Russell Gurney, W. Cowper, Tite, Mowbray, Gregory, and Morgan.

Mr. W. E. Field, examined by the chairman, said he was the secretary to the Law Courts of Justice Commission, and had held that office since the passing of the Act in 1865. The commission began its duties in that year, and its first meeting was held on 5th July 1865. Since that time the commission had met regularly, and had taken the evidence of witnesses as to the sufficiency of the site which had been selected in Carey-street. The limits of the site were fixed before the commission began its duties, and it had nothing to do with the naming of a place likely to be more suitable than that named in the Act of Parliament. What the commission had to do was to report to the Government its opinion as to the best way of erecting the courts of law. The commission did not come to the conclusion that the site was not sufficient to hold all the courts of law, nor did it report to that effect to the First Commissioner of Works or the Treasury.

By Mr. Layard.—When the site was fixed before the commission was appointed all it had to do was to lay out the ground to the best advantage. The commission while limited to space was also restricted to a certain sum which was to be paid for the site and for the building of the courts, and the amount fixed was 750,000*l.* for the site, and 750,000*l.* for the buildings, which was fully detailed in the Act of Parliament. The commission did grant a certificate that the cost of the site and buildings would be equal to the sum already stated in terms of the requirements of the Act; but he did not recollect on whose authority it was granted, but the certificate would be found in the Treasury office. He acted on all occasions entirely under the directions of the commission; and, though secretary, he could not say beyond what was printed who gave orders for the certificate called for to be granted. He was aware that Mr. Abrahams prepared plans for the commission, and was paid 500*l.* for his services. The amount of accommodation shown on the plans in question was, in the opinion of the commission, adequate for the requirements of the courts, and that led to the granting of the certificate. Lord Cranworth was chairman of the committee that granted the certificate. It was at the first meeting of the commission that the certificate was granted (5th July 1865). The sums named as the price of the site and the buildings did not include the different accesses which would be required. In fact, the commissioners contemplated further sums being required for that purpose. In making its calculations the commission calculated the expense of the approaches to the courts from the north, east, and west. There was a proposal came from Mr. Childers, Commissioner of Public Works, on 8th Dec. 1865, to the effect that certain other lands should be bought which lay on the north-east corner of the site, near to Chancery-lane, as it would give an improved access from Chancery-lane. The commission instructed another architect to prepare plans; but when he found he would be debarred from competing with other architects for the principal plans, he resigned, and Mr. Burnett was appointed, and on his suggestion it was thought advisable these additional buildings should be purchased. Mr. Burnett acted under the requisition committee, and his instructions were given on the 17th April 1866. Witness considered the carriage-way from the north sufficient for all the cabs that brought lawyers to the courts, and the passage from the courts could not be worse than what it was at present; and in his opinion vehicles that stopped the thoroughfare in the morning were not the lawyers' cabs, but those of the city merchants. The case would not be improved were the site to be removed to Howard-street; indeed, he doubted if matters would not be made worse. He admitted Sir Roundell Palmer proposed a motion at a meeting of the commission approving of the Carey-street in preference to the Howard-street site; but in his opinion the commission had no power in the matter, and were bound to abide by the Act of Parliament. The approaches to the Howard-street site were even more objectionable than those of Carey-street.

By Mr. Tite: Was aware that the plan prepared by Mr. Burnett, showing the localities of the legal offices in London, was incorrect in minor details; but on the general principle it was correct. It was in the colouring where the error had occurred.

By Lord John Manners: It was the opinion of the commissioners when the certificate was granted that the ground in Carey-street for the law offices was sufficient; but in consequence of additional offices being required, the commissioners thought the adjoining land should be bought, and Mr. Childers was made aware of this. Mr. Childers continued to hold office under the Government of Mr. Disraeli, and only resigned when the new Government came into office. When the commission had to reduce the plans, the Wills and Bankruptcy Courts were struck out, and it was agreed that Doctors' Commons should remain where it is, as it was not of much importance whether or not it was with the other courts. In the opinion of witness it was quite possible to erect all the courts on the Carey-street site.

By Mr. Cowper: The sub-committee used every endeavour to obtain information regarding the accommodation of law courts all over Europe, and that was partly obtained through the Foreign Office. The judges on the assizes made inquiries at the county courts, and reported the result to the commission. Upwards of twelve months was spent in searching out the desired information. The sub-committee was composed of members of Parliament, the Law Profession and the City Corporation. Witness admitted that, in the event of the Carey-street site being adopted, Great Turnstile and Gate-street would require to be widened to permit of cabs passing to and from the courts of law. He considered that the access to Carey-street and Howard-street from the north was identical, but he would give the preference to Carey-street.

By Lord Grosvenor.—Would there not be more light and air were the Howard-street site adopted? Witness.—That may be so; but the Howard-street site is so objectionable otherwise, that it overweighs all other advantages.

By the Chancellor of the Exchequer.—The number of offices, according to Mr. Street's plan, was substantially the same in Howard-street as was contemplated in 1865. The commission has no right to condemn the Howard-street site and approve of Carey-street, when they were merely instructed to carry out the provisions of the Act of Parliament. It was of the utmost importance that the Government should buy up the old property in the neighbourhood of the new courts in Carey-street, as the most of it had imperfect titles, and, if it were once in the hands of the Government it would be readily taken up by merchants for offices. The distance between the new courts and the "alums" would be about 30ft.

The Chairman.—While you consider the purchase of this land not necessary for the new courts, you think it desirable? Witness.—I do.

In further examination the witness said that were the Courts of Equity and Common Pleas brought together, great advantage would accrue to the suitor, as more business would be got through, and at much less expense. At the present time the Vice-Chancellor frequently complained of the absence of the clerks when the causes came on for hearing, and that witness attributed to the courts being separated. He objected to the Howard-street site on the same principle as a man would object to his kitchen being several streets apart from his dining room; for when solicitors, junior counsel, and clerks were separated, as would be the case with the Howard-street site, the suitor would be sure to suffer. To insure a speedy despatch of business in the equity courts, he was strongly of opinion that, by bringing all the courts under one roof, the greatest advantages would flow from it. He admitted that the estimated value of the additional buildings was set down at 668,000*l.*, and that he had heard a report was being circulated to the effect that were the Government to sell the Carey-street site they would lose by the transaction 500,000*l.*

After some further examination of the witness on minor details, the committee adjourned.

The names of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices at Bridgwater, Beverley, Cashel, Sligo, and Norwich have been gazetted. The commissioners for Bridgwater are, Mr. E. P. Price, Q.C., Mr. Chisholm Anstey, and Mr. C. E. Coleridge; for Beverley, Mr. Serjeant O'Brien, Mr. T. I. Barstow, and Mr. Homersham Cox; for Cashel, Mr. Waters, Q.C., Mr. C. Molloy, and Mr. W. Griffin; for Sligo, Dr. Heron, Q.C., Mr. J. A. Byrne, and Mr. W. R. Bruce; and for Norwich, Mr. G. M. Dowdeswell, Q.C., Mr. H. Mansfield, and Mr. R. J. Biron.

THE EDMUNDS SCANDAL.—The court of arbitration, consisting of Mr. Manisty, Q.C. (umpire), the Hon. G. Denman, Q.C., and Mr. C. Pollock, Q.C. (arbitrators), appointed to inquire into all matters in dispute between Mr. Leonard Edmunds and the Crown, held a preliminary meeting on Wednesday morning in the Court of Common Pleas, Westminster-hall. Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., Mr. Napier Higgins, and Mr. Haviland

Burke appeared for Mr. Edmunds; and the Attorney-General, Mr. Field, Q.C. and Mr. Archibald for the Crown. At the sitting of the court Mr. Denman, Q.C. stated that he and Mr. Pollock, Q.C., acting under an order of the Court of Common Pleas, had chosen Mr. Manisty, Q.C. as umpire. "This court (he added) will sit and hear the whole case together. But the arbitrators wish it to be thoroughly understood by all parties, in order to prevent any sort of misconception, that neither of us would have accepted this reference on any other terms than that we should sit here as joint arbitrators between Mr. Edmunds and the Crown, that we should not be considered the one as arbitrator for Mr. Edmunds, and the other as arbitrator for the Crown, but that we sit here strictly as joint arbitrators to see justice done in the case." After some discussion, the arbitration was adjourned till Thursday, the 21st Oct. next, at ten o'clock, when the court will sit de die in diem.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

METROPOLIS LOCAL MANAGEMENT—EXPENSE OF MAKING NEW SEWER.—The 52nd section of the Metropolis Local Management Amendment Act 1862 enacts that where any sewer shall be constructed by any vestry, in and for the drainage of any new street, or of any house or houses erected since 1st Jan. 1866, the expense of constructing such sewer should be borne and defrayed by the owners of such street or houses, and of the land bounding or abutting on such street. The 53rd section enacts that where any sewer shall be constructed by any vestry in a street in which previously to such construction there had been no sewer, or only an open sewer, but where sewers rates have been levied previously to such construction, the expense of constructing such sewer should be borne and defrayed only in part by the owners of the houses situate in, and of the land bounding and abutting on, such street respectively, and the residue by the vestry, out of the sewers rates levied in their parish: Held, that the 53rd section applied to all streets, both old and new; and, therefore, when a sewer was constructed in a new street, but sewers rates had been levied in the street previously to the construction of the sewer, the owners of property in the street could not be charged with the whole expense of constructing the sewer: (Vestry of St. Giles v. Waller, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 756. Ex.)

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

(Before Mr. Justice KEATING and Special Juries.)
VARLEY v. ELLIS.

Robinson, Serjt. and E. P. Wood were for the plaintiff; Giffard, Q.C. and F. H. Lewis for the defendant.

The plaintiff, who was said to be a dressmaker, sued the Daily Telegraph, or rather the proprietors of that journal, for penalties incurred under the stat. 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 1. This section runs as follows:—

"Whereas the advertising a reward with no questions asked for the return of things which have been lost or stolen is one great cause of thefts and robberies, be it enacted, &c., that any person publicly advertising a reward with no questions asked for the return of things which have been stolen or lost, or making use of any words in such public advertisement purporting that such reward shall be given or paid without seizing or making inquiry after the person producing such thing so stolen or lost, or promising or offering in any such public advertisement to return to any pawnbroker or other person who may have bought or advanced money by way of loan upon such thing so stolen or lost the money so paid or advanced, or any other sum of money or reward for the return of such thing, and any person printing or publishing such advertisement, shall respectively forfeit the sum of 50*l.* for every such offence to any person who will sue for the same."

The plaintiff sought to recover penalties on thirteen advertisements, but on proof being given several were abandoned.

Giffard, for the defence, raised several legal questions, the principal of which was that the statute declared on had been repealed by the 1st section of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

After a long and learned discussion, the verdict was entered for the defendant, with leave to the plaintiff to move, his LORDSHIP observing that the verdict was only a formal one, but that the case must not go beyond the Court of Common Pleas.

SURREY SESSIONS.

Saturday, July 3.

WHEELER v. THE CONVICTION OF E. H. WOOLRYCH ESQ.

Cruelty to Animals.

The appellant in this case is chief cook at the Trafalgar Tavern, Greenwich, and he appealed against the conviction of Mr. Woolrych, who sentenced him to three months' hard labour for cruelty to a dog which he destroyed in the Camberwell New-road.

Clarke, in opening the case, said that the appellant was proceeding on horseback when a half-bred spaniel barked at the horse's heels. He got off his horse and seizing up the dog dashed it against the wall, and eventually killed it by trampling on it. He called

Mr. William Jenkins, who said that between ten and eleven at night he was leaving the railway station when he saw the appellant standing by a horse holding up a dog by the neck. A gentleman named Tolhurst was near, and Wheeler said to him, "Is this your dog?" He replied that it was not. Appellant then said that it had run at his horse and frightened it so as to nearly throw him off, and asked if he might do as he liked with the dog. Mr. Tolhurst said yes, when he dashed it several times against the wall, and afterwards trampled it to death.

James then addressed the Court for the appellant a young man holding a very responsible situation at an hotel at Greenwich, and incapable of acting cruelly to any animal. He (the learned counsel) contended that there was no evidence to convict under the Act of Parliament quoted by Mr. Clarke, as there was nothing to show that the appellant wilfully tortured or acted cruelly towards the dog. The latter was running loose in the road and nearly caused the appellant to be thrown from the horse as he was riding, and not seeing an owner, he killed it as quickly as possible. The learned gentleman said that did not make an offence, as it was well known that the police killed hundreds of stray and vicious dogs with their truncheons and other means. He therefore contended that there was no evidence to show that the appellant had acted cruelly towards the dog, consequently he called on the court to allow the appeal.

Clarke having replied,

The MAGISTRATES consulted for a few minutes, when Sir Thomas Tilson said that it was not a case coming within the meaning of the Act, therefore the appeal would be allowed.

HUNTINGDON COUNTY SESSIONS.

Monday, June 28.

(Before the Hon. OCTAVIUS DUNCOMBE, M.P., Chairman.)

REG. v. BEWLEY AND ANOTHER.

Upon an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 13, it is no answer that the demolition complained of was caused for the purpose of convenience in using the premises, and cutting down a wall from 9in. to 4in., is evidence of malice to go to the jury. And it is sufficient to support a conviction for aiding and abetting that the defendant assisted to remove the bricks so taken from the wall.

The defendants, Thomas Hunter Bewley, and Thomas Gibson Bewley, were indicted under the 24 & 25 Vic. c. 97, s. 13, as follows:—

The jurors for our lady the Queen upon their oath present, that Thomas Hunter Bewley on the 31st May 1869, being then possessed of a certain dwelling-house at Eynesbury, in the county of Huntingdon, as tenant from year to year to Octavius Robert Wilkinson, did then and there unlawfully and maliciously pull down and demolish part of the said dwelling-house and building against the form of the statute, &c.

Second count.—For that Thomas Gibson Bewley at the time of committing the said offences referred to in the first count, did aid and abet counsel, and procure the said Thomas Hunter Bewley to commit the aforesaid offence against the form of the statute, &c.

Abdy for the prosecution.

M. B. Byles for the defence.

From the evidence it appeared the prosecutor Mr. Octavius Robert Wilkinson, became possessed of certain unfurnished premises at Eynesbury, which he completed and let to Thomas Hunter Bewley, under an agreement dated 19th Oct. 1865, at an annual rent of 10*l.*, the tenant to pay all rates and taxes, to keep and leave the glass in good repair, to use the premises in a careful manner, and not to do any damage to the same. The buildings had been originally designed for a machinist's shop and outbuildings, but were divided by Mr. Wilkinson into a cottage and outbuildings. The defendant Thomas Hunter Bewley had been in possession of the premises ever since, but the rent was not paid at all punctually. Upon an examination being made of the premises, there was a hole in the roof, one rafter cut away, about 300 bricks removed, a 9in. wall cut down to 4in.; the total damage being estimated at about 3*l.* or 4*l.* Evidence was given as to the defendants having disposed of a quantity of bricks, and that Thomas Gibson Bewley assisted the tenant of the premises to remove them.

In cross-examination Mr. Wilkinson admitted that he had offered to settle the matter if the hole in the roof were repaired.

A builder named Wildman was called, and proved that the hole in the roof had been done some little time; there had never been a chimney there before the house was altered, the rafter had been cut away, and two slate laths cut away. At the north end of the premises about fifty bricks had been cut away, and about 150 bricks had been removed to make way for a window, and the window had been glazed, but it was not usual for tenants to make such alterations without asking the consent of the landlord. A wall had been reduced from nine inches to four and a half inches.

M. B. Byles, for the defendants contended that there was no case to go to the jury, the injuries such as detailed by the witnesses were not such as contemplated by the statute, these alterations had been made by the defendants for the more convenient use of the premises, and had not been done maliciously, it was merely a sidewind to get the damage out of the defendant.

The CHAIRMAN held that it was a case for the jury, and refused to withdraw it; and in charging the jury said the question was whether the cutting away of a wall from nine inches to four and a half inches was not a malicious act; and with respect to the defendant, Thomas Gibson Bewley, his assisting the other defendant in removing the bricks was sufficient to satisfy the offence of aiding and abetting. No doubt it was a peculiar prosecution, but they were there to administer the law as they found it.

Verdict—Guilty against both defendants.

PORTSMOUTH POLICE-COURT.

(Before E. EMANUEL and T. HODGKINSON, Esqrs.)

Public-house Closing Act—Keeping open.

Albert Mew Judd, of the Prince of Wales' tavern, Hambrook-street, Southsea, in the borough of Portsmouth, was summoned by Mr. Richard Barber, superintendent of the Portsmouth police, for having, on the 1st July, inst., kept open his house for the consumption of exciseable liquors, to wit, two glasses of gin and water, at half-past one in the morning, otherwise than to lodgers in the house, without having obtained an occasional licence, and contrary to the Public-house Closing Act 1864, which, it was admitted, had been adopted within the borough of Portsmouth.

Cousins, solicitor, of Portsea, appeared for the defendant.

A police-constable stated that he was on duty in Hambrook-street, Southsea, about half-past one in the morning of the 1st July, inst., and he heard women and men laughing and talking. He stopped a moment, and heard the door leading into a passage by the side of the house open, and a woman came out. He and another police-constable then went in. The landlord was behind the bar, and there were two men and two women at the bar. There was a glass half full of gin and water standing in front of the bar, and one of the women was drinking another glass of gin and water, which was a quarter full. In answer to questions, the defendant said the women were friends of his, and one of the men was a lodger. Witness knew that the man was not a lodger, and he went away from the house about five minutes after the witness had left it.

Cross-examined by Cousins: There was no riot in the house. The house was closed, both the front door and side door being shut. Witness did not rap, but went in when the side door was opened to let one of the women out. The house was not opened or kept open to let anybody in, but only opened to let them out. The woman who was drinking appeared to be finishing up her liquor. Saw nothing ordered or paid for.

The above evidence was corroborated by another police-constable.

Cousins, for the defence, submitted that the charge of keeping open could not be sustained. If any offence was disclosed by the evidence for the prosecution it was that of selling, and not keeping open. He quoted Cates v. South, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 365. He also referred to the recent case of Davis v. Scrase, 4 L. Rep. C. P. 172, in order to show that the informant was bound to prove affirmatively all the allegations contained in the information. To carry the case still further, two witnesses were called for the defence who proved that the house was closed at one o'clock, and that no one was admitted after that hour, and that no excisable liquors were sold after one o'clock. Also that the time the police visited the house was between twenty and twenty-five minutes past one.

The Justices held that if the defence was allowed the Act would become a dead letter, and they therefore convicted the defendant, and fined him 1*l.*, including costs.

Cousins asked that a case might be stated for the decision of the Court of Common Pleas, which was granted.

Mr. Robert Phippen, High Sheriff of Bristol, died suddenly on Monday evening. He was dining with the Mayor, at his private residence, Crete-hill, Stoke Bishop, when he was seized with fainting fits. Restoratives were administered, and he rallied a little, but soon afterwards he became drowsy and died. Mr. Phippen, who was in his sixty-ninth year, was a prominent member of the Conservative party in Bristol, had more than once been mayor of the city, and at the time of his death held the offices of high sheriff, senior alderman, city magistrate and deputy mayor.

THE TRADES UNION BILL.—On Saturday evening a meeting of the various trades of Birmingham, convened by the Operative House Painters' Association, was held at the Athenæum, for the purpose of supporting the Trades Union Bill now before Parliament. The Rev. Arthur O'Neill presided, and expressed his hearty concurrence with the measure that had been introduced, as intended to remove most unjust and oppressive restrictions that at present weighed down the working classes. Resolutions warmly approving of the Bill, expressing confidence in its promoters, protesting against any delay in its passing, and urging the members of the House of Commons to vote in favour of its second reading, were passed unanimously.

INVESTMENT BY TRUSTEES.—A settlement empowered trustees in the purchase of lands and tenements of a clear and indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee simple in possession. This was held to empower an investment in freehold ground rents: (Re Peyton's Settlement, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 728. M. R.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION.—A testator gave 800*l.* upon trust for his son G. for life, and after his decease unto and equally between and amongst the wife of G. (in case she should happen to survive him) and all and every the child and children of G. in equal proportions. The shares of the children to be paid as they should attain twenty-one or be married. G. survived the testator, his wife died between the date of the testator's will and death. After the testator's death G. married again, and his second wife survived him. G. had by his first wife a daughter, who survived the testator, but there were no children of the second marriage: Held, that the fund was at the death of G. divisible equally between his widow and his child: (Re Lyne's Trust, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735. V. C. M.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION OF A GRAVEL PIT.—A gravel pit vested by allotment made in pursuance of an Act of Parliament in the surveyor or surveyors of a particular hamlet for the repair of its roads and ways was left unused by the surveyors from 1837 to 1863, the surveyors in or about the year 1837 having purchased gravel for the repairs of the parish highways from another pit two miles distant. In the same year a tenant of the plaintiff's father, who occupied the greater part of the land in which the pit was situate, commenced filling up part of the pit by several hundred loads of earth and rubbish, and from that till 1863 cultivated the surface of that part of the pit. In 1839 another tenant ploughed up the remaining portion of the pit which abutted upon land in his occupation, and also the road which led to it, both of which continued to be cultivated by the plaintiff's tenants as ordinary arable land from that time till 1863. No rent was paid to the surveyors nor any acknowledgment made to them by the plaintiff or his tenants during any portion of the time mentioned. In the year 1844 the tenant of the plaintiff who was in occupation of the surface of the greater part of the pit was elected surveyor of the highways within the hamlet jointly with another person, and held that office for a year. Held, on a case giving the court power to draw inferences of facts, that by filling up the greater portion of the pit with earth and rubbish, and by taking the whole surface into cultivation as well as the road in 1837 and 1839, possession of the pit and road had been taken by the plaintiff's tenants, and that the time of limitation against the surveyors began to run from those years respectively; that the plaintiff had by his tenants been in possession of the gravel pit and road from 1837 to 1863; and that the fact of the tenant who occupied part of the pit being elected surveyor for one year after possession had been taken did not interrupt the running of the period of limitation, the character of his possession as tenant of the plaintiff, not being altered during his year of office: (Smith v. Stocks, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 740. Q. B.)

POWERS OF ATTORNEY (b).

108. Power of attorney from partners to draw bills (concoise form).

Know all men by these presents that we, A. B. and C. D., of &c., have made, constituted, and appointed, and by these presents do make, constitute, and appoint E. F., of &c., our true and lawful attorney for us, and in our names, place, and stead, to sign, indorse, draw, accept, make, execute, and deliver all such notes, cheques, bills of exchange, and other contracts or instruments in writing, with or without seal; and such verbal contracts as he may deem proper; giving and granting unto our said attorney full power and authority to do and perform all and every act and thing whatsoever requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises, as fully to all intents and purposes as we ourselves, or either of us, might or could do if personally present; with full power of substitution and revocation hereby ratifying and confirming all that our said attorney or his substitute shall lawfully do or cause to be done by virtue hereof. In witness, &c.

109. Power of attorney to two persons to obtain letters of administration to two estates.

To all to whom these presents shall come I, A. B., of, &c., send greeting. Whereas C. D., the deceased wife of D. D., late of, &c., died intestate on or about, &c., leaving the said D. D. her surviving. And whereas the said D. D. hath since also died, to wit, in or about the month of 18, a widower, and intestate. Now know all men by these presents that I, the undersigned A. B., the natural and lawful and only surviving child of the said D. D., at present residing in do hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint, and in my place and stead put and depute W. X. and Y. Z., both of, &c., to be my true and lawful attorneys and acting jointly and severally for me and in my name to appear before the Right Honourable James Plaisted, Baron Penzance, the judge of Her Majesty's Court of Probate in England, or any principal or district registrar of the said court or other competent judge in this behalf, and to pray for and procure letters of administration of all and singular the personal estate and effects of the said D. D., my late father, deceased, to be granted or committed to them, or either of them, for my use and benefit. And upon obtaining such letters of administration, or at any time afterwards, for me and in my name, to pray for and procure letters of administration of all and singular the personal estate and effects of the said C. D., deceased, also for my use and benefit, and generally to do, perform, and execute all matters and things in and about the premises as fully and effectually to all intents whatsoever, as I, the said A. B., might or could do if personally present. And also to substitute and appoint any person or persons to act under or in the place of the said W. X. and Y. Z., in all or any of the matters aforesaid, and every such substitution at pleasure to revoke; I, the said A. B., hereby agreeing to ratify and confirm whatsoever the said W. X. and Y. Z., or either of them, their, or either of their, substitute or substitutes shall lawfully do or cause to be done in or about the premises by virtue hereof. In witness, &c.

(a) By THOMAS WILKINSON, Esq., Liverpool.

(b) A power of attorney, if given for a valuable consideration, appears not to be revocable: (See Sug. V. & P. 438; Wals v. Whitcomb, 2 Esp. Ca. 585; Sher v. Sanders, 5 C. B. 916); but whether, for a valuable consideration or not, it is revocable by the grantor's death (Watson v. King, 4 Camp. 272, see, however, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 36.)

110. Power of attorney to dissolve partnership.

Know all men by these presents that I, A. B., of &c., being about to leave England, and to be absent therefrom for some time, for divers good causes and considerations me hereunto moving, do, by these presents, make, constitute, and appoint Y. Z., of &c., my true and lawful attorney for me, and in my name, and on my behalf to consent and agree to a dissolution of the partnership at present subsisting between myself and C. D., of &c., as at, under the firm of "A. B. and Co.," and for me, and in my name and on my behalf, to become party to, and to sign, seal, deliver, and execute all such agreement or agreements, deed or deeds of dissolution, instrument or instruments in writing, as shall be considered necessary or deemed expedient by him, the said Y. Z., for dissolving the said partnership, and for me, and in my name, and on my behalf, and at such time or times as my said attorney shall think proper, to sign all and every notice or notices which may be necessary for publishing and making generally known the dissolution of the said partnership, and to cause or concur with my said other partner in causing such notice or notices to be inserted in the London Gazette, and such other gazettes or newspapers as the said attorney shall think fit, whether published in this country or abroad. And if the said attorney shall think fit for me and in my name to sign and give all fit and proper notices of such dissolution as aforesaid to all and every person and persons with whom the said firm has done, or has been in the habit of doing, any business, or to any other person or persons whomsoever. And I do hereby agree to ratify and confirm all and whatsoever my said attorney shall lawfully do or cause to be done in the premises by virtue of these presents. In witness, &c.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—CONTRIBUTORY.—B. applied for fifty shares, which were allotted, registered in his name, and notice of allotment posted to his registered place of abode. He deposed that he had never received the notice. He was held not to be a contributory, the posting of the notice not being sufficient: (Finnane's case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729. M. R.)

—B. signed an agreement to take twenty shares in case the company should be "successfully floated," and two-thirds of the shares bona fide taken up. It was not proved that he had ever received an allotment, or had signed an application for shares. The condition was not performed, and he was held not to be a contributory: (Ex parte Harwood, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736. V.C.M.)

—C. signed an application for twenty shares, but neither paid nor authorised any other person to pay anything in respect of them. There was no proof of a letter of allotment having been forwarded, and he had paid no deposit. He also was held not to be a contributory: (Ex parte Gull, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 737. V.C.M.)

LIABILITIES OF RAILWAYS—NEGLIGENCE.—On the trial of an action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendants, a railway company, the plaintiff proved that he went to the company's station to travel by their line; that, on making inquiries respecting the departure of the trains he was referred by a porter of the company to a time table suspended on a wall outside the station, and under a portico; that whilst examining the time table at the place pointed out a plank and a roll of zinc fell upon him, and looking up he saw a man's legs through a hole in the roof. The judge having nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants to go to the jury: Held, that the nonsuit was right: (Welfare v. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 743. Q. B.)

SHIP—ARREST—REPAIRS—BAIL.—A vessel was arrested in an action in rem. Her release was ordered on bail being given to her value at the time of the arrest, although such value had been since increased by repairs: (The St. Olaf, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 759. Adm. Ct.)

INSURANCE—BOTTOMRY.—In the case of Hirsch v. Davis, tried at the Guildhall this week before the Lord Chief Justice and a jury, the court decided a point as to what amounts to concealment of a material fact in a policy of insurance. The defendants had granted a policy of insurance on a bottomry bond on the Eugene Edmond, at and from Swinemunde to Hartlepool, the ship being signed on the 1st Feb. 1867, and the policy delivered on the 5th. The ship, however, had sailed from Swinemunde on the 22nd Dec., and the contention for the defendant was that "at and from" in an insurance on a bottomry bond meant that the ship was then in good safety at the port where the risk was to commence. The Lord Chief Justice directed that if the jury thought it was material to be known to the underwriters that the ship was not at the port of departure they should find for the defendants; and as the jury did so their opinion may be inferred that the point was material. It appeared, though it did not affect the case, that the defendants knew all the facts before the policy was delivered, though not at the signing of the slip. This was according to the honourable understanding at Lloyd's, by which, when a slip is signed, a policy is given as a matter of course.—Economist.

GUARANTEE, CONTINUING—FUTURE DEALINGS—CONSTRUCTION.—The defendant's nephew, W. Y., being desirous of dealing with the plaintiff on credit on a larger scale than he had hitherto done, and the plaintiff refusing to so deal with him without a guarantee, and agreeing if he had a guarantee to supply him with meat as he had done his father, the defendant gave this guarantee:—"50*l*. I, J. M., of —, will be answerable for fifty pounds that W. Y., of —, butcher, may buy of Mr. J. H., of —." (Signed) J. M.: Held, a continuing guarantee: (Hefield v. Meadows, 20 L. T. Rep. N. LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

ANSWERS TO THE FINAL EXAMINATION QUESTIONS.

TRINITY TERM 1869.—SECOND DAY.

IV. PRELIMINARY.

Questions 36 to 40 inclusive.

V. EQUITY AND PRACTICE OF COURTS. (a)

41. Evidence.—If the cause be one in which issue is joined, either party may, within fourteen days after issue joined, apply by summons at chambers for an order that the evidence in chief as to any facts or issues (which are to be distinctly and concisely specified in the summons) may be taken viva voce at the hearing; and if the order is made then as to these facts and issues, no affidavit or evidence taken before an examiner will be admitted at the hearing. Subject to this, however, and the 11th of these rules, each party in a cause in which issue is joined may at his option verify his case either wholly or partially by affidavit, or by the oral examination of witnesses ex parte before an examiner: (Order 5th Feb. 1861, r. 3 and 4; Digest, 373, 5th edit.) Admission of documents may be asked for on notice to inspect and admit, and if the party is competent to make the admission, and refuses or neglects to do so, he will have to pay the costs of proof, unless the court certifies that the refusal to admit was reasonable: (See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, s. 7.)

42. Evidence—Cross-examination.—The evidence in chief (except that to be taken viva voce at the hearing) is to be closed within eight weeks after issue joined, unless this time be enlarged by special order: (Digest, 379, 5th edit.) A witness may be cross-examined on his affidavit or depositions. If issue is joined, the cross-examination takes place before the court; if issue is not joined, it is before an examiner. Notice must be given to the defendant to attend to be examined. And a fourteen days' notice must be given to the party whose witness has made an affidavit, &c., to produce him for the purpose of being cross-examined, and forty-eight hours' notice should be given the witness: (Smith's Pr. 622, et seq., 7th edit; Digest, 374, 7th edit.)

43. Bill of discovery.—Every bill requiring an answer is, to a certain extent, a bill of discovery; but the species of bill usually so distinguished by this title is a bill for discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds, or writings, or other things in his custody or power, and seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery, and they were usually filed in aid of the jurisdiction of the courts of law, but now the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), has given to the courts of common law a power of compelling discovery on the application of either party, either of documents in their possession relating to the matter in dispute, or of facts in their knowledge, leave being first obtained: (ss. 50, 51; Digest 346, 347, 5th edit.)

44. Bill to perpetuate testimony.—A bill to perpetuate testimony is filed when the testimony of witnesses is in danger of being lost before the matter to which it relates can be made the subject of judicial investigation, a court of equity will lend its aid to preserve and perpetuate the testimony: (Ayck. Pr. 246, 7th edit.) The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, enacts, that any person who would, under the circumstances alleged by him to exist, become entitled, upon the happening of any future event, to any honour, title, dignity, or office, or estate the right to which cannot by him be brought to trial before the happening of such event, may file a bill to perpetuate any testimony which may be material for establishing such right: (See Ayck. Pr. 247, 7th edit.; Digest 348, 349, 5th edit.)

45. Married woman suing.—A suit on behalf of the rights of a married woman is usually instituted by herself and her husband jointly. But if her interests are opposed to his, as if the suit is in respect of her separate estate, she sues by next friend: (Gold. Eq. 208, 209, 4th edit.; Ayck. Pr. 375, 7th edit.) The next friend must first, however, sign a written authority to the solicitor, to be filed with the bill (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 11); and he is liable for the costs of the suit: (Hinde v. Whitmore, 27 L. T. Rep. 53.)

46. Mortgage debt.—Where a person, after the 31st Dec. 1854, dies seised of or entitled to any mortgaged estate, and has not by his will or deed, &c., signified any contrary intention, the heir or devisee thereof is not entitled to have the mortgage money paid out of the personal estate. It is, however, provided that this enactment is not to affect any rights claimed under any deed, will, or other instrument made before the 1st Jan. 1855: (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113.) Before this Act the heir or devisee was, as a general rule, entitled to have the mortgage debt discharged out of the deceased's personal estate: (Will. R. P. 404, 7th edit.; Digest, 187, 5th edit.; and see further 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69.)

47. Mortgage—Absolute conveyance—Evidence.—If the instrument was originally intended as a security for money, even parol evidence will be admitted to show this, though it appears on its face to be an absolute conveyance; and it will in equity be regarded as a mortgage. And if it be shown that the consideration was grossly inadequate; if the grantee was not let into immediate possession, or if he accounted to the grantor for the rents; or if the cost of preparing the conveyance was borne by the grantor, each of these is sufficient to show that the conveyance was intended as a security: (Sm. Man. 290, 291, 8th edit.; Digest, 313, 5th edit.)

48. Mortgagor not to account.—So long as the mortgagor continues in possession by the permission of the mortgagee, he is entitled to take the rents and profits in his own right, without rendering any account whatever to the mortgagee, though the property be an insufficient security: (Sm. Man. 316, 7th edit.)

49. Mortgages—Priority.—When the legal mortgagee had notice of the equitable mortgage, at the time he advanced his money.

50. Rights of surety.—Until the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, the surety was only entitled to collateral securities held by the creditor, and not to the principal security, as that was said to be satisfied by payment of the debt by the surety: (Coyne v. Middleton, 1 T. & R. 229); by this Act, however, the surety so paying is entitled to every judgment, specialty, or other security held by the creditor in respect of such debt, whether it be or be not deemed at law to have been satisfied by payment of the debt, and the surety is entitled to stand in the place of the creditor: (sect. 5; Sm. Man. 350, 8th edit.)

51. Rights of surety.—At law, on the death of one surety, his representatives are discharged from liability, and the loss falls on the survivor, but in equity the representatives of the deceased one remain liable. So at law, if one of three sureties become bankrupt, and another pays the whole amount, he can only recover a third part from the solvent surety, but in equity the solvent surety must contribute a moiety: (See Dering v. Earl of Winchilsea, T. L. C. Eq. 95, 96, in notis, 3rd edit.)

52. Discharge of surety.—If the creditor does any act, or omits to do any act of duty which he is required to do by the surety, or is bound to do, and that act or omission may prove injurious to the surety, or if the creditor enters into a binding stipulation with the debtor unknown to the surety and inconsistent with the terms of the original contract, the surety may set up such contract as a defence to any suit brought against him either at law or in equity: (Sm. Man. 82, 8th edit.)

53. Law as to appropriation of payments.—The debtor has the first right of appropriating the payment; but if he neglects to do so the creditor may appropriate it to which debt he pleases. It is not, however, essential that the debtor should make an express appropriation at the time of payment; if circumstances show an intention to appropriate to a particular debt the creditor is bound thereby. If neither party appropriates, the law will do so to the earlier items of account: (see Chit. Cont. 604, 609, 7th edit.; Sm. Man. 262, 8th edit.)

54. Specific performance.—Equity will not, as a rule, enforce specific performance of contracts relating to personal property; because damages obtained in an action at law would amount to a sufficient compensation. But if damages would not compensate the party, it is otherwise: (see Sm. Man. 222, 8th edit.)

55. Cancellation of documents.—Equity will frequently cancel or set aside, &c., documents which have answered the end for which they were created, or instruments which are in reality void and yet apparently valid on the ground quod timet; that is, for fear such instruments should be vexatiously used when the evidence to impeach them may be lost or diminished, or for fear that they may throw a cloud or suspicion over the plaintiff's title and interests: (See further, Sm. Man. 386, et seq., 8th edit.)

COUNTY COURTS.

SKIPTON COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, June 17.

(Before W. T. S. DANIEL, Esq., Q.C., Judge.)

SIDGWICK v. THE YORKSHIRE MINING COMPANY (LIMITED).

Common land—Rights of mineral owners and surface owners—Exercise of lawful rights.

Shaw (instructed by George Robinson, Skipton) for the plaintiff.

Middleton (instructed by Butler and Smith, Leeds) for the defendants.

This case had been adjourned from 20th May last; and his Honour, in giving judgment, said:—This action was brought to recover the sum of 6l. 13s., as damages for the loss of four sheep, which had been drowned, as the plaintiff alleged, through the negligence of the defendants, under the following circumstances: The plaintiff is the tenant and occupier of a farm, formerly part of Appletreewick Common, the fee simple in the surface of which farm belongs to Mr. Chadwick. The defendants are the lessees of lead mines under lands formerly part of the same common, adjoining the plaintiff's, by virtue of a lease granted by Mr. Yorke, lord of the manor of Appletreewick, and the owner of the minerals under the whole of the said common. The lease to the defendants is for twenty-one years from the 7th May 1853; and since the lease, they have made across the lands of the plaintiff a watercourse, or a series of watercourses, for the purpose of diverting water from certain becks or gills in the plaintiff's lands, and conveying such water to the becks of the defendants on adjoining lands, to be used by them for mining purposes. The entire watercourse extends a considerable distance (upwards of a mile) through the plaintiff's land, and varies in width and depth. It is open the whole distance, and necessarily interferes with the beneficial occupation of the surface, which is occupied for pasturage for sheep; and the sheep, the subject of the present action, had, while depasturing there, fallen into the watercourse at different parts and at different times, and been drowned. The watercourse has proved to be dangerous to sheep, and might have been made less dangerous without diminishing its usefulness to the defendants, if crossings which sheep might use had been made here and there. The defendants insisted that they were at liberty to make the watercourse for the purpose of their works as they thought proper, and that they were not liable for any damage that might result to the occupier of the lands from its being an open watercourse, and they insisted that their rights as mineral owners were in all respects paramount to the rights of the surface owners. By a private Inclosure Act (55 Geo. 3, c. 27, 1815), certain stinted pastures in Appletreewick, containing 1130 acres, nine acres of open field lands, and Appletreewick Moor or Common, containing 5200 acres, were authorised to be inclosed; and the Act recited that John Yorke, Esq., was lord of the manor of Appletreewick, and the Duke of Devonshire, Earl Craven, and various other persons, were owners of cattle gates in the stinted pastures, the open field lands, and also of messuages and cottages, and sites thereof, which were entitled to rights of common, on the said moor or common; and by sect. 17, such part of the moor or common as—quantity and quality, and situation considered—should be equal in value to one-sixteenth part thereof was to be allotted to the said John Yorke, as lord, as, and in lieu of, and in full recompense for his right to the ground and soil of the said stinted pastures, open fields, and the said moor or common; and by the 39th section it is provided that nothing in the Act contained shall be construed or adjudged to defeat, lessen, or prejudice the right, title, or interest of the said John Yorke, lord of the manor of Appletreewick, his heirs and assigns, or any future lord, &c., of, in, and to the minerals or metals (including lead) within or under the said stinted pastures, open field lands, moor or common, intended to be inclosed, or the signories, &c., of or incident to the said manor, but that the said John Yorke, as such lord, and all persons claiming under him as lord, and all future lords, &c., may thenceforth hold and enjoy all manorial rights (other than and except such right of soil as is by this Act meant and intended to be barred, destroyed, and extinguished), in as full, ample, and beneficial a manner, to all intents and purposes, as they could have held and enjoyed the same in case this Act had not been passed; and that the said John Yorke, and all future lords, &c., shall and may from time to time, and at all times hereafter, have, hold, work, and enjoy all mines, and minerals, and quarries within or under the said stinted pastures, open field lands, moor or common, intended to be enclosed, as well those not opened as those already opened, and to have, enjoy, and be vested with all convenient and necessary ways, way-leaves, and liberties of laying, making, and repairing waggon ways; and other ways, in, over, and along the same or any part thereof, and of searching for, draining, winning, and working the mines and quarries, and dressing, smelting, and leading and carrying away the metals and minerals (including lead) to be gotten thereout, or out of any other lands or grounds, and making pit shafts, &c., and dams, reservoirs of water, and water-courses, and taking, diverting and using springs, brooks, and other waters, erecting and using fire-engines, and other engines, smelt mills, and other mills, houses and other buildings, and all and any other matters and things now in use, or hereafter to be invented for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, in upon, through, over or along the said stinted pastures, open field lands, moor or common, or any of them, or any part or parts thereof, and all other powers, privileges, and authorities, for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, without paying any damage, or making any compensation for the same, in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed." It was contended by Mr. Middleton, for the defendants, that the large and comprehensive terms of this clause empowered the lord to make the watercourse in question, it being a work convenient and necessary for working the portion of the mines demised to the defendants, and that he and the defendants, as his lessees, are by the Act expressly exempted from paying any damage or making any compensation for the same. In Roberts v. Hinnis, 6 Ell. & Bl. 643, affirmed in error, 7 Ell. & Bl. 625, and in Wakefield v. Duke of Buccleuch, L. Rep. 4 Eq. 613, it was held that in the case of inclosures made under private Acts similar to the present, the allottees of the surface take prima facie all the rights which belong to the owner of the surface when the minerals beneath are the property of another. In each of these cases the mineral owner was expressly made liable to compensation for surface damages; in the present case he is expressly exempted. But that difference does not, in my opinion, affect the question to be determined here, which depends not upon the act which the lord or his assignee is authorised to do, nor so much upon the manner of doing it, but rather upon the liability for damage which may result from the act done. An act lawful in itself, and in intention innocent, may, however, involve a liability to compensate for injuries to person or property which are the consequences of that act. Thus, it is a lawful act for a mine owner to get his minerals from beneath the surface of another, but if afterwards injury results to the surface from the act of the mineral owner, the surface owner may, when such injury occurs, recover compensation for it from the mine owner; and such right takes effect from the time when the injury was sustained, and not from the time when the act causing the injury was done: (Bonomi v. Backhouse, Ell. Bl. & Ell. 655; 9 H. L. Cas. 503.) The liability rests upon the maxim, sic utere ut non alterum non laedas, which is not so much a prohibition against doing an act, as a recognition by law of a latent liability to answer for its consequences if injurious to another. It being thus established that the lawful character of the act does not relieve from the liability of answering for its consequences, if injurious, it is equally well established that when exemption from such liability is claimed, that exemption must be shown expressly, and not inferentially, or by mere implication, the cases of Robotham v. Wilson, 8 H. of L. Cas. 348, and Dugdale v. Robertson, 3 K. & J. 695, may be referred to as authorities in point. The question then arises, do the terms of the 39th section before referred to show that express exemption? This exemption is to be found, if anywhere, in the words "without paying any damage, or making any compensation for the same, in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed." Now, if the Act had not been passed, could the lord for mining purposes have used the surface in a manner which would have been injurious to the commoners in the rightful exercise of their rights of common? Could he, for instance, by mining beneath have let down the surface so as to have injuriously affected the common for commonable purposes? Could he have sunk pits or shafts, or made drains or reservoirs, and left them unfenced, so as to be dangerous to the commoners' cattle lawfully using the common? The answer, according to the authorities, must be that he could not, and the reason is, that so to act would be to derogate from his own grant. And it appears to me that the same limitation must be applied to the exercise of his rights as reserved by the Inclosure Act. Under this reservation, he may occupy and use the surface by sinking pits or shafts, erecting smelting houses, constructing dams or reservoirs, making watercourses, roads, or tramways, or erecting any other works on the surface, necessary or convenient for profitably working the minerals underlying any part of the manor, and that without paying any damage for the immediate injury to the surface, or making any compensation for its exclusive use or occupation; but if any of such works are so executed as to be dangerous to the use or occupation of the rest of the surface, as, for instance, if pits are unfenced, he is in law responsible for the damage thereby occasioned. In the present case, the evidence established the fact that the watercourse, as constructed, is dangerous to the surface as used, and properly used, for depasturing sheep, and the sheep for the loss of which damages are claimed, with an exception that I shall notice presently, were drowned in the watercourse, owing to the dangerous manner in which it was constructed. Therefore, I have assumed that the defendants, as lessees, have acquired by their lease all the rights of the lord. A question, however, was raised by Mr. Shaw, on behalf of the plaintiff, whether under the terms of the lease the defendants had acquired the right to make any watercourse except on the surface of the lands the minerals beneath which were leased to them; and as the plaintiff's lands were not part of these (the minerals under the plaintiff's lands having been leased with working powers to another company, the Grimwith Mining Company, for whose use the watercourse in question was not made or required), and he urged the defendants had not acquired the right to make the watercourse at all, and, therefore, were mere trespassers. By the terms of the lease, the lead mines, under a certain area described by metes and bounds, and a plan endorsed on the lease, are demised to the defendants for the purpose of working, with power to the defendants to divert any watercourse or watercourses, drains, levels, trenches, dams, or sluices, in or through the aforesaid mining ground or premises, or any part thereof, for (among other things) washing, cleaning, or dressing all such lead as may be got from and out of the said mines or works, and for which this watercourse was made, subject to a proviso that the same should not unlawfully obstruct, hinder, or prejudice any other mines or works of the said John Yorke, his heirs or assigns, or any other person or persons working by his authority. There was no evidence that the watercourse created any such obstruction, hindrance, or prejudice; the only party to be affected by it was the Grimwith Mining Company, and some evidence was tendered of a licence by that company, but it was insufficient as evidence of a licence, and I held that any evidence of a licence was unnecessary. The terms of this express power to make a watercourse perhaps leave it doubtful whether upon that construction the power is not limited to a watercourse in or through the lands constituting the mining ground demised to the defendants, and including, of course, the surface; but I am satisfied, as a fact, that the power as exercised was necessary, or at least convenient, for the profitable working of the mines demised; and the lease, after the enumeration of the particular powers to be exercised, contains these words, "and to do all matters and things whatsoever (excepting washing, which has not been done) that may be necessary or requisite to be done for the working, getting, washing, and cleaning the lead ore, discovered, or to be discovered, in any part of the said mining ground." These words, as it appears to me, are large enough to include the power to do the act done, if the express terms in which the power is given should be considered insufficient. I therefore decide this case upon the general ground of the rights of the lord, treating them as vested by the lease in the defendants. Judgment will be entered for the plaintiff for 5l. 5s. I don't allow the plaintiff damages for the one sheep that was drowned in June 1866, this falling into the watercourse shortly after it had been washed, and while its fleece was heavy with water, as I consider it was negligence in the plaintiff not to take care of the sheep while in that condition. If the defendants wish to appeal, and require my consent, I give it. The case involves an important question of right, affecting an extensive district, and large and valuable interests of many persons.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Monday, June 28.

(Before Mr. Commissioner THRING.)

Re EDWARD BENN.

Proof of debt—Distinct trades—Partnership debt allowed to be proved against an individual partner.

Where two partners carried on business at Bahia, and one of them, who carried on a distinct trade in England, dissolves partnership, and succeeds to the joint business:

Held, on his bankruptcy, that the proofs of debt by the creditors of the partnership were admissible against his estate.

This was a meeting for declaration of dividend.

Gill and Martin (solicitors) tendered proofs of debt on behalf of creditors of the firm in Bahia, consisting of the bankrupt and his late partner.

Lockett, for the assignees, objected to their admission for several reasons, and more particularly on the ground that it was inequitable to allow the creditors of the firm at Bahia to come into competition with those of the individual partner who carried on a distinct trade in England.

His HONOUR, who had reserved his judgment, said:—Two proofs of debt have been tendered by Mr. Gill against the estate of this bankrupt. The one on behalf of William Collier for 249l. 14s. 6d., money had and received by the bankrupt for the use of the claimant, the other on behalf of Messrs. Johnston, Comber, and Co., for 657l. 13s. 11d., goods sold and delivered to Benn and Co. In the former case a bill of exchange for the amount, dated Bahia, Jan. 27, 1869, had been drawn on the bankrupt by H. C. Wells, per pro Benn and Co. In the latter a bill had been drawn in a similar manner, dated Bahia, Feb. 26, 1869. Both bills were presented for acceptance to the bankrupt, but refused in consequence of his having been adjudicated bankrupt on Feb. 25, 1869. The facts are as follows.—In 1868 Edward Benn, the bankrupt, carried on business at Bahia in partnership with his son, Arthur Benn, under the title of Benn and Co. During the same period he carried on business as a merchant in Liverpool in his own name only. The firms at Bahia and Liverpool respectively carried on separate and distinct trades. The partnership at Bahia was dissolved on Dec. 31, 1868, by an arrangement between Benn and his son, under which Benn the son retired from the firm, and Benn the father undertook to discharge all debts, liabilities, and responsibilities whatever of Benn and Co. The notice and terms of dissolution were duly advertised three times in the Bahia papers according to the custom of Brazil, and Edward Benn, the bankrupt, appointed H. C. Wells as his manager to conduct and wind up the business of Benn and Co., at Bahia. Mr.

Lockett contended that Collier's proof was only admissible under sect. 152 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, and Johnston's proof must be rejected on the authority of the numerous cases relating to double proof. I am of opinion that there is no ground for such a contention. Both proofs stand on the same basis. On the retirement of Arthur Benn from the partnership in Dec. 1868, the property at Bahia was no longer the joint property of the two partners, but was converted into the separate property of Edward Benn, the bankrupt, and all his creditors are entitled to an equal distribution of his assets. Both proofs will, therefore, be admitted to rank against the estate of the bankrupt.

JOINT NOTES.—The words—"We jointly and severally, and any two of us jointly promise to pay"—used in a promissory note, have been held by the commissioner in bankruptcy sufficient to enable the holders of the note to prove against the separate estate of the three parties who signed it, against the joint estate of the three, and against a partnership consisting of two of them. The dispute was one of the numerous ones which have arisen out of the litigation of Peto, Betts, and Crampton; and the interest in the litigation arose from the attempt of the noteholders to prove against the joint estate of Peto and Betts. This they were entitled to do under the phrase "any two of us jointly," which was however absolutely essential for the purpose. In a liquidation in Chancery the double proof would have been allowed in any case but the rule in bankruptcy, as we have explained on a former occasion, is different and less reasonable. The commissioner seems to have been troubled a good deal before coming to a conclusion about the meaning of "any two of us." It was suggested that this only meant a right of selection against one out of the possible combinations of two among the three signers, in which case the clause would be void for vagueness. But the common practice of conveyancers, as well as the authority of Dr. Latham, set his doubts at rest, and the ingenuity of the drawers of the note was rewarded. The form may be still more useful where there are more signatures than three—the words then being "any two, any three, any four, &c., of us jointly," which would cover all possible combinations. But it would be better to abolish altogether the absolute rules against double proof.—Economist.

COUNTY COURT RULES AND ORDERS 1867—MERCANTILE LAW AMENDMENT ACT.—By the Mercantile Law Amendment Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 5, any person who, being a surety, &c. for a debtor, shall pay such debt, &c., shall be entitled to have assigned to him, or to a trustee for him, every judgment, specialty or other security which shall be held by the creditor in respect of such debt, &c. This section is understandable as to judgments in the Superior Courts, but does it extend to the County Courts? 201 of the County Court Rules and Orders 1867 states that, "execution on a judgment may issue on behalf of any person not a party to the suit by leave of the registrar upon proof of title to the benefit of the judgment, and upon substitution of the name of the new plaintiff, together with a statement of his derivative title for that of the original plaintiff, and the registrar shall give notice of such substitution to the defendant by post, and execution shall not issue upon the judgment until the expiration of six clear days after the posting of the notice." I became surety for B. Judgment was obtained against both of us in the County Court, and I had to pay the whole amount. Coupling the sect. 5 with the rule 201, I applied to the registrar to have the judgment assigned to me, upon my affidavit setting forth the facts that I was surety only, and paid the amount as such. The registrar is of opinion, first, that the Mercantile Law Amendment Act does not apply to County Courts; secondly, that being a party to the suit, I was not entitled to have the benefit of the judgment assigned to me as surety; that the rule applied only to a purchaser of the judgment-debt, or to assignees or other representatives of the original plaintiff. I shall feel obliged if some of your correspondents will give me their practical views and experience in cases like this. D.

MARAVILLA COCOA FOR BREAKFAST.—The cocoa (or cacao) of Maravilla is the true Theobroma of Linnaeus.—The Globe says: "Taylor Brothers' Maravilla Cocoa has achieved a thorough success, and has superseded every other cocoa in the market. For homeopaths and invalids we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage." Sold in packets only, by all grocers.

Queries.

49. MORTGAGE.—A. having advanced B. a sum of money on mortgage of his property, went to America taking the title-deeds of the property, including the mortgage-deed, with him, and died in America. His widow took out letters of administration in America, and she and the eldest son have now returned to England and require payment of principal and interest, and have joined in selling the property, but refuse to take out letters of administration to the mortgagee in England, contending that the mortgage-deed being in America when the mortgagee died, the money was personal estate in America and not in England where the land is. I shall be obliged if some of your experienced readers would give me their opinion as to whether an English administration is wanted, and the best course to pursue on behalf of a purchaser.

50. COPYHOLDS.—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—Under an Inclosure Act and award thereupon, made more than forty years since, a common was divided amongst copyholders in respect of their ancient lands being copyhold. In the case in question some of the allottees (their allotments having been very small) have never been admitted in respect of their allotments, and there are no tenants in respect thereof on the roll. One person has been and continues in possession of the lands, which, according to the plan attached to the award, represent the spot whereon these allotments had been made, but no fences now exist (as represented on the award plan) for upwards of forty years. The question is, would a possessory title of twenty or forty years out the claims of the lord, and without his intervention enable the owner in possession to convey to a purchaser? Could a title be given by aid of the Statute of Limitations? Jones v. Jones, 16 L. J. Ex. 299, seems so far in point, but does not touch upon the ouster of the lord's rights. Note, the person in question is dead, and is now represented by his devisees; it is not known how he originally got into possession. In what way could the present owners least expensively convey to purchaser?

51. INVESTMENT.—VICAR TRUSTEE.—Can you or any of your readers inform me whether money left by will to the vicar of a parish for charitable purposes can be invested in the name of the vicar for the time being of such parish, so that it may appear that the money belongs to him in his ex officio character of vicar, and not to him in his private capacity? SUBSCRIBER.

52. ISSUE OF MY BODY.—WILL.—Observing among your correspondence of last week several opinions as to the legal effect of the word "issue" in construing gifts of personal estate, I should be much obliged to any correspondent who would tell me the effect of a devise of real estate contained in a will before the year 1838. To the use of "the issue of my body" following a limitation to my eldest son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. Do the issue take for life in tail, or in fee? In several according to the ordinary rules of descent, or in common or joint tenancy, and in the latter case would males and females take together, and children with or without parents living either per stirpes or per capita, and would the class of takers be ascertained at the death of the testator, or not until the failure of the preceding limitations in tail. S. B. E.

53. PAPERS OF A DECEASED ATTORNEY.—To whom belong the drafts of deeds and other documents, whether to the client or the attorney who prepared them? A. (an attorney) gets from a deceased attorney's office drafts of deeds prepared by the deceased for his clients. B. (another attorney) asks A. by letter if he has certain of these drafts, which B. says are wanted as secondary evidence in an action, and if A. has them, B. says he will serve him with a duces tecum to produce same. Ought A., who is not the attorney in any way in the action, to admit that he has them? And when served with a duces tecum has he any privilege to claim for not producing them in court? It would be difficult and almost impossible without time (within which process to produce might be served) to find out the respective clients or their legal representatives, if handing over the documents in question to them should be advised. What ought A. to do and at same time treat B. with courtesy?

A. B. C.

54. WILL.—PROOF.—Would any of your numerous readers inform me whether it is necessary to prove a will and codicil where real property is devised by A. to B., and afterwards A. executes a codicil to his will whereby he revokes all his former devises in his will except the devise to B?

Answers.

(Q. 30.) APPRENTICESHIP.—I am obliged by "G. J.'s" remarks upon my answer to this query, and I have carefully reconsidered the subject, but cannot alter the opinion I before expressed. It is expressly stated in the Act, sect. 2, that the term "employed" shall include an "apprentice or other person, whether under the age of twenty years, or above that age, who has entered into a contract of service with any employer, and the words 'contract of service' shall include any contract, whether in writing or by parol, to serve for any period of time, or to execute any work, and any indenture or contract of apprenticeship, whether such contract or indenture was executed before or after the passing of this Act."

W. H. F.

(Q. 35.) MORTGAGE.—POWER OF SALE.—A sale made in exercise of an express power must be strictly in accordance with its terms. For instance, a sale would be set aside if it was by private contract when the power is confined to a sale by public auction; but not so for neglect or irregularity when there is a proviso indemnifying purchasers. I would refer "P." to Fisher's Law of Mortgages, and especially p. 501 of vol. 1, 2nd edit.

R. H.

(Q. 41.) MARRIED WOMAN.—REAL PROPERTY.—I think the answer of "W. H. F." is not correct. The child may possibly be entitled to bear the name of the second husband, but I am of opinion that she would legally be considered as the child of the first husband, and entitled to share as parcer with the other daughter. Blackstone lays it down (citing Co. Litt. 8), that, if a man dies and his widow soon after marries again, and a child is born within such a time as that, by the course of nature, it might have been the child of either husband, in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate; for he may, when he arrives to years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases: (1 Bl. Com. 456.) But Justice Coleridge adds, "Brooke," says Mr. Hargrave, "In his note on the passage cited, questions this doctrine, from which it seems as if he thought it reasonable that the circumstance of the case instead of the choice of the issue should determine who is the father." Now, in the case stated, it appears that the child being born about a month after the second marriage, could not, in the course of nature, have been the child of the second husband, and consequently must be legally regarded as the child of the first whichever of the two authorities is correct? The act of the mother cannot disinherit the child. E. H. B.

(Q. 44.) APPOINTMENT OF NEW TRUSTEES.—EXERCISE OF POWER.—Presuming that the deed appointing D. as a trustee in the stead of B. was properly drawn and executed, there can be no doubt that such appointment was a valid execution of the power contained in the will, and that the legal estate is effectually vested in D., who has therefore a good right and full power to sell, if such was the nature of the trusts declared by the testator.

W. H. F.

—Quoting from "Umlin's Office of Trustee," the question how far the appointment of more or fewer trustees than the original number will be supported? is not capable of an easy answer. It may, perhaps, be broadly stated that unless there be some expression in the power, showing that an increase or diminution in the number was contemplated, the same number ought to be continued. It is certain that the court will not approve of trust property, which was originally vested in two trustees, being placed within the power of a single trustee: (Hulme v. Hulme, 2 My. & K. 682) "The court never commits a trust to the care of a single trustee" (Lord Romilly, M.R., 35 Beav. 19); and, generally speaking, it may also be assumed that one vacancy cannot, with propriety, be supplied by more than one trustee. On carefully weighing the language of the power in the case submitted by "Querist," it seems clear, to my mind, that such power contains words showing that an increase or diminution in the number of trustees was contemplated, and this being so, the power was in that respect rightly exercised by B.'s appointing but one trustee. But the chief question seems to be whether B., as a retiring trustee, could exercise a power conferred upon the surviving or continuing trustee. Lord Romilly, in the case of Stone v. Routon, 17 Beav. 308, 1 Eq. R. 427, held that a power conferred upon surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, could not be exercised by trustees who were retiring. Yet, in a case before the late Vice-Chancellor Parker, two trustees had been appointed by a will but only one of them survived the testator, and afterwards this surviving trustee disclaimed the trust, but by the same deed exercised a power given to him by the will of appointing new trustees, and the appointment was upheld: (Hadley v. Hadley, 5 De G. & S. 67.) And in a late case the survivor of four trustees being desirous of quitting the trust, was held to be authorised in appointing four new trustees under the words of the power: (Camoys v. Best, 19 Beav. 414. On both points I am inclined to think that the power has been rightly exercised, and that if the trust property has been duly conveyed and assigned to and vested in the new trustee, he alone has a good and unimpeachable right and title to, and full power to sell and convey such trust property.

J. P.

(Q. 46.) LEGACY DUTIES.—REAL ESTATE DIRECTED TO BE SOLD.—This residuary return will be very simple. All that is now requisite to be done is to get the realty valued, and insert such value in the account (annexing valuation in the usual way). When the widow dies an amended return must be made, and if the realty has not been then disposed of, and has altered in value, such new value must be stated in the account. It being a rule that legacy duty should be paid on the value of both real and personal estate, unconverted, as it stands at the time the account is rendered. If the value at the widow's death remains or happens to be same as when the first return is made, all that will be necessary to be done will be to deal with the amount of residue only, as shown in such first return, deducting therefrom any legacies which may be then payable, and also the additional executorship expenses consequent on the management and winding-up of the estate. J. F.

—I must admit that I cannot quite understand this query, why, under the circumstances, legacy duty should be demanded; but I would mention for "Lex's" guidance that where real estate was given to trustees upon trust to be sold, and the profits to be deemed part of the residue of the testator's estate, or go in aid, if necessary, of the rest of his property in discharge of the pecuniary legacy given by his will, it was held that such bequest was liable to legacy duty, although the trustee did not convert it into money, and the residuary legatee took the property in statu quo: (Attorney-General v. Holford, 1 Price 426; see also 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51, ss. 21, 22, 29.)

W. H. F.

(Q. 47.) COUNTY COURT.—BILL OF EXCHANGE.—SUMMONS.—If the Bill be in the hands of the creditor over due and dishonoured, he has his remedy either on the bill, or the original debt. He can therefore, upon the proper affidavit, enter a plaint and obtain a special summons under sect. 2 of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, for the value of the goods sold, provided they were sold to the defendant to be dealt with in the way of trade. I am not aware of any rule authorising the registrar to demand a duplicate of the above affidavit, but as it is so very short it is not a matter of much consequence.

W. H. F.

(Q. 48.) LEGACY DUTY.—CONTINGENT LEGACY.—A legacy given subject to any contingency which may defeat the gift is nevertheless to be charged with duty as an absolute bequest, and the duty is to be paid out of the capital of such legacy; and should the contingency afterwards happen, and the legacy go to one liable to a higher rate of duty, such legatee is to pay the difference, 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 17. The executor will, of course, not pay over the legacy itself unless he receives a sufficient security from the party to protect himself against any future contingent demand that may arise. See Simmons v. Bolland, 3 Mer. 547, and Allnutt's Practice, 4th edit. p. 362.

LAW SOCIETIES.

LAW ASSOCIATION.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF WIDOWS AND FAMILIES OF PROFESSIONAL MEN IN THE METROPOLIS AND VICINITY.

At the usual monthly meeting, held at the hall of the Incorporated Law Society on Thursday, the 3rd June, the following directors being present:—Mr. Desborough (chairman), Mr. Harding, Mr. Burges, Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Collisson, Mr. Gresham, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Sawtell, Mr. S. Smith, and Mr. Tylee, and Mr. Boodle (secretary), grants to the widows and families of members amounting to 1235*l.*, and grants to the widows and families of non-members amounting to 95*l.*, were renewed for the current year, and several donations to non-members' cases were made; and at the usual monthly meeting, held at the same place on Thursday, the 1st inst., the following directors being present:—Mr. Desborough (chairman), Mr. Harding, Mr. Burges, Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Collisson, Mr. Clabon, Mr. Hedger, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Lowe, Mr. S. Smith, and Mr. Whyte, and Mr. Boodle (secretary), a donation was made to the necessitous widow and children of a non-member, and a legacy of 200*l.* from the late Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Clark, the widow of a member, was announced.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery-lane, London, on Wednesday last, the 7th inst., William Strickland Cookson, Esq., in the chair. The following directors were also present: Messrs. Benham, Harrison, Monckton, Park Nelson, Rickman, Shaen, Smith, and Torr (Mr. Eiffe, secretary).

A grant of 50*l.* was voted to the widow of a lately deceased director and life member of the association, and a sum of 35*l.* was applied in smaller grants to the relief of four necessitous non-members' cases. A communication was read from the executors of the late Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Clark, of Addison-road, Kensington, announcing the bequest of a legacy of 200*l.* to the society by that lady (subject to legacy duty). Three new life, and thirty-six new annual members were elected.

A statement was submitted, showing the results of the late anniversary festival, presided over by Lord Justice Selwyn, to have been a net gain to the society's funds of 528*l.*, after the payment of all expenses, and an accession of 103 new subscribers to the list of members. Cordial votes of thanks were passed to his Lordship, and to those members of the Bar who became benefactors of the society at the festival.

LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery-lane, on Tuesday evening last, Mr. Widdows in the chair, and it being the last meeting of the season, there was an unusually large attendance of members.

The annual report by the committee of the proceedings of the society during the past year was read to the meeting, and the following gentlemen were elected as the officers for the ensuing year:—Mr. W. H. Herbert, treasurer; Mr. Leslie Hunter, secretary. As members of the committee: Messrs. Thomas Widdows, Edgar C. Harvie, R. Freer Anstie, T. R. Hargreaves, and J. S. Hepburn. As auditors: Messrs. W. C. Galloway, and G. W. Byrne.

Votes of thanks were tendered to Messrs. G. S. Warrington and C. H. Turner on their retirement from office.

Subjoined is a copy of the report of the committee:—
"To the Members of the Law Students' Debating Society."

"Gentlemen,—In accordance with the rules of your society, we now beg to lay before you our report of the proceedings of the society during the session which is now about to close.

"The session has comprised 32 meetings, at which 19 legal and 11 jurisprudential questions have been discussed.

"Twenty-nine members have been elected, and 10 members have resigned during the session. There are now upon the roll of the society 169 members, a larger number than has ever before been recorded. The net increase in the number of members for the year is 19, and your committee have much pleasure in congratulating the society upon this very satisfactory feature.

"The average number of members attending the meetings has been 26, the highest attendance being 33, and the lowest 16. The average number of speakers has been 10, and of voters 14, of whom 12 voted in person, and 2 by the register of votes. The average length of the debates has been about two hours.

"Your committee have held 8 meetings during the session, and have carefully considered 39 legal questions, of which 21 have been approved for debate.

"A vacancy having occurred in your committee by the resignation of Mr. Montagu, Mr. C. H. Turner was elected in his place.

"During the past session no alterations have been made in the society's rules, a reprint of which has been issued.

"An arrangement has been entered into with the Liverpool Law Students' Debating Society for the mutual transmission of question papers, reports, &c., whereby it is hoped that the influence and operations of your society will be much extended.

"Your society, by resolution of the 18th May last, approved of the Carey-street site for the erection of the proposed new law courts and offices, and directed your committee to prepare and arrange for the presentation of a petition to Parliament in favour thereof.

"In pursuance of such direction a petition has been settled and signed by your committee, and forwarded for presentation.

"The Incorporated Law Society have extended their assistance to your society, by permitting the use of text-books and a larger number of reports than heretofore by your members, during debates on legal questions.

"Your committee would call your attention to the honours achieved by present and former members of the society, since the date of the last report, and think that these successes are a subject of more than ordinary congratulation, and call for special mention.

"Mr. E. H. Turner was awarded an Exhibition in Common Law at the July Examination, by the Inns of Court, held in Trinity Term 1868.

"Mr. C. M. Warmington obtained the Studentship awarded by the Council of Legal Education, in Michaelmas Term 1868.

"Mr. G. S. Green was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn in Hilary Term last; Mr. Green was Exhibitor at the General Examination by the Inns of Court in Trinity Term 1868.

"Mr. W. H. Lloyd was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn in Trinity Term last.

"Mr. John Roberts obtained the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn at the final examination of articled clerks, held in Michaelmas Term 1868.

"Mr. E. W. Beal B.A., was awarded a prize of the Incorporated Law Society at the like final examination, held in Hilary Term 1869.

"Messrs. H. W. Bosworth and M. P. Jones also at a like examination, held in Trinity Term last, obtained honorary distinction.

"In conclusion, your committee beg to be allowed to congratulate you upon the satisfactory position your society has attained.

"We are, Gentlemen, your obedient servants,

EDGAR C. HARVEY, Treasurer.

B. FREER AUSTIN, LESLIE TURNER, CHARLES H. TURNER, THOMAS WIDDOWS, GEO. S. WARMINGTON, Members of Committee.

W. H. HERBERT, Honorary Secretary.

"Law Institution, 6th July 1869."

LORD STANLEY ON POSTHUMOUS DISPOSITIONS OF PROPERTY.—Lord Stanley presided over a meeting held in the rooms of the Society of Arts, the object of the meeting being to discuss a paper on the above subject, contributed and read by Mr. Arthur Hobhouse, Q.C. His Lordship said he should agree there had been much abuse in the management of public charities; that they should have the power of reforming abuses; that they had hitherto manifested too scrupulous an adherence to the dictates of the founders of these charities. He did not think anyone would contend there was not a right inherent in the State to interfere in the government of a charity whose objects had been abused. There was a wide difference between saying the State could have control over the property, and also could interfere where it was not necessary. The fact that a man desired to leave his property to any special object was a very natural wish. The state ought to assert its power by sweeping away all charities which had failed in their object. The State should also interfere in the matter of obsolete endowments, as, for instance, in the case of the fund for the rescue of Algerine prisoners. The State should decide that no one should be permitted to make a bequest capable of remaining in a permanent state. He would suggest that persons should invest their money in Government funds rather than private ones.

BREAKFAST—EPPE'S COCOA—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—The very agreeable character of this preparation has rendered it a general favourite. The Civil Service Gazette remarks:—"The singular success which Mr. Eppe attained by his homoeopathic preparation of cocoa has never been surpassed by any experimentalist. By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Eppe has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills." Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold by the Trade only in 1lb. 1lb., and 1lb. tin-lined packets, labelled "JAMES EPPE and Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

HILLINGDON, MIDDLESEX.—To be SOLD, a GENTLEMAN'S RESIDENCE, with about 3½ acres of very valuable land, lying altogether in a ring fence, near the village church and a first-class station on the Great Western Railway, well situated on a gravelly soil, commanding extensive views of a beautifully wooded country. The property is all freehold and title free, and comprises a moderate-sized, old-fashioned house, with every accommodation. The land is of a park-like appearance, chiefly pasture; there is ample store of outbuildings of every description; entrance lodge, gardener's cottage, conservatory, two grape-houses, forcing house, pits, frames, &c., kitchen and flower gardens, orchard, two pieces of water, extensive shrubberies, and walks tastefully laid out, and surrounded with fine old ornamental timber.—For further particulars and cards to view, on Fridays and Saturdays, apply to W. WILKS, Esq., Solicitor, Uxbridge.

SMALL WEEKLY HOUSES.—To SOLICITORS AND OTHERS.—A gentleman wishes to INVERT immediately from 2000l. to 2500l. in the purchase of the above in London. If out of repair, and short leases, not objected to. Money paid immediately on approval of title.—Apply to Mr. Foss, 28, Moorgate-street, City.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

A MAJORITY of twenty-five has sanctioned the second reading in the House of Commons of Mr. LOCKE KING'S Bill for the abolition of primogeniture, veiled under the less formidable title of Real Estate Intestacy. The argument was all in favour of a measure which leaves to a testator the power to give his property as he pleases, but divides it equally among his children if he does not otherwise direct. That it will have any practical effect upon the devolution of real property no lawyer with a particle of experience could believe. Its sole operation will be to induce more persons than now to perform the solemn duty of making a will.

AN Irish case has brought to light what may be described as a hidden piece of the practice of the Court of Chancery concerning the interests of minors who are entitled to the benefits accru-ing from the carrying on of the testator's or intestate's trade. There is no reported case on the point, but our Court of Chancery has in many cases allowed the property of minors to be continued in trade where it was manifestly for their interests. The course adopted is to require the person carrying on the business to enter into a recognizance with sureties covering the value of the capital and stock in trade, manufactory, &c., in the business, and to lodge at the Judge's chambers on a given day in each year a balance-sheet, verified and made out so as to admit of its being checked if necessary; and to bring into court and invest the profits belonging to the minors; or if there be an order to apply any part for their benefit, then to apply it as directed, and to keep separate accounts of each infant's share, with liberty to the infants, as they come of age, to apply at chambers for the transfer of the shares.

A RETURN of fees received in stamps and payments formerly charged on the Fee Fund Account, Superior Courts of Common Law, during the years ending 31st March 1868 and 1869, also a return of receipts and payments in the Courts of Probate and Divorce, High Court of Admiralty, and Land Registry during the same period, has been published under the authority of Mr.
AYRTON. The receipts from the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer for the year ending March 1869, amounted to 94,709l.
16s. 2d., against 114,316l. 8s. 1d. for the previous year, thus showing a decrease of 20,218l. 11s. 11d.

The total amount of payments made for the former period was 99,800l. 16s. 7d., and for 1868, 98,070l. 14s. 2d., giving an increase of 1730l.
2s. 5d. for 1869 over the preceding year. The receipts in the Courts of Probate and Divorce, Admiralty and Land Registry for the year ending March 1869, were 134,969l. 16s. 1d., and for 1868, 139,474l. 16s. 8d., a decrease again occur-ing of 4505l. 0s. 7d. The payments in 1869 were 222,109l. 2s. 1d., against 223,019l. 7s. 2d., thus giving also a decrease of 910l. 5s. 1d. The payments in both cases are exclusive of judges' salaries.

In "Some Suggestions for Bankruptcy Legislation," by a Mr. SEYD, we are told that much insolvency would be prevented if merchants and persons engaged in trade kept proper books of account. In the doctrine of balancing accounts
Mr. SEYD finds the panacea of all bankruptcy evils, and he proposes to enact as follows:—
"Any person or persons engaged in any trade, profession, occupation, or undertaking, for the carrying on of which it is customary or expedient that books of account should be kept, shall keep, or cause to be kept, such books of account according to the recognised rules of bookkeeping by single or by double entry; and shall keep or cause to be kept, such books in such a manner that balance-sheets may be made up therefrom from time to time; and shall be bound, at least once in every two years, to balance, or cause to be balanced, such books, and make a true and proper balance-sheet therefrom; and in default thereof, if any such person or persons be made bankrupt, the Court of Bankruptcy shall refuse to discharge such bankrupt from his liabilities. The bankrupt shall produce his books and his balance-sheets before the court, and the representative of the creditors shall investigate the same, or the court, without, or upon the application of a creditor, may cause such an investigation to be made, and the report of the parties so investigating shall be received in evidence. The court shall refuse to relieve the bankrupt of his liabilities if to the satisfaction of the court it be shown: That the accounts have, wilfully or negligently, been kept improperly, and not in accordance with the recognised rules of book-keeping, so as to prevent the extraction therefrom of a proper balance-sheet. That, wilfully or negligently, false entries or mistakes have been made, prejudicial to the interests of those concerned. That, wilfully or negligently, the taking and valuing of the stock, or of the assets and liabilities, has been improperly made. That anything whatsoever has been done in regard to the books or the balance-sheets, which in the judgment of the court be improper or prejudicial."

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

THE Lords have received this measure with a good will that leaves little or no doubt of its success. Lord ROMILLY, indeed, gave some ominous hints that amendments would be required, but that there was the foundation for a good Bill; and if it is to be recast, as this intimation would seem to imply, it could not possibly become law this session. But the MASTER of the ROLLS spoke, we believe, for himself alone; at least no other law Lord expressed the like views. Lord WESTBURY may possibly exercise his ingenuity in criticising the clauses that depart most widely from the principles of his own scheme, and we can scarcely venture to hope that he will approve a plan borrowed from Scotland, and which he had himself formerly rejected. Nevertheless, the majority of the Peers will not be loath to relieve the Legislature from a question which has troubled it for so many years, and stood in the way of so many other reforms. The Bill will pass substantially as it is; a fair trial must be given to it, and whatever defects experience may reveal, and many there must be, will be cured by occasional amendment Acts. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL deserves all the applause he has received, for the ability, tact, and temper, with which he has conducted this difficult measure through the House of Commons.

PROSECUTION BRIEFS.

A CIRCULAR from the Treasury to the Clerks of Assize has directed them not to allow more than a fee of one guinea on a prosecution brief, save under special circumstances, to be stated in the order.

This new economy of the Treasury will result, like all former attempts unduly to curtail the expenses of prosecutions, in the further paralysis of the criminal law. The reduction of the allowance to prosecutors and witnesses has already operated to deter the one from prosecuting crime, and the other from detecting it. The limitation of counsel's fee to a guinea will prevent practised men from appearing in prosecutions, because thereby they will deprive themselves of the chances of a better fee for the defence.

Something will depend, of course, upon what the Clerk of Assize may hold to be special circumstances. He may, we think, fairly deem any number of witnesses above three, or the fact that the prisoner was defended, to be such "specialties" as would justify a larger fee. If he should so determine, this cheeseparing order will be more in show than substance. But if it is to be strictly enforced, either the Bar will be treated in a manner that will amount almost to an insult, or prosecutors will be subjected to an additional punishment in the discharge of a public duty.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

A GREAT improvement has been introduced into this Bill. The most effective power possessed by the County Courts, that, indeed, by which only they are enabled to compel payment of debts, is the power to imprison for disobedience to an order to pay, unless the defendant satisfies the court that he does not pay because he cannot pay. This power, which it was impossible to take from the County Courts without paralysing them, was objected to as drawing an invidious distinction between small debtors and great debtors, when the latter are relieved from liability to imprisonment for debt, and there was great danger lest the popular tribunal should be practically destroyed for the sake of avoiding a seeming inequality. The difficulty has been removed by a process of "levelling up." The Bill that abolishes imprisonment for debt extends to the Superior Courts the same power to imprison for contempt in non-obedience to an order as is possessed by the County Courts. Where after judgment a debt is not paid at a time ordered by a court or a Judge, the defendant may be summoned to show cause why he should not be imprisoned for such contempt. If he satisfies the Judge that he had not ability to obey the order, he will be discharged, of course; but otherwise he may be imprisoned for a limited time.

A very foolish argument against imprisonment for debt has been founded on the small number of such imprisonments. But the effect of fear of it is forgotten. It is the knowledge that he might be sent to gaol if he do not pay that keeps many a man honest who would readily escape the obligation if he knew he could do so with impunity. The efficacy of punishment cannot be measured by the number of those who suffer it. The question is, how many does the dread of it deter from crime? The relaxation of severity in the law of debtor and creditor has been undoubtedly attended with an enormous increase of fraudulent debtors, and the pending Bill will doubtless largely increase their number.

CLERKS OF ASSIZE.

THE report of a committee, consisting of Mr. Justice BRETT, Mr. SCLATER-BOTH, and Mr. M. LAW, appointed by the Treasury to inquire into the duties and salaries of clerks of assize has been made. The committee come to the conclusion that it will be desirable to retain the office of clerk of assize, but that it would be expedient to prescribe that persons appointed to these offices should have had some degree of legal training, i.e., that he should be a barrister or certificated attorney of three years' standing, or should have served for a similar period in a subordinate office on circuit. The committee consider that a salary of 1000*l.* per annum is more than sufficient to secure the services of officers properly qualified to fill those posts, and they recommend that the salaries of the clerk of assize on the Home, Western, Oxford, Midland, and Norfolk circuits, should, as vacancies occur, be reduced to a sum not exceeding 800*l.* per annum. As regards the Northern Circuit, they state that if the duties of the clerk of assize remain, as at present, limited to the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, a sum of 500*l.* per annum would afford a sufficient remuneration. They do not see any reason for an alteration in the salaries of 500*l.* per annum each, now received by the clerks of assize on the two Welsh circuits. The committee further propose that the additional salary of 100*l.* a year, which the clerk of assize can now assign to one of his officers whom he may select to act as his deputy, should be discontinued on the death or resignation of the officers at present receiving these extra allowances. They are of opinion that the power thus placed in the hands of a clerk of assize to remunerate one of his officers more highly than the others might be exercised with partiality, and that it has a tendency to diminish that responsibility which rightly belongs to his office, and to induce him to delegate to others duties properly devolving upon himself.

THE TRADES UNION BILL.

THERE was a gratifying unanimity of opinion in the House of Commons upon the principle of this Bill, and very little difference about its details. Both sides of the House frankly admitted

1. The equal right of employers and workmen to combine for the regulation of wages.

2. That such combinations were not in themselves opposed to public policy, nor operated in restraint of trade, within the legal meaning of that term.

3. That associations for such a purpose were entitled to the same protection from the law for their persons and their property as is given to all other lawful associations.

4. That there should be some recognition by law of such associations, so as to enable them to act in a corporate capacity. But there was and is much diversity of opinion what should be the form of such incorporations. The Bill simply proposes the extension to them of the Friendly Societies Acts; but many friends of the Trades Unions, and notably the Economist, object to this, as being to some extent a misrepresentation of their character. The Acts in question are constructed purposely to promote certain objects of charity; but the main purpose of the Trades Unions is not charity, and there is no reason why they should have the benefit of Acts designed with a different object than a joint-stock company, or a cricket club, or any other association.

Thus all the main principles for which the LAW TIMES has contended on behalf of the Trades Unions are conceded; and in framing the measure which Mr. BRUCE again promised on behalf of the Government, they must form its foundation. It will then, we doubt not, be seen that the plan here proposed for the incorporation of Trades Societies, very much upon the model of the Companies Act 1862, is the most feasible and the best calculated to give permanent satisfaction.

A good deal was said about the absence of legal protection for their property, and so little is this point understood, that the HOME SECRETARY has brought in a short Bill to give such protection pending the production of the general scheme.

But there is no need for it. The trades unions possess precisely the same protection, neither less nor more, as all other associations not enrolled under the Friendly Societies Acts. Certain summary jurisdiction is given to magistrates by those Acts for the protection of the funds of enrolled societies; but this is not a substitute for the general protection provided by the criminal law. A trades union can punish a defaulting treasurer or secretary by indictment, and Mr. RUSSELL GURNER's Act of last session removes the only obstacle that practically impeded such a prosecution. At this moment every trades union possesses the identical protection against embezzlement by its servants which is possessed by every other employer. To say, then, as Mr. HUGHES and other speakers ventured to say, that their funds are unprotected, was to mislead the House and the country, for Mr. HUGHES, who is a lawyer, cannot but know that the law gives to them precisely the same protection as it gives to him. It was surprising that of the many lawyers in the House not one rose to correct this mis-statement, and it is still more strange that it was not noticed by Mr. BRUCE, who also must have been better informed.

The real grievance of the Unions, though it was not the ostensible one, is that they have not the help of the Friendly Societies Acts for the recovery of the subscriptions from their own members, nor powers wherewith to compel observance of their rules. It is to obtain this, and not for protection against embezzlement, that the privilege of enrolment under the Friendly Societies Acts is so eagerly sought, and it would have been more candid in Mr. HUGHES so to have told the House and the public.

On all sides doubts were expressed whether it would be practicable to repeal the Combination Act without some enactment bringing within the criminal law certain offences of which some of the trades unions have been guilty, and for which the criminal law now makes no provision. It needs but small acquaintance with the criminal law in the letter and in practice to determine this question. Try it thus. The end sought by all the offences made punishable by the Combination Act, is to deter "knobsticks," as they are called (that is to say, men willing to work on other terms than those prescribed by the Union), from pursuing their employment. To this end divers forms of "molestation" are devised, such as dogging the steps, hooting and hissing, gestures and words which, though not punishable by the present law, are not the less invasions of that personal liberty of act and thought which is the right of the poorest labourer because they are inflicted by persons of his own class. This wrong it is that the general criminal law fails to meet, and it will be absolutely necessary to the security of the workman from oppression by his fellows that sufficient provision should be made for it simultaneously with the repeal of the Combination Act.

SPECIAL BAILS BILL.

We have received the following letter:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—As a specimen of the esteem in which the Profession is held, I beg to call your attention to what is reported to have been uttered by the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain on the occasion of moving the second reading of this Bill. His Lordship is reported to have said that by an old Act of Parliament (alluding, no doubt, to the 4 Will. & M. c. 4) no person was allowed to take special bail in the country who was an attorney or solicitor, but that now it was not worth any person's while to take the office who was not an attorney or solicitor, and the object was to enable attorneys and solicitors to take special bail. In other words, now that the office and duties of commissioners for taking special bail was utterly worthless in a pecuniary sense, it is discovered that they are eligible to fill the office. Is any comment necessary? I abstain from making any. I leave you to deal with the subject as you may deem right. S. J. H.

WHAT WE SHALL HAVE TO PAY.

THE British taxpayer is in for it. When the Budget was propounded, there was so much dexterous dealing with the various duties henceforth to be levied, and especially with the periods for future payments, that very few in or out of Parliament had formed any definite notion when they would be called upon to put their hands into their pockets to meet the demands of the State. Tables were authoritatively published purporting to show when the taxes of the next twelvemonth were to be paid. But strings of figures are read by few, and understood by fewer, and at this moment probably not one taxpayer in a hundred has any definite conception in his mind of what the law has imposed upon him. It is the law now, and the statute is before us, and a summary of its provisions will doubtless astonish many of our readers.

The Act that is to wring so vast a sum from the taxpayers in so short a time is c. 14 of 32 & 33 Vict., Part 1 of which relates to the Customs, and does not concern the present inquiry. We turn to Part 2 which relates to the income-tax, land-tax, and inhabited house duty.

The sums assessed to the income-tax for the last year are to be taken as the annual value for assessment during the present year, but subject to increase or diminution in the same manner as the original assessment.

The 8th section then proceeds to repeal the provisions for collecting the house duty, land-tax, and income-tax quarterly, and enacts that the duties for the year ending April 5, 1870, shall be payable on the 1st Jan. next.

Observe the effect of this. In practice, the taxes for the year ending April 5 next would be collected, one half in November and the other half in May; that is to say, half the income-tax for the current year would not be payable until the 6th April next, and would not be in fact collected until May or June. But, according to the text of Mr. Lowe's new law, it must be paid in full in January next, thus anticipating the period of payment by four or five months, and compelling that payment at the period of the year when most persons have more demands upon them and less receipts to meet them than at any other season.

But this is not the only hardship inflicted by the new law. Another screw is to be applied to the unhappy taxpayer in this same black month of January. The assessed taxes, as well as the income tax and land tax, are to be paid in January in full. This is effected by a process even more stringent. The assessed taxes are converted by sect. 16 into excise duties, for which licences are to be taken out on the 1st Jan. for the ensuing year, so that we shall be called upon in September to pay the half year's assessed taxes for this year; in January the whole year's assessed taxes for next year, and in April the remaining half year's assessed taxes for the present year—practically two years' payments will be demanded in one year, and the greater portion of them in the most inconvenient month of the whole year in which to provide the money to meet them.

We shall make this complicated arrangement more intelligible by an instance.

B. is assessed, say, at 20*l*. for assessed taxes, at 50*l*. for income-tax, at 10*l*. for land tax. As it would have been but for Mr. Lowe's scheme, he would have paid this 80*l*. thus:—

1869. In September £40

1870. In May 40

But according to the new Act he will be compelled to pay as follows:—

1869. In September, half year's assessed taxes £10

1870. In January, one year's assessed taxes, 20*l*.; one year's income-tax, 50*l*.; one year's land tax, 10*l*. 80

In May, half a year's assessed taxes, arrears of the present year 10

The Budget offers many and considerable improvements in taxation, but they will be dearly purchased at the price of so terrible a screw in the collection as is described above, and the working of which is as yet but imperfectly understood by those who are to be subjected to it.

In January there will be such an outcry from the taxpayers as England has not heard for many a year. A general election would then assuredly leave the Government in a minority. It is fortunate that they are not likely to be compelled to appeal to the country at a time when it will be smarting under the infliction of two years taxes levied in three months.

COUNTY COURT APPEALS.

It is not often that we find a County Court Judge reviewing a decision of a court of appeal which has reversed his own judgment. As a general rule of course there can be no practical utility in this, and the Judge who would make it a practice would simply waste the public time. There should be good grounds for making any comment upon the judgment of a court of appeal, and the question is, what we are to consider good grounds.

Mr. FALCONER, of the Welsh Circuit, has afforded us some material upon which we may arrive at a reasonable conclusion. He gave judgment in a case which was pretty much one for a jury, involving as it did a claim for demurrage, and the question being whether certain delay in unloading was excusable or not. In the first place his Honour pointed out that it is a very easy matter for a case stated for appeal to go to the court above in a defective condition. He takes occasion to say, "At first I thought the case was too hastily prepared. This arose from a rule of the courts, that the appeal case shall be drawn up by the parties and settled, in case of dispute, by the Judge; and also to an absurd provision which interferes with a prudent delay, namely, that the case shall be signed in open court. So that if I do not sign the case in one week of a month, I cannot sign it until four weeks afterwards."

This being so, we think that wherever the case is one principally of fact, and where there can be any doubt as to the construction to be put upon the facts, it should be open to a County Court Judge further to inform the court of appeal. There are obvious objections to such a proposal, the main one being that it might be abused; but we think that a restatement of the case might be permitted in certain cases, and the first thing to be done is to abolish the provisions now existing as to stating and signing cases for appeal.

PASTURAGE ON HIGHWAYS.

A CORRESPONDENT writes as follows to the Wisbech Advertiser:

Sir,—I think the paragraph which you copied from the LAW TIMES into your Market Telegraph last Saturday calculated to mislead many of your readers, as they are very likely to infer from it that they may stock the sides of our ordinary roads without infringing on the laws, if they keep their cattle off the metalled parts, in which I think they will soon find themselves mistaken, as it is quite clear to my mind that the grass sides of the roads in this neighbourhood are as much highways, or parts of highways, as the metalled parts, and are so pleasant for the public to canter along when on horseback, or to drive cattle on, that I wonder the surveyors are allowed to place their heaps of materials upon them so much as they are, for which they are just as liable to be fined as those who stock them, and they are further liable for any damage which they may occasion; for example, supposing they were to cause a conveyance to be upset, and a man was injured for life, or killed, leaving a widow and children, either he or they would have just as great a claim on the surveyors for compensation, as we so frequently hear of against the companies in railway accidents. Then, again, footpaths are as much highways as any other parts of our roads, and I cannot conceive where the owner of the herbage on the sides of highways can have a right to depasture them, except where roads run across commons or other waste lands; for if a highway is defined by fences (no matter how wide it may be) no one has a right either to obstruct it or encroach upon it. The only way I can see for the owners of the herbage lawfully to avail themselves of it is by mowing.

The writer of the above was evidently unaware of the decision upon which the paragraph quoted from this journal was based. If he, and those similarly interested, will refer to the case of Golding v. Stocking, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 479, it will be found that persons entitled to the pasturage on the sides of the highway may turn out their cattle in charge of some person whose duty it is to see that they do not stray on to what is commonly called the metalled part of the highway. The cattle in that case were sent by their owner under the control of a keeper, in order that they might depasture on the sides of the highway, and the contention before the justices was that the cattle could not be said to have been found straying within the meaning of the 25th section of the Highway Act 1864. The justices found on the evidence, however, that nine of the bullocks were seen straying upon the metalled part ("central or gravelled" is the expression used), and that the appellant was not at the time, as to those nine bullocks, legally exercising the right which he had of the pasturage which existed on the sides of the highway. The justices further found that the keeper of the bullocks was at the time in a field divided from the highway by a ditch, and forty yards off the nearest bullock. Accordingly they convicted the appellant, on the ground that his cattle were straying on the highway. The Chief Justice, at the close of the argument, said, "The justices might very easily have found the other way on the facts of the case, but we cannot say they were wrong." And in the course of the argument the same Judge said, "A stranger's cattle might be found straying on the sides of the highway, though that could not be said of the cattle of a person having a right of pasture there, as the appellant has, but the cattle of the appellant may be found straying on the highway itself, though not on the sides, and that is found to be the case here. If his cattle had been pasturing on the sides under competent charge, and through some accident they escaped for a short time from under the charge of their keeper and got on the highway, that would not be a case for conviction by the magistrates, but if the cattle are found straying on the highway for any length of time, the case would be different.

The question is one of fact for the magistrates to determine. It would be hard not to allow the proprietors of these roads to depasture their cattle on the sides, but they must place them under sufficient charge to prevent their straying."

This makes the matter sufficiently clear, and disposes of the doubts entertained by the writer of the letter which we have quoted above.

THE INCLOSURE OF COMMON LAND.

THE Inclosure Commissioners, it appears, are not doing so well as it was hoped they would. We are not at all surprised at their failure, because they had imposed upon them a most difficult task. The commons throughout England are not so situated that their utility and public advantage can be appreciated at a glance. It is in every case a work of difficulty to discover the variety of interests which may be affected by inclosing any particular portion of common land. In the first place, the persons who enjoy rights of way and common rights of pasture and the like, may not be numerous, their places of residence may be scattered, and it must be a matter of very considerable labour to find them out and ascertain from each individual what his wants and desires really are. The Commons Select Committee on this question point this out in their recently issued report. They say that the commissioners sitting in London can have few opportunities of obtaining local information by other channels than the reports of the assistant commissioners, and they think that the reports presented to Parliament should contain more precise and minute statements of the information on which the provisional orders are framed, such as the population of the neighbourhood, the number of persons attending the meetings, the distance of the waste or common land from the towns and villages within reach, the particulars of any other ground available for recreation, and of other cottage gardens and field allotments, and any other details calculated to enable Parliament to judge of the grounds on which the provisional orders relating to public allotments are based. And the committee recommend better publicity of the notices of meetings given by the assistant commissioner.

These are very judicious and necessary recommendations. But we think that a more important matter is the mode in which the local inquiry is conducted. The assistant commissioner to whom this work is assigned is commended by the committee, but it appears that in the only case in which a complaint has found its way to the committee, the assistant commissioner stated that he set apart the small extent of an acre, out of the 1904 acres of common which were to be inclosed for the following reasons—because a larger amount would not be used; because the population never resort to the common for exercise and recreation; because there are other commons where the children and grown-up people can rove about, and because the ground is steep. This single acre of recreation ground he intended specially as a playground for the children of the school. On the other hand, the parish clerk and the schoolmaster testified that the common is a general resort of the inhabitants for exercise, for games, and for the meetings of their friendly societies; that there is no other common within five or six miles to which the public are allowed free access; that one acre is not sufficient either for the children or the adults; that seven acres equally suitable are adjoining, and that there is much dissatisfaction among the inhabitants at the small extent set apart for recreation, which finds vent in the remark that when the common is inclosed they will be as badly off as in a town, and will not have even the accommodation which they would get in a town in the way of recreation ground.

Now it would seem from this that the assistant commissioner arrives at his conclusions by the unaided light of his own view of the wants of the vicinity. If such a flagrant disregard of the state of things as it appears on reliable evidence occurs in the only instance in which alarm has been taken and a complaint made, what is the probability as regards other places? We should have expected that the assistant commissioner would have been inclined rather in the other direction, and to compensate liberally those who are being deprived of what may be called a natural privilege attaching to the locality.

The committee conclude their report by expressing the opinion that the annual Inclosure Bill requires the constant attention of Parliament. In this we heartily concur. We would further recommend that the condemnation of common lands to inclosure should in each instance be made the subject of a proper inquiry, the assistant commissioner being empowered to hold a court, and persons compelled by subpoena to give evidence before him.

CONTRACTS TO LOAD AND UNLOAD.

A CASE of Nelson v. Richards, recently before the Queen's Bench, but not reported, raises a question upon the construction of a contract to deliver to consignees within a reasonable time, and it was there decided that unless there is an express clause providing for contingencies, the delivery must be made subject to contingencies. There the facts were these: A ship, the Rivulet, arrived at Swansea, on Friday morning, the 2nd Oct., at eight o'clock, laden with calamine or oxide of zinc. She was not discharged until Saturday, the 17th Oct. She might have been discharged in six days if her discharge had commenced on her arrival, but seven other vessels, laden with zinc ore for the same consignee as the consignee of the Rivulet, had arrived in port before the Rivulet and four of the seven arrived the same day. The "unloading" in the terms of the charter-party was to be "through the charterer's agency at Swansea as expeditiously as the custom of the port would allow, for which special arrangements were made." The ore was unloaded into barges, and the distance they had to traverse was about three miles, and through locks. The unloading was accomplished expeditiously and with as much despatch as this mode of discharge permitted, and so far, "unloaded" with all reasonable despatch. But this despatch related only to the unloading, that is the taking of the ore out of the vessel and the claim for demurrage, for which the action was brought, depended on the delay preceding the unloading. The consignees took the vessels in turn, and employed as many barges as they could get.

Looking at this case in connection with previous decisions, we see that a nice distinction may exist where states of facts are somewhat different. In the above case the court said that the charterer could not be taken to have contracted that the port should be free, and that if the shipowner had desired to protect himself against possible delay by the happening of any contingencies he should have had a clause inserted in the charter-party.

The previous decisions are not numerous. The earliest that we know of—Rodgers v. Forresters, 2 Camp. 483—decided that if the freighter of a ship employed to bring a cargo of wine into the port of London, covenant to unload in the usual and customary manner at her port of discharge, he is not liable for detention of the ship in the London Docks, if she is unloaded in her turn into the bonded warehouses. There, however, there was a particular custom, that ships should unload in rotation. "The wines," said Lord Ellenborough, "might have been landed sooner, by an immediate payment of the duties; but since the bonding system was introduced, this has ceased to be the usual and customary mode of unloading a cargo."

Another case in the same volume, at p. 488, is that of Burnester v. Hodgson, and comes near the principal case which we have already mentioned. The facts were very similar to those in Rodgers v. Forresters, Chief Justice Mansfield holding, indeed, that the two cases were not distinguishable. It was therefore held that the consignee was not liable to make compensation to the owner of the ship in the nature of demurrage for any delay occasioned by the crowded state of the London Docks, although the cargo might have been landed sooner if the duties had been immediately paid.

This case, however, is apparently in conflict with a third case on the point, occurring in the same volume—Randall v. Lynch, p. 352. It was laid down there that if by a charter-party leave is given to detain the ship a certain number of days for the purpose of discharging her cargo, this amounts to a covenant on the part of the freighter, that he will not detain her longer; and further that the vicissitude of the crowding of the London docks was one for which the freighter was liable to the shipowner in respect of the delay in unloading. Lord Ellenborough said, "The question is whether the detention of the ship arising from the inability of the London Dock Company to discharge her is, in point of law, imputable to the freighter; and I am of opinion that the person who hires a vessel detains her if at the end of the stipulated time he does not restore her to her owner. He is responsible for all the various vicissitudes which may prevent him from doing so. . . . The defendant is as much responsible for the want of a berth, as if it had arisen from tempestuous weather, or any other cause."

The reader will, of course, perceive that in this last case there was a contract of hiring for a fixed period, so that the question of reasonable delay did not arise. But from the decision we conceive that it could be forcibly argued that the freighter would be liable for the delay where there was no express contract, the condition being implied that all vicissitudes which give rise to claims for demurrage should impose a liability on the freighter.

In other cases the question what is a vicissitude which may reasonably cause delay, for which neither party can be made responsible to the other, has been somewhat arbitrarily decided. In Adams v. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, 28 L. J. 33, C. P. which was an action for not loading in the customary manner, the Judge was held rightly to have directed the jury not to take into consideration a delay occasioned by a strike among the colliers, and a dispute with a railway company, along whose line the coal had to be brought to the port for shipment, these not being matters contemplated by either party when the charter party was made. Chief Justice Cockburn said, "It happened that extraordinary circumstances arose which prevented the defendants getting their coals down to the vessel. That cannot now avail them. They ought to have protected themselves by a clause to that effect in the charter-party."

Mr. Justice Lush is said to have held that this case and another, to which we shall refer, were not applicable to the case of Nelson v. Richards, but in our opinion, there is very little in the distinction drawn between contracting to supply a cargo and contracting to unload, that the one is absolute, the other contingent. Could it be said that a contract to supply a cargo is invariably absolute? The question, however, is now concluded by authority, and must be considered as no longer open for discussion, for Keaton v. Pearson, 31 L. J. 1, Ex., established that a contract to load with usual despatch means "usual despatch of persons who have a cargo in readiness for the purpose of loading," and that if the party contracting to supply the cargo is prevented from obtaining it within a reasonable time, the loss must be his. This being so, we will only say that there are some cargoes which could not be kept in readiness. In Keaton v. Pearson, the cargo was coal. But what if it had been perishable?

The distinction, however, must be held sound on authority, and the deduction must be, first, that there can be no excuse for not loading at the time agreed upon, and secondly, that whilst delay may be excusable in unloading, the question of what contingencies will excuse delay is a question for the jury. If a time of hiring be agreed upon, all detention after that time must be paid for as demurrage, the fact of there being no berth available offering no excuse: (Randall v. Lynch, sup.) But where no time of hiring is agreed upon, the case of Nelson v. Richards recognises that contingencies must be considered, and that the crowded state of the docks is a contingency which will be taken into calculation.

COUNTY COURT ADVOCACY.

It is a delicate matter for a journal whose interests are absolutely identical with the interests of a profession to point out blots in that profession, and the conduct of its members. As a rule we are very reluctant to do it, but regarding the County Courts as a developing institution, we consider the duty incumbent upon us to correct abuses where they exist, and by deprecating what we think improper to check a repetition of the offence.

County Court advocacy is at present very largely in the hands of solicitors who, in the great majority of instances, emulate the courtesy and forbearance of the Bar, and leave really nothing to be desired. The occasions, however, on which counsel come into collision with one another and with the learned Judge, are very rare. This cannot be said with regard to the other branch of the Profession, and until it can be said there will always be some barrier to the solicitors attaining the object of the ambition of so many of them. But we cannot say that this result is wholly owing to the solicitors. We have one instance before us which shows that a Judge may, in a great degree, govern the behaviour of those who practise before him. That it is hard to leave untouched an obstreperous advocate, we allow, but the temptation to meet such an one with his own weapons can rarely be submitted to without loss of dignity.

From a western court a local reporter sends us the following information: "It is a well known fact," he says "that Judge SAUNDERS and Mr. Attorney JOLLIFFE seldom meet without having a mutual 'go-in.' This may be all very well as a vent-peg for a lawyer who has a losing cause, or as a safety-valve for the wrought-up feelings of a Judge, whose ears are bored day after day with long and tedious cases, and some excuse may even be found in the fact that these passing flings between the Bench and the Bar afford amusement to the public, who generally swallow them with a great deal of gusto, but surely the unfortunate client who is in waiting is a subject for commiseration. If his case is to be left to the consideration of a jury, ten to one but they are listening to the legal retort courteous, instead of reviewing the arguments. Again, a Judge would be more than human, and Judges are but human, if he failed to give a combative lawyer a slap in the face when the opportunity presented itself, even if it were at the expense of a client; and an attorney would possess a more peaceable disposition than is usually exhibited if he did not at once destroy any favourable consideration that may have existed for his client, by returning an answer that must have the effect of raising the judicial ire. To his Honour it must be particularly trying, after sitting hour after hour, in a crowded room with the thermometer at 90, to have inflicted upon him a long-winded statement of the case of an hour's duration, that might have been laid before him with equal force and clearness in ten minutes; but at the same time it must be particularly mortifying to Mr. JOLLIFFE to be, in the middle of what appears to him to be an elegant peroration, suddenly pulled up with a remark from his Honour that raises a laugh at his expense in court among those who are only too pleased to see the humiliation of better men than themselves; or to be told in the midst of what he considers an acute examination of a witness, that in the judicial opinion, the question he has just put is an absurdity. If Mr. JOLLIFFE would consider that time is made, not only for slaves, but for men of business, and, accordingly, cut it short, all this would cease."

According to this local observer the fault is on the side of the attorney, but it is somewhat difficult to come to that conclusion on looking through the report of a case occurring at the court. We shall quote, however, not for the purpose of founding on the quotations any judgment of our own, but for the edification and amusement of our readers. The amusement will, no doubt, be as much caused by the kind of thing which law reporting is in the provinces, as by the eccentricities of the persons engaged in the scene.

Mr. JOLLIFFE called the attention of the jury to the Six Carpenters' case. We here quote:

His Honour.—Tell the jury what year that case was decided in.

Mr. Jolliffe.—That can't affect the decision. His Honour.—Well, tell them. Tell them that it was some centuries ago (derisive laughter in court).

Mr. Jolliffe.—That does not, for one single moment, alter the case. (To the jury): It is right and proper for me to tell you, and I hope and trust that I shall be allowed to make any observations without the slightest unnecessary interruption or annoyance—that in quoting this case I am quoting one of the leading cases of the land as bearing upon this point.

Juryman (of an inquiring turn of mind): We should like to know what year 't was decided in.

His Honour.—Oh, never mind, that makes no difference; it is a very old case, but it is established law.

Our readers will judge whether there was any necessity for this piece of banter. But better follows. His Honour asks where the Six Carpenters' case is to be found, and we think there is some cause for being ashamed of the following discussion, the peculiarities of the report notwithstanding:—

His Honour.—Where is the case to be found?
Mr. Jolliffe.—In Law Terms.

His Honour.—No, it is not. (Mr. Jolliffe begins to search a large volume of law.) Here, let me have the book; perhaps you haven't looked into it before, and I'll tell you.

Mr. Jolliffe (not quite certain, but near the mark).—In Coke's Reports.

His Honour.—No, it isn't; it's Cooke's. (Audience, whose sympathies lie with the defendant, go into ecstasies at Mr. Jolliffe's discomfiture.)

Mr. Jolliffe (who doesn't relish matters).—Well, wherever it's reported, it can make no difference; it is the highest authority in the case.

His Honour.—Well, you have not told us yet what you want it for; go on!

Upon this again we will say nothing, but proceed to a point in the proceedings where the Judge and a boy in the audience have it all to themselves. The reporter tells us:

A small model, made from a cigar box, was put in to show the alterations done to the premises.

His Honour (viewing it humorously).—That is the house that—Sharp boy in the audience (promptly).—Jack built!

His Honour (facetiously).—No; the six carpenters. (Roars of laughter from appreciative listeners.)

The most marvellous part of the whole business, however, seems to have been the effect of the verdict of the jury for the defendant, the simple question involved relating to a breach of an agreement to repair. We are told that "on the announcement of the verdict there was loud and long-continued cheering, which the officers of the court found it impossible to check for some time, and immediately afterwards a peal of the church bells rang out, notwithstanding the late hour of the night."

And finally, to point the moral of this singular history, the reporter says, "This trumpery case was begun at twelve o'clock and finished at twenty minutes to ten. Mr. JOLLIFFE exhausted an hour and five minutes in opening it and fifty minutes in reply, thus occupying nearly two hours, or 20 per cent. of the time spent on the whole case."

COURTS-MARTIAL.

THERE are several points of interest and importance in the second report of the Courts-Martial Commission. The commissioners express their conviction, founded on the evidence of soldiers of all ranks, that, though there may be defects requiring correction, these courts have the confidence of the army, and are satisfactorily spoken of even by those who have suffered from their jurisdiction. The evidence laid before the commissioners has convinced them that military law as laid down in the Acts of Parliament and the Articles of War is in a complicated state, and that not only in the courts themselves, but even in the highest military departments, there is often much difficulty in arriving at a just conclusion, owing to the different sources to which reference has to be made. His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has expressed an opinion that the frequent reassembling of courts-martial for the purpose of revising their proceedings is attributable mainly to the difficulty which the courts often experience in ascertaining the meaning of the Mutiny Act and Articles of War, and his Royal Highness strongly recommends that both should be revised, with a view to their being rendered more clear and simple. Other authorities cited agree in this opinion. The task of consolidating military law should be undertaken, the commissioners think, on the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government.

The commissioners advert to the opinion so often expressed that courts-martial are inadequate, as at present constituted, to deal with difficult questions of law which frequently arise in the course of military trials. Two remedies have been proposed—the one that the president of every general court-martial should be a barrister; the other, that more attention should be paid to the education of officers in military law, and that the office of deputy judge advocate should invariably be filled by a barrister or by an officer on whose advice in legal practice, and especially on points of legal evidence, the court could at all times confidently rely. The commissioners adopt the latter view. They think that, inasmuch as courts-martial are tribunals for the trial of issues, the determination of which must, to a great extent, depend upon the custom and usages of war and of military service, the president and all the members of the court should have a practical knowledge and experience in those usages, and that it is therefore essential to maintain strictly the military character of the court. At the same time no means should be neglected of securing to those who come under its jurisdiction, as far as may be practicable, the protection afforded to a prisoner on his trial before one of the ordinary courts of law. It is recommended, therefore, that courts-martial should in the main be constituted as at present, and that the duties of deputy judge advocate should continue to be discharged as heretofore, but that in all appointments to that office, a competent knowledge of the laws of evidence, and of the procedure in the ordinary criminal courts, should be considered an indispensable qualification. It is also recommended that every subaltern officer, before sitting as a member of a court-martial, and previous to each step of promotion, should pass an examination before a board, of which a deputy-judge advocate, or some one deputed by the Judge Advocate General, should be a member, and conduct that part of the examination which relates to the duties of a member of a court-martial.

Whenever it is practicable, cases of embezzlement of more than common importance should be submitted to an ordinary criminal court, as having more experience in dealing with such charges, and greater facilities for thoroughly investigating them.

It is recommended that the present rule of examining witnesses in general courts-martial, which requires that questions shall be submitted in writing to the president of the court, previous to being put to the witness, shall be relaxed. It is clearly the duty (the commissioners say) of the president and Judge-Advocate to protect the prisoner from any improper question, and they recommend that wherever the services of a sworn shorthand writer can be conveniently obtained, and a full and accurate record of the proceedings thereby secured, the examination be conducted viva voce as in our ordinary courts. By the present Articles of War a prisoner under trial before a general court-martial is not entitled as of right to a list of the witnesses to be brought against him. The commissioners think that this right should be conceded to him, and a list of the witnesses, together with the charges, should be furnished to him as a matter of right a reasonable time previous to the trial, and that he should also have reasonable notice of any additional witnesses whom in the course of the proceedings it may be found desirable to adduce.

When a prisoner is found not guilty, the finding should be announced in open court, and the prisoner immediately discharged. In the case of a verdict of "guilty," the verdict should also be announced in open court, and the sentence declared. The prisoner should be detained in custody, but the sentence should not be further carried out until the legality and propriety of the verdict and sentence have been examined by the proper authority.

The following is a summary of the chief alterations which the commissioners recommend:

1. That the Mutiny Act and Articles of War should be carefully redrawn.
2. That a text-book on military law be prepared for the convenience and instruction of officers, and for the use of courts-martial.
3. That a stricter examination of officers in military law be enforced, such examination to be conducted before a board of officers by a deputy-judge advocate, or some one deputed by the judge advocate-general.
4. That the convening officer of a district court-martial be enabled either at his own discretion, or on the application of the prosecutor or prisoner, to require the attendance of a deputy-judge advocate.
5. That for this object the present number of deputy-judge advocates be increased.
6. That with the view to reducing the number of regimental courts-martial enlarged powers be given to commanding officers.
7. That whenever the services of a shorthand writer can be obtained the examination of witnesses before a general court-martial be conducted viva voce.
8. That cases of embezzlement be submitted to the ordinary criminal tribunals, where there are facilities for so doing.
9. That in general courts-martial the lists of witnesses, together with the charges, be furnished to a prisoner as a matter of right previous to trial, and that he should also have reasonable notice of any additional witnesses whom in the course of the proceedings it may be thought desirable to adduce.
10. That the practice of reassembling a court for the purpose of revising their proceedings be discontinued, power being given to the confirming authority in certain cases to commute the sentence.
11. That a regimental court should only be had recourse to when a district court cannot conveniently be assembled, and that it be composed of officers of not less than three years' standing.
12. That the proceedings of all regimental courts be forwarded to the general officer commanding the district.

With regard to military punishment, the commissioners recommend:

1. That one or more central military prisons be established, in which an improved system of military discipline can be carried on, in which separate confinement shall form an indispensable part, and that until that time arrangements should be made with the authorities of civil prisons for the reception of the requisite number of military prisoners, care being taken to separate them as far as possible from the other prisoners.
2. That the term habitual drunkenness as applied to the fourth offence be abolished.
3. That a scale of fines be substituted for the present system of imprisonment for this offence.

4. That such fines constitute a fund for the benefit of the army generally.

5. That the punishment of non-commissioned officers need not necessarily be accompanied by reduction to the ranks.

6. That greater facility be afforded for the discharge of men of bad character.

7. That the practice of "marking" be abolished when altered circumstances referred to in the report will admit of it.—Pall Mall Gazette.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Judgment in three cases, two of much general interest, was given on Tuesday last.

In the Great Western Railway Company v. Sutton, in error from the Exchequer Chamber, the question raised, as to the legality of charging to carriers an exceptional rate for the conveyance of "packed parcels," was one that has been for nearly thirty years past constantly before the courts. The respondent sued the appellants to recover over-charges made by them. The declaration contained counts for money had and received, and on account stated. The circumstances were these:—Sutton was a carrier, and his chief business was to collect parcels at a central office in London. These he packed together according to the places of their consignment, and forwarded them by railway to his country agents for delivery to the various consignees. Such packages, on being declared "packed," were charged by the railway company at the highest rate named in their tariff, and 50 per cent. in addition. At the trial, before Baron Martin, evidence was given for the plaintiff to the effect that various wholesale houses (not carriers) for the accommodation of tradesmen and customers, were in the constant habit of sending "packed parcels" by defendants' railway, and that these were not charged as "packed," but at a less rate. There was no proof that defendants were ever informed that the parcels were packed, but no questions were asked. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. On a bill of exceptions, to the admission of evidence and the summing up by the learned judge, it was held by the Exchequer Chamber (Chief Justice Erle dissenting) that the evidence above mentioned was properly admitted; that the judge was right in directing that there was evidence that defendants had knowingly carried parcels for other persons, "containing goods of a like description and under like circumstances," at a less rate than for the plaintiff; and that in the absence of any evidence that the difference of charge was on account of a difference of the contents of the parcels or of the circumstances under which they were carried, the jury were justified in concluding that the extra charge was within the meaning of and against 7 & 8 Vict. c. iii., s. 50, providing that "no reduction or advance in any charge shall be made partially . . . in favour of or against any particular company or person." A full report of the case will be found in 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 221. Lord Chelmsford delivered judgment, in which Lords Colonsay and Cairns concurred, to the following effect:—There were three questions—(1) Whether there was evidence to go to the jury that the appellants knowingly charged the respondent at a higher rate than the wholesale houses for packed parcels? (2) Whether the evidence stated above was properly admitted? (3) Whether an action for money had and received would lie to recover the over-charge? Now, there was the direct evidence of several persons that hundreds of packed parcels were carried day after day by the appellants for wholesale houses, and this without objection or extra charge. No specific instance in which the appellants were informed that these parcels were "packed" had been proved; but that was not necessary. The appellants could have given notice that packages, unless otherwise declared, would be assumed to be "packed parcels," and charged accordingly. Information of the fact might therefore have been obtained. It was essential that the equality clauses of the Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. iii., s. 50; 10 & 11 Vict. c. cxxvi., s. 53) should be strictly observed, to prevent the favouring of particular parties and a monopoly by the railway companies. Charges had not been made "equally . . . to all persons" for the conveyance of goods "of a like description and quantity . . . and under the like circumstances." The packed parcels, whether of Sutton or the wholesale houses, did not differ in themselves; the only difference was that the persons sending. And it could not be said that Sutton's packed parcels were not carried "under the like circumstances," because he was an intercepting carrier. There was, therefore, a violation of the Acts. The evidence was admissible. It was but general proof, but it was the only means available to prove that for which it was offered. The form of action was right. The case fell within the principle that, under this count, money may be recovered that has been paid unlawfully under compulsion. The judgment on this point in Barendale v. Great Western Railway Company (9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 814) was conclusive that the action will lie. In the present case, the respondent did not complain merely that other customers "have the same benefit for less money" (as it was put by Chief Justice Erle, in Barendale v. Great Western Railway Company, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 838), but that other persons having been charged less, he was entitled to pay only the same charge as they. The judgment of the Exchequer Chamber would therefore be affirmed.

In the case of the Hammersmith and City Railway Company v. Brand and wife, an action was brought by the respondents to recover a sum, which a sheriff's jury, on an inquiry held under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, had assessed as compensation for the depreciation in value of a house belonging to the female respondent through vibration caused by passing trains in the ordinary traffic of the line. The fact was admitted by the appellants, but they denied that the claim to compensation could be supported. The railway crossed a road on a viaduct, near the respondents' house, and the company paid compensation to them for obstruction of light, air, and way, and for damage to their garden by lime-dust during the construction of the railway. The vibration caused no structural injury. No land of the respondents had been taken by the company. The railway was constructed by the appellants, but used exclusively by the Great Western. The court of Queen's Bench, justices Mellor and Lush, held that compensation could not be recovered, claims to compensation under the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts being limited to damage resulting from the execution of the works, and not extending to damage resulting from the carrying on, without negligence, the ordinary business of the company. And the court further expressed an opinion that no action would lie, the act complained of being one authorised by the law: (13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 501; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 130.) In the Exchequer Chamber (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 101; L. Rep. 2 Q. B. 230) the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench was reversed by Baron Bramwell and Justices Keating and M. Smith, Baron Channell dissenting. The grounds of that judgment, as stated by Baron Bramwell, were these: A nuisance had here been created to the occupiers of these premises, which would be actionable at common law. There must be a remedy either by action or under the compensation clauses of the Lands and Railways Clauses Act. The case of Vaughan v. Taff Railway Company, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 394; 5 H. & N. 679, decided that no action would lie in such a case as the present. The remedy must, therefore, be under the Acts referred to. (The case was apparently tried in the courts below as if the damage had been caused by "vibration, noise, and smoke," but on the case before the House of Lords it appeared that the jury had assessed the sum claimed as compensation for damage by "vibration" only.) Lords Chelmsford and Colonsay now gave judgment to the following effect: There had been a difference of opinion among the learned judges who had advised the House. The present case was within the principle of the Caledonian Railway Company v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. H. of L. Cas. 229, and R. v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30, and since the damage complained of was inevitable in the ordinary working of the line, it must be taken to have been sanctioned and contemplated by the Legislature in authorising the construction and use of the line. Baron Bramwell, in his opinion to the House, thought that the case of Vaughan v. Taff Railway Company (ubi sup.) was wrongly decided, but in the judgment of their Lordships there was no remedy by action. The remedy, if any, must then be under sect. 6 or 16 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act (8 Vict. c. 20). Now sect. 6 must be construed to limit compensation to cases where damage was caused by "the construction of the railway and the works connected therewith." And sect. 16 is limited to damage sustained by the exercise of the powers therein conferred. The present case was within neither of these sections. No compensation was given by the Acts, where damage arose from the proper use of the railway. Their Lordships must therefore hold reluctantly, that the respondents were without remedy, and the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber would be reversed. Lord Cairns dissented on these grounds: An action would not lie. The headings to the groups of sections in the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act were fallacious as to their scope. Sect. 16 was not to be limited to compensation for damage by the exercise of the powers immediately before enumerated only. The Legislature must be taken to have considered the railway as a working concern, and to have intended compensation in all cases where damage arose through the working. There might be a difficulty, as suggested by the judges, in assessing the damage done in the present case, but the jury had found a certain sum due, and this the respondents were entitled to recover. Judgment in the Exchequer Chamber was reversed.

The hearing of the case of Foreman v. the Company of Free Fishers and Dredgers of Whitstable was noted in "Sayings and Doings" for July 3. It was a claim by the respondents to anchorage tolls. In Gann v. the Free Fishers, &c., of Whitstable, it had been held in the House of Lords (12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 150) that the company were not entitled to the tolls claimed, because they had failed to prove some corresponding advantage to the public, which would support, as consideration, this limitation of the public right of free navigation on the seas. In the present case, accordingly, the claim was supported by evidence that the company keep, and have long kept, buoys, beacons, and lights, to mark the bounds between the oyster-beds and the anchorage ground, and further that before and since the time of legal memory Whitstable had been a port. The judgments of the Common Pleas and Exchequer Chamber were that the above constituted a sufficient consideration to support the claim to toll (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 747; 18 Ibid 735). There was then an appeal to the House of Lords, on a special case. The Lord Chancellor and Lord Chelmsford (Lord Colonsay concurring) now gave judgment, in accordance with the unanimous opinion of the judges, affirming the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, and dismissing the appeal with costs. Their Lordships considered that the existence of a port was proved, and that this, in connection with the company's ownership of the soil and the immemorial payments, supported the claim to toll.

In the Wicklow Peerage case, a Committee for Privileges met on Monday last. Mr. Serjt. Ballantine (with whom was Mr. Charles Clark) appeared on behalf of Mrs. Howard, the mother of the infant claimant. He said that Mrs. Howard having presented a petition in forma pauperis for the purpose, had had counsel assigned to her on the previous Wednesday. He now asked for an adjournment, in order to give time for the preparation of a case. The House, after consideration, ordered that a printed copy of Mrs. Howard's case should be delivered to the agent for the other claimant on Monday the 19th inst., and the hearing was then adjourned to Thursday the 22nd inst.

The arguments in the case of the Duke of Buccleuch v. Wakefield and another, with a cross appeal, were completed on Tuesday last. These were appeals from a decision of the Court of Chancery, reported in 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 462, and in L. Rep. 4 Eq. 613. The Duke of Buccleuch was represented by Sir R. Palmer and Mr. Freeling; and Mr. Wakefield by Mr. Mellish and Mr. Everitt. Mr. Wakefield is the owner in fee simple of a parcel of land situated in the manor of Plain Furness, in the county of Lancaster, and the appellant, as the lord of that manor, claims the right to work the mines and minerals under the land. Mr. Wakefield claims to be the owner, not only of the surface of the land, but also of the minerals under it. The land in question was part of certain lands inclosed under a private Act, and formed part of those which were sold to pay the expenses of the inclosure. Mr. Wakefield does not dispute the right of the duke to work the minerals under the lands allotted to the customary tenants of the manor, but contends that he has no right to work the minerals under the lands sold for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the inclosure. Owing to the peculiar nature of the minerals and of the surface of the soil, it is alleged that it is impossible to work the minerals without entirely destroying the surface of the land belonging to Mr. Wakefield. Mr. Wakefield complains of the decree of the court below on the ground that it declared the duke entitled to the minerals beneath his land, and the duke complains of it on the ground that it declared that he was not entitled to work the minerals so as to cause a subsidence of the surface of the land belonging to Mr. Wakefield. At the conclusion of the arguments, their Lordships took time to consider. Further consideration postponed sine die accordingly.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

THE following are the only cases of interest that have occurred since those reported in last week's "Sayings and Doings":—

Ryland v. Delisle was heard on Tuesday, July 6. This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench for Lower Canada, reversing on appeal a judgment of the Superior Court of the District of Montreal. The respondent was a shareholder in the Montreal and Bytown Railway Company, and was also the president of the company. In the company's books he was credited with the sum of 1000*l.*, which had been voted to him for his services as president. One Doutre recovered judgment in an action against the company, and took out execution against the property of the company. Doutre transferred his interest in the judgment and execution to the respondent, who thereupon brought an action to recover the sum so due, amounting to 638*l.*, against the appellant, as a shareholder. The action was founded on sect. 80 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, c. 56, which enacts that each shareholder shall be liable to the creditors of the company to an amount equal to the amount unpaid on the stock held by him, until the whole amount of his stock shall be paid up. Now at the time of the action 900*l.* remained unpaid on stock held by him, but he put in a plea of compensation, alleging that the sum owing on the stock was extinguished by the 1000*l.* credited to him in the books of the company. The judgment of the Court of Montreal, in favour of Ryland, was reversed in the Queen's Bench of Lower Canada, the latter court considering that the plea of compensation was good under art. 1183 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada, which is as follows: "Compensation takes place by the sole operation of law between debts which are equally liquidated and demandable, and have each for object a sum of money or a certain quantity of indiscriminate things of the same kind or quality; so soon as the debts exist simultaneously they are mutually extinguished in so far as their respective amounts correspond." Mr. A. H. Thesiger and Mr. H. W. Austin, for the appellant, contended that the statute did more than transfer to the creditors of the company the rights of the company against its shareholders, for it gave a personal and original right to the creditor, which might be exercised even though no right to sue belonged to the company. And no compensation could have accrued, for the company had not called up the amount unpaid on the respondent's shares, and so there was no "debt" from the respondent to the company within the meaning of the code. Mr. Mellish, Q. C. and Mr. W. W. Kerr, contra, for the respondent. Their Lordships now reversed the judgment of the court below, with costs.

On Wednesday, July 7, a question of fraudulent preference was raised in the case of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, v. Evans and another, then heard. This was an appeal from a judgment in the Supreme Court for China and Japan, reversing that of the Court of Hankow. The respondent, the creditors' assignees of M'Kellar and Co., the appellants, were a banking firm, of which M'Kellar and Co. were customers. The appellants were in the habit of discounting bills for M'Kellar and Co. On 25th June 1867, the appellants, there being then several bills running, applied to M'Kellar and Co. for an additional margin of 15 per cent. upon them. On 27th June M'Kellar and Co. paid 10,000 taels as such margin, and on the following day stopped payment. The respondents brought an action to recover a sum of 12,000 taels, alleged to have belonged to M'Kellar and Co., and to have been in the appellant's hands at the date of the adjudication of bankruptcy of the above firm. In their answer, the appellants alleged that the sum of 10,000 taels was in pursuance of a special agreement with M'Kellar and Co., carried to a special account, called the "Margin Bills Account." The court of Hankow gave judgment for the defendants (the bank), on the ground that the transaction was a perfectly justifiable mercantile one; that the bank did not know that M'Kellar and Co. were about to fail on the 27th June, and that there was no fraudulent transfer by M'Kellar and Co. to the bank. The Supreme Court reversed this judgment, considering that, on the evidence, the payment was a fraudulent preference, made voluntarily and in immediate contemplation of bankruptcy. Their Lordships, without calling on Sir Roundell Palmer to reply, reversed the judgment of the court below.

Anderson and others v. The Pacific Fire and Marine Insurance Company, on appeal from the Supreme Court of Victoria, was also heard on Wednesday, July 7. The appellants were the chairman and directors of the Australian Alliance Assurance company, and the original action was brought against them by the respondents to recover the amount of a re-insurance on a ship destroyed by fire. The appellants pleaded that there was a misrepresentation as to a fact material to the risk of the re-insurance. The application for re-assurance was made on a printed form, furnished by the appellants, specifying heads of particulars, the details of which were filled in by the respondents in writing. In this form there was an entry "Valued at 6000*l.*; insured only for 4000*l.*" There was also a list of other offices in which the ship was insured, with amounts. But there was no mention of an insurance for 1500*l.*, which, it appeared, had been effected by a mortgage of the ship, without the knowledge of the respondents. This was the misrepresentation relied on in the plea. A verdict having been found for the appellants on this plea, the respondents subsequently obtained a rule nisi to enter the verdict, on the ground that the representation that the ship was insured only for 4000*l.* did not include insurances made by other persons than the respondents, and the rule was made absolute by the Supreme Court of Victoria. This judgment was now affirmed by their Lordships, without calling on Mr. Mellish, Q. C. for the respondents.

On Thursday, July 8, the only case heard that we need notice was that of Wilson and another v. Trill, on appeal from the Supreme Court of Victoria. The appellants, merchants in Melbourne, purchased from Threlkeld and Co., of Sydney, a large quantity of tea. Part was delivered and payment made generally on account; but acceptance of some parcels was refused, as not corresponding with the tea purchased, and the appellants brought an action against Threlkeld and Co. for non-delivery. Now these parcels having been shipped from Sydney to Melbourne, Threlkeld and Co. drew on the appellants for the amount due on the consignment, transmitted the bills so drawn through the Oriental Bank for collection, and delivered the bills of lading to the bank with direction to deliver the teas to the appellants on their acceptance of the bills. The writ in the action for non-delivery was returned non est inventus, and the appellants then issued a writ of foreign attachment, directed to the respondent as manager of the Oriental Bank, attaching the teas in his hands to answer the claim in the action. The respondent was examined as garnishee, but in his examination he made no reference to a notice previously served on him by one Tange, a merchant of Sydney, to the effect that the teas belonged to him, having been placed in the hands of Threlkeld and Co. for sale by them as auctioneers. An order was accordingly made attaching the teas in the respondent's hands, as if they actually belonged to Threlkeld and Co., and at the request of the garnishee part of the tea was directed by the said order to be sold. The latter part of the order was afterwards set aside for informality, but the attachment was not disturbed. An order in proper form was subsequently issued, but before service of it all the tea had been removed by directions of the central office of the bank in Sydney, from Melbourne to Sydney. An application was thereupon made to the Supreme Court that the garnishee might be ordered to pay damages for having thus parted with the goods, and sent them out of the jurisdiction of the court. The application was opposed, mainly on the ground that the tea was not the property of Threlkeld and Co. The court held that the evidence was clear as to the tea being the property of Tange, and that therefore, though the conduct of the garnishee was unjustifiable, the summons must be dismissed. The appellants were dissatisfied with this judgment, and obtained leave to appeal. But their appeal was now dismissed, without calling on counsel for the respondent.

On the other days of sitting, the hearing of the Indian appeal cases has been continued.

ROLLS COURT.

Among the cases worthy of notice which have occurred during the past week we may mention in the first place Griffiths v. The Cambrian Railway Company, which was a motion, under the 36th section of the Cambrian Railways Act 1868, for liberty to prosecute the decree in the suit by selling certain land, which had been taken from the plaintiff, for the purposes of their undertaking, by the Aberystwith and Welsh Coast Railway Company, which was now merged in the defendant company. The plaintiff had filed his bill in 1867, and obtained a decree for specific performance and a declaration of lien on the land for unpaid purchase-money and costs. The chief clerk, more than a year ago, found that there was due in respect of purchase-money 125*l.*, and in respect of costs 16*l.*, for payment of which it seems the plaintiff had frequently applied, but in vain. The 36th section of the Cambrian Railways Act 1868, under which this motion was made, provides that from and after the passing of the Act no action, suit, or other proceeding against the company, or affecting the property of the company, except proceedings against the company as carriers of goods or passengers, or in respect of liabilities contracted after the passing of the Act, shall be continued or commenced during the period of five years, unless with the leave of the court, and upon such terms as the court may impose. On behalf of the company it was contended, that the motion should be refused, as the effect of giving liberty to proceed before the expiration of the period of five years would be, that all the company's creditors would apply for leave, and the company would be overwhelmed with the costs of such applications. His Lordship said, that as the company had got the plaintiff's land without paying him for it, he must give the plaintiff leave to proceed to a sale under the decree. He would give him liberty to do so, if the money were not paid on or before the third seal in Michaelmas Term.

In Attorney-General v. Merthyr Tydvil Local Board of Health, a motion for a sequestration order was made on behalf of Messrs. Nixon, Taylor, and Co., the relators in the suit. Messrs. Nixon and Co. were the owners of large collieries near Merthyr Tydvil. In September last they obtained an injunction to restrain the nuisance occasioned by the flow of a portion of the sewage of Merthyr Tydvil into the river Taff, which flows through the relators' property. The nuisance was caused by the construction by the defendants of a culvert, in pursuance of a scheme for draining the town. The defendants had not obeyed the injunction, and the nuisance still continued; hence the present motion. There was also a cross-motion on the part of the defendants to dissolve the injunction. In support of the cross-motion it was submitted that the defendants had done all in their power to abate the nuisance, but that the only effectual mode of doing so, was by irrigating a large surface of land with the sewage. With this object in view they had recently acquired three hundred acres of land, and an irrigation scheme was under consideration, but could not possibly be carried into effect before November. His Lordship directed the order for sequestration to issue on the undertaking of the relators not to put it in force until the second seal in Michaelmas Term.

Jones v. Rosher was a suit instituted by the lessee of Rosherville Gardens for specific performance of an agreement made in March 1841, by which Mr. Jeremiah Rosher agreed with the Rosherville Gardens and Pier Company to grant leases of the property, which comprised the gardens, the pier, and some adjoining building land, and the company agreed to build houses, and to make roads on the property. The agreement provided that leases should be granted of the houses as they were respectively finished, at specified rents, and that when the rents amounted to a certain sum, the rest of the property should be demised to the company or their assigns at a peppercorn rent. The Rosherville Gardens and Pier Company performed its part of the agreement long ago, and the company was wound-up in 1859. The property is now vested in the plaintiff for the residue of the term, of which several years are unexpired. Roads were made in accordance with the agreement, but had never been taken over by the parish authorities; they still remained private roads, and were maintained by the plaintiff. The rents reserved by the leases having reached the fixed amount, the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled under the agreement to have the rest of the property, including the roads, demised to him at a peppercorn rent. The only question in dispute was whether he was entitled to have the roads demised to him, or whether he was merely entitled to a right of way over them. It appeared that the plaintiff's reason for desiring to have the roads demised to him, was in order that he might be able to get rid of a cab-stand which was placed in the immediate vicinity of his house. His Lordship suggested a compromise; and it was at length agreed among the parties that measures should be taken for the purpose of giving up the roads to the care of the parish authorities.

Kerr v. Baroness Clinton was a suit instituted for the administration of the trusts of the will of the late Baron Clinton. The only question of importance which arose in the suit was, whether, on the construction of the will, certain mortgages on the real estate of the testator should be paid out of his personal estate, or whether a sum should be raised out of his real estate to pay off the mortgages. By his will the testator directed his personal estate not specifically bequeathed to be applied in the payment of his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and he gave the surplus thereof to his wife absolutely; and in a subsequent part of his will he declared that his trustees should stand possessed of his real estate upon trust, by sale of any portion of it, or of the timber thereon, to raise such sum as his personal estate might prove insufficient for payment of the subsisting mortgages on his real estate. At the time of the testator's death the real estate was subject to charges amounting to 46,500*l.*, of which 40,000*l.* had been charged by his brother, and the remaining 6500*l.* had been charged by himself in payment of his brother's debts, so that no portion of this charge was in reality a debt due from the testator himself. The question for the decision of the court was, whether the Baroness Clinton was entitled to the surplus of the personal estate, after payment of the testator's just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, or whether, by the subsequent clause of the will, the mortgages on the real estate were, by implication, thrown on the personal estate. His Lordship said, that the two clauses of the will appeared to be inconsistent with each other, the former giving Lady Clinton the surplus of the personal estate after payment of debts, &c., and the latter appearing to throw the payment of the mortgages on the personal estate. It was a well-established rule that where two express bequests in a will were contradictory, the latter must prevail; but his Lordship was of opinion that he could not extend that rule, and hold that a charge by implication in the latter part of a will must override an express gift of the surplus in the earlier part of the will. He must, therefore, hold that upon the true construction of the will the personal estate of the testator was not liable to the payment of the mortgage debts, and that Lady Clinton was consequently entitled to the surplus remaining after payment of the testator's just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses.

Re The Accidental Death Insurance Company was an adjourned summons for the appointment of an official liquidator in the place of Mr. George Whiffen, who resigned his office in May last. The chief clerk had decided that Mr. James Cooper was the most suitable person for the office. Thereupon the summons was adjourned into court at the request of Messrs. Foster and Hearne, on behalf of the committee of shareholders of the company. These gentlemen supported the appointment of Mr. Edward Hart as official liquidator; they represented sixty-three shareholders, holding 1130 shares. Mr. Cooper was supported by twenty creditors, claiming 19,000*l.*, and by four debenture holders. The other candidates for the office were Mr. Lowell Price, who was supported by creditors to the amount of 17,000*l.*; Mr. Chatteris and Mr. Louis Henry Evans, who were, comparatively, but slightly supported. His Lordship said that these applications for the appointment of official liquidators were most unsatisfactory. The real question in all these cases was, who was to be the solicitor to conduct the winding-up, and not who was to be the official liquidator, who was generally merely a tool in the hands of the solicitor. The speeches of counsel on these occasions might be stereotyped; they were always the same. These applications ought to be disposed of in chambers, where the real facts were known, instead of being adjourned into court, where they wasted time, beside leading frequently to appeals. His Lordship said that the only question which he had to consider in this case was whether it was more desirable that the shareholders or the creditors should have the conduct of the winding-up. He thought that the shareholders should have it, and for this reason, that as the shareholders could get nothing until the creditors were paid in full they would be more likely to take care of the assets of the company than the creditors, who never cared for anyone but themselves. He should therefore appoint Mr. Edward Hart, whose supporters should have their costs out of the estate; he should also give one set of costs to the supporters of Mr. Cooper and Mr. Price, but none to those of the other candidates.

Wilkinson v. Lindgren of which we gave a short notice two weeks ago, was re-argued, at the request of the charitable institutions to which the testatrix in the suit had given legacies. The suit had been instituted for the administration of the trusts of the will of Mrs. Mary Davison, who died in 1842. By her will, after giving certain legacies to several charitable institutions, the testatrix gave the residue of her personal estate to and among the different institutions thereinbefore named, or to any other religious institutions or purposes as her executors in their absolute discretion might think proper. When the case was heard on further consideration, about a fortnight ago, his Lordship held that the gift of the residue was void for uncertainty, and that the next of kin took it accordingly. The case was now re-argued on behalf of the charities; and his Lordship held that the word "religious" must be construed to refer to purposes as well as institutions, and that the gift of the residue was a good and valid charitable bequest.

V. C. STUART'S COURT.

The following cases worthy of notice have been decided during the past week:

Robinson v. Wood, which came on for further consideration on a summons to vary the certificate. The only question was as to the rate of interest payable on the following warrant of attorney, dated the 2nd May 1864: "The within warrant of attorney is given to secure payment of 1330*l.*, with interest thereon after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per calendar month, on the 2nd June next, judgment to be entered up forthwith; and in case of default of payment of the said sum of 1330*l.* with interest thereon on the day aforesaid, execution or executions, &c., or process, may then issue for the said sum of 1330*l.* and interest, with costs of entering up judgment, &c." The testator died shortly after the execution of the instrument, and judgment was not entered up. The chief clerk had allowed interest at the rate of 5*l.* per month from the date of the instrument. The Vice-Chancellor decided that the agreement to pay 60*l.* for interest was limited up to the 2nd July 1864 for a month and not longer. It was the intention that judgment should be entered up forthwith, when the interest would only be 4*l.* per cent. The certificate must be varied.

In Botten v. Codd, Goodman v. Codd, the question turned upon the right of an illegitimate child to take under a bequest to children. The facts were these:—Henry Goodman, of Harefield, Middlesex, by his will, in Aug. 1857, bequeathed the sum of 200*l.* to Edmund Goodman, the son of Mrs. Ann

Davis, of Pinner, before her marriage with her present husband, and then bequeathed to his three trustees the sum of 500*l.* to invest, and to pay the annual income to the incumbent of Harefield church and the overseers of that parish, and he directed that such income should be laid out by them in the purchase of so much of the best flour, raisins suitable for making puddings, and good beer as would be sufficient to give fifty poor families, inhabitants of the parish of Harefield, a quart of flour, one pound of raisins, and two quarts of good beer to each family, to be distributed on Christmas Eve in every year, and to lay out the surplus, if any, of the income in the purchase of bread to be distributed amongst such poor inhabitants of the said parish as the incumbent and overseers should select. The testator, after directing that the income of his residuary estate should be paid to his brother John for life, bequeathed the capital for the benefit of such children or child of his brothers and sisters, and his deceased wife's sisters, respectively, as should be living at the decease of his brother John, and who should attain the age of twenty-one years, as tenants in common. The testator died in April 1858. He had three brothers and two sisters, all of whom, excepting his brother John, died long before the date of the will, and John Goodman died in March 1867. Ann Davis had two legitimate children, who died long before the date of the will, and she had one illegitimate child, the said Edmund Goodman. The testator was well acquainted with the state of the families of his brothers and sisters at the time of making his will and of his death, and he was well aware, at the time of making his said will, that his sisters were dead, and that Ann had had one illegitimate child, viz., Edmund Goodman, and that he was then living. Under these circumstances, Edmund Goodman, as the only child of the testator's sister Ann, claimed to be entitled to a share of the residuary estate and to participate therein with the children of the testator's brothers and wife's sisters. But on application to the trustees they refused to pay him any share of such residue, and consequently a bill was filed for the administration of the estate and for a declaration that Edmund Goodman was entitled to a share of such residue. The cause now came on upon further consideration. The certificate of the chief clerk stated that excepting Edmund Goodman, an illegitimate child of Ann Goodman, afterwards the wife of William Davis, who was born on Feb. 23, there was no child of any sister of the testator living at the time of the decease of John Goodman; further, that the testator had only two sisters—Mary Ann, who predeceased the testator, an infant, and unmarried, and Ann, the wife of W. Davis, by whom she had two daughters, only one of whom died in her lifetime, an infant, and the other shortly after her death, in 1837, an infant. Ann left her surviving Edmund Goodman, who, on his mother's death, when he was nine years old, went to reside with the testator, and remained with him till he attained sixteen years. The question whether Edmund Goodman was one of the persons entitled to share in the residue was submitted to the court. The Vice-Chancellor held that the residuary bequest only included legitimate children, and consequently that Edmund Goodman was entitled to no share. He ordered the charitable bequest to be paid into court, and carried to a separate account, and gave the parties interested liberty to apply as to the mode of dealing with it.

Willatts v. Flint was a suit for the administration of the estate of William Willatts (deceased). The testator by his will, dated in 1867, after disposing of part of his property, made the following provision:—"Whereas for a long time prior to my marriage, in 1835, I had determined to make over a sum of money to missionary purposes, and resolved to leave the same by will, or otherwise secure the amount to such purposes, and, whereas, I found it to be impracticable to settle the same at my decease, I did on the 19th Nov. 1858, execute a trust-deed to establish a charity called by name 'Mr. Willatts' Poor Man's Guide to Eternal Life,' appointing 100 guides at 4*l.* per annum each, payable at 15*s.* 4*d.* per week. Then followed the names of the trustees, and a request that his executors should from time to time inquire into the administration of the fund, and then the testator gave to his executors all his freehold, leasehold, and personal estate upon trust to pay certain annuities. The question to be decided was whether the leaseholds ought to be converted. The Vice-Chancellor decided that they ought not, and ordered the trustees to pay into court sums sufficient to answer the annuities.

In Collins v. Lewis, James Dew, of Henbury, Gloucestershire, in 1861, by will, gave certain specific legacies, and then devised to the use of his wife for life all his real estate situate at Woodlands, in the parish of St. Briavel's, Gloucestershire, and after her death he gave the same to his trustees, with all the residue of his real and personal estates, upon trust for his niece for life, with remainder for her children. The testator died in 1864. The executors renounced probate, and the niece, who was the testator's heiress-at-law, became legal personal representative, and finding insufficient personality to pay the testator's debts, but considerable real estate, filed this bill for an administration of the trusts. The question was, whether the legacies were payable out of the realty, and it was contended on the authority of Hensman v. Fryer, 1 Rep. 3 Ch. App. that where personal estate is insufficient for the payment of legacies, the legatees have a right to resort to the realty, or to have the debts marshalled.—The Vice-Chancellor, however, being of opinion that Hensman v. Fryer was at variance with the previous authorities, declined to follow it, and made a declaration to the effect that the legatees had no right to resort for payment of their legacies to the real estate.

The causes of Waterlow v. Sharp, and Gardner v. Sharp came on to be heard on further consideration on the 7th and 8th inst. The questions in dispute were first, whether creditors whose debts were not due or payable at the date of the rolling stock deed, viz., the deed of the 19th Jan. 1867, executed by the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company for the benefit of their creditors, were entitled to claim under it; and, secondly, whether creditors holding securities were entitled to prove for the full amount of their debts, as was the rule in Chancery, or merely for the difference between that amount and the value of their security, as was the practice in bankruptcy. The first point involved the question whether debentures to the amount of 3,400,000*l.*, which had fallen due since the date of the deed, were debts which could be proved under it, and was of considerable importance to the other creditors of the company. The words in the deed of Jan. 1867, on which the argument principally turned, were those by which the rolling stock was assigned to trustees upon trust for payment "the creditors of the company of the several sums now payable to or recoverable by them." On the 13th inst., the Vice-Chancellor, who after the conclusion of the arguments had reserved judgment, said, according to the decree, the trusts to be performed being those of the deed of the 19th Jan. 1867, and those being declared in favour of creditors whose debts were then payable, it seems to me that the holders of debentures, the money secured by which was not payable or recoverable till after the date of the deed, are not entitled to payment under the trusts of the deed of anything except interest due to them at that date. Upon the other question, which is as to the construction of the 6th clause of the deed, it appears that the language of the clause is very inaccurate. But the prevailing words are those which plainly direct that the practice of this court as to creditors holding securities is to be followed. If so, those debenture-holders who are entitled to payment under the deed are not bound to deduct the value of their security.

V. C. MALINS' COURT.

Since our last notice a few cases have occurred deserving of record. The first was Re Crookford's Estate. 500*l.* had been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, the Holywell Railway Company desiring to take possession of lands which they required. An abstract was furnished, and requisitions of title were made, the company raising the following question:—William Crookford being originally the owner of the lands in question, had devised them to his wife, "relying upon her doing what is right." She by her will had given all her property to her four single daughters, in a mode to amount to a joint-tenancy; and they now petitioned for a payment of the money out to them on executing a conveyance. The company opposed it on the ground that there was a precatory trust, for although no objects were mentioned, it might be true the widow was well aware what the objects were. In support of this Briggs v. Penny, 3 M. & G. 346, was cited, where there was a gift to the wife with the words, "Well knowing that she will make a good use and dispose of it in accordance with my views and wishes," and there it was held that the words of the bequest created a trust. Besides this, there was great delay in finding a proper abstract. The Vice-Chancellor held that the words of the testator's will created no trust, being far too vague and uncertain, and made the order asked.

Another case was Southwell v. Martin, where trustees under a will refused to pay the plaintiff a legacy (as residuary legatee) on an alleged uncertainty of identity. The case was this: A testator gave a life-estate to his widow and various legacies, "and all the residue of his trust moneys, funds, stocks, and securities, to his trustees (the defendants) upon trust to pay the same unto his niece Ann Haslop, daughter of his brother William Haslop, for her absolute use and benefit." The plaintiff was one of three daughters of the testator's brother William Haslop, but her name was Mary Ann, and she had been married many years before the date of the will, and had become Mrs. Southwell. Her two sisters were named respectively Elizabeth and Martha. The trustees had not paid the fund into court, the 340*l.*, representing the residue, but refused to pay it, suggesting that the testator had several great-nieces, one of whom might be named "Anne," and at all events that there was too much uncertainty as to the plaintiff's identity to justify them in paying her that sum. An indemnity had been offered. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the identity had been sufficiently made out. The plaintiff's name was Ann, and it was common for a person with two names to be called by the second, and the other only used in legal documents. There was no justification for withholding this money, and the defendants must pay it and the costs of the suit. There was no case requiring an indemnity; and one of the parties offering it being a cricket bat manufacturer, a cricket bat was about the value of the indemnity necessary.

The next case of Hayhams v. George, was somewhat of the same character, but much stronger. There a mechanic left his property to trustees for his wife and children, and it produced a clear sum of 350*l.* She was in great distress and repeatedly applied for it without success. It was sworn that in all she had had 4*l.*, on one occasion one trustee giving her 1*s.* and the other 5*s.*, and she was reduced to such straits as to be obliged to sell her bed. It was alleged in extenuation on the defendants' behalf, that they did not know of the widow's situation, and that the solicitor acting for them had been changed.—The Vice-Chancellor expressed himself in the strongest terms as to the defendants' conduct, saying that it was the duty of trustees not recklessly to withhold money, nor to invest it at 1*l.* per cent. interest as they had done. They must pay the costs up to the hearing, and there must be an account.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Judgment was given on the 2nd inst. in a case of great interest and importance with relation to the rules of the Stock Exchange, and the rights and liabilities of sellers and buyers of shares. The declaration stated it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that in consideration that the plaintiff would sell to the defendant certain shares, and would execute and deliver to the defendant a transfer of the said shares, the defendant would buy and accept and pay for the said shares, and would execute the transfer of the said shares, and indemnify the plaintiff from all subsequent liabilities in respect of the said shares, or any calls which might thereafter be made in respect thereof. It then went on to allege that though the plaintiff did sell, &c., and calls were made, the defendant had not indemnified the plaintiff against such calls. The defendant pleaded, among other pleas, a traverse of the agreement stated in the declaration. At the trial a verdict was given for the plaintiff, subject to a special case. The facts, as stated in the special case, were as follows: The shares in question were sold upon the Stock Exchange and according to its regulations. The plaintiff was the seller, but the defendant was not the original purchaser from him, but the ultimate nominee, whose name, in accordance with the custom of the Stock Exchange, had been given to the plaintiff as that of the ultimate purchaser of the shares. On the 14th April 1868, the defendant bought of one Gibson fifty shares in Overend, Gurney, & Co. (Limited), at 15*s.* discount, 15*s.* having been paid. This contract was to be completed on the 27th April, but was carried over to the 15th May, defendant receiving back-wardation for agreeing to its being so carried over. The ten shares which formed the subject of the present action, were ten shares of the fifty so sold as above mentioned. On the 16th May (Overend, Gurney, and Co. having stopped payment on the 11th May), Gibson bought of the plaintiff thirty shares at 16*s.* discount for immediate delivery, and appropriated ten of those above mentioned to the performance pro tanto of his contract with the defendant, and gave the defendant's name as the ultimate purchaser of those ten to the plaintiff. The plaintiff executed a transfer of the shares to the defendant, and sent it to him together with the share certificates. Defendant retained these, but did not execute the transfer. It was contended on the argument of the special case on defendant's behalf, that there was no privity of contract between him and the plaintiff; at any rate there was no proof of such a contract as was alleged in the declaration. The defendant was not the purchaser of the shares from the plaintiff, the prices were different at which plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant to buy. The court at the conclusion of the argument took time to consider its judgment. They now differed in opinion. Baron Cleasby delivered his judgment, in which Baron Channell concurred, but from which Chief Baron Kelly and Baron Pigott dissented. He was clearly of opinion that at law no such contract as that alleged in the declaration arose between the seller and the ultimate nominee. It is of the essence of a contract that there should be a concurrence of intention between the parties as to the terms, upon the subject-matter, the consideration and the promise. There never was any concurrence between the plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant agreed with Gibson to buy at 5-8th discount, the plaintiff agreed to sell to Gibson at 16 discount, that is to say, the plaintiff's seller was not to receive anything, but to pay the buyer. The fact that the transfer contained an untrue statement of the price at which plaintiff transferred did not make any difference. The Master of the Rolls had, no doubt, in Hodgkinson v. Kelly, L. Rep. 6 Eq. 496, decided in a manner at variance with this opinion, but a court of Common Law, though it recognised equitable rights in some cases, did not directly enforce them; here the plaintiff had no right at common law. This decision was quite consistent with that of Grissell v. Bristow, L. Rep. 4 C. P. 36, for there the parties to the action were the parties to the original contract, and all that was decided was, that the acceptance of the nominee discharged the original purchaser. Chief Baron Kelly delivered the judgment of himself and Baron Pigott. They were of opinion that the acceptance of the name not only discharged the original purchaser, but that upon such acceptance a contract arose between the seller and the nominee, such as that alleged in the declaration. The principles upon which Grissell v. Bristow was decided as expressed by the judgment of Chief Justice Cockburn were conclusive as to the existence of such a contract. The remedy in a court of Equity was by the authorities based upon the existence of a contract between the seller and ultimate nominee, and if that were so, such contract would be enforceable in a court of Common Law. The court being thus equally divided, if the parties wish to appeal, the junior Baron will withdraw his judgment, and judgment will be entered for plaintiff.

ELECTION LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

DISQUALIFICATION OF A GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR—22 GEO. 3, c. 45.—In an election petition under the Parliamentary Elections Act 1868, the petitioners asked that the election might be declared void under 22 Geo. 3, c. 45, the respondent being a member of a firm which had before the election completed some contracts with the Secretary of State for India in Council, but did not receive payment until after the election. The respondent's firm had also carried out an order after the election, which had been given them by the superintendent of the Broadmoor Lunatic Asylum; the articles ordered were of small value, and the respondent and his agents were ignorant of the fact of that establishment being, as it is, a criminal lunatic asylum, in the hands of the Government under a warrant, according to 23 & 24 Vict. c. 75: Held (upon a special case setting out these contracts for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas), that the statute was not meant to apply to a person who was in the position only of a creditor of the Government, nor to a person entering into a contract with a Government agent without knowledge of his connection with the Government. The election, therefore, was not void. See, also, the Secretary of State for India in Council is a person acting for or on account of the public service, with whom a member of the House of Commons is forbidden to contract within sect. 1 of 22 Geo. 3, c. 45: (Manchester Election Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 786. C. P.)

ELECTION PETITION—BRIBERY AT MUNICIPAL ELECTION IN REFERENCE TO PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION—EVIDENCE—The municipal election took place about a fortnight before the borough Parliamentary election. At the municipal election persons who had also votes for the borough received bribes very much larger than was usually given at municipal elections, and subsequently voted at the Parliamentary election for the party which bribed at the municipal election: Held to be bribery affecting the seats of the members returned by such means. Where an unusually large amount is spent at a municipal election, and under the above circumstances, the inference necessarily is that it was intended to operate and did operate, and did influence the votes given at the Parliamentary election, there being a great number of electors bribed: Held, that the election was void at common law, without reference to the statute. Under the will of one W., twelve "pasture masters," are annually chosen in the borough, who distribute the interest of a sum of 1400*l.* amongst poor freemen and their kindred, the direction of the will being that the money should be given in substantial amounts, and not scattered over a large number of persons. During the year in which the election took place, however, the gift was distributed in a number of small sums to a great number of persons. Thirty-three of these persons had votes, and twenty-six of these votes were given for the respondents at the election. It being proved that the pasture masters were elected by bribery on the part of the party to which the respondents belonged: Held, that such a state of things must tell much in the consideration of the validity of the election. Where it is desired to reserve a point of law under sect. 12, it should be distinctly brought to the knowledge of the learned judge, as at Nisi Prius: (Beverley Election Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 792. Martin, B.)

COSTS OF ELECTION PETITIONS.—A question of some importance as to costs in election petitions was before Mr. Baron Martin at chambers in the Penryn election case, on Thursday last week. The application was on the part of the sitting members, whose seats had been contested, that Master Gordon should review his taxation. The bill of costs on the part of the members, whose election was declared valid, amounted to about 1700*l.*, and the master had reduced it to about 800*l.* Mr. Buck (Baxter, Rose, and Norton), who appeared for the respondents, referred to the allowance of only 100 guineas to the leading counsel, when the fee with the brief was 300 guineas, and a material point in the taxation was whether costs as between attorney and client or as between party and party should be allowed. Mr. Hoskins appeared on the other side. Mr. Baron Martin thought that the application to review the taxation should be referred to the court and stand over till Michaelmas Term. He directed 800*l.* out of the 1000*l.* deposited for costs to be paid to the respondents pending the application to the court.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

CHARITY COMMISSIONERS BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said that its object was to remove some difficulties which had occurred in the administration of charitable trusts in consequence of certain formalities which were required to be observed, and which, while not serving any useful purpose, gave rise to serious inconvenience. The Bill in all the earlier parts of it dealt with the removal of difficulties of that description. The ninth clause empowered the Commissioners to authorise those administering any charity to employ competent persons to frame a scheme or make inquiries under the Charitable Trusts Act 1853 to 1869, and to pay those so employed. The tenth clause provided that a petition to the Court of Chancery under the 8th section of the Charitable Trusts Act (1860) must be presented in all cases by the same persons only as the existing law provided in the case of charities of which the annual income did not exceed 50*l.*—namely, the Attorney-General and the trustees managing a trust. It might be a question for discussion in committee whether a simple majority instead of two-thirds of the trustees administering a charity should be able to decide on the sale or exchange of any property held by them in trust. Other causes facilitated the placing of charities under the commissioners, for the jealousy with which these functionaries were originally regarded had recently disappeared, and all classes, including the representatives of Dissenting bodies, were anxious to avail themselves of the services of the commissioners. The EARL OF ROMNEY was understood to recommend some slight amendment of clause nine, and the Bill was read a second time.

SPECIAL BAILS BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, in moving that this Bill be read a second time, said he had had considerable inquiry made into the matter, and he was satisfied that it was necessary a Bill of this kind should be passed. It had not been introduced into the other House by the Government, but the able Master of the Court of Exchequer had been requested to examine it carefully, and he reported that the grievance sought to be redressed was a real one. While on the one hand the number of cases in which it was required to have special bail were so few as not to render it worth the while of solicitors to take it, on the other hand the cases were sufficiently numerous to involve in the aggregate a large amount of inconvenience if persons in the country could not find anyone to assist them in the matter of putting in special bail. The Bill empowered anyone authorised to administer an oath, whether he was a solicitor or not, provided he were not interested in the matter, to take special bail. The Bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE LAW OF FORFEITURE FOR FELONY.

On the motion for going into committee of supply, Mr. C. FORSTER rose to ask the Attorney-General whether it was his intention to reintroduce the Bill which passed this House in the Session of 1866 for altering the law of forfeiture on conviction of felony. Five years ago he had himself introduced a Bill on the subject, and it was read a second time without opposition, but in deference to the suggestion that such a Bill should be in the hands of Government, he resigned the question to the then Attorney-General, the hon. and learned member for Richmond, who introduced a Bill dealing with it in 1866. That Bill passed through all its stages without opposition, but when it reached the other House there came a change of Government and the Bill was dropped. The consideration of the question was again adjourned from time to time; but he trusted that the injustice and inconvenience of the present system would not be allowed to continue much longer.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said it would be impossible at this period of the Session for the Government to bring in a Bill on the subject, but if the hon. member would undertake to bring in such a Bill at some future period he thought it was not unlikely that he should be able to co-operate with him in carrying it through Parliament.

REVISING BARRISTERS.

Mr. BARCLAY asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government, in view of the approaching registration of Parliamentary electors, to extend to this year the provisions of last year's Act as regards the number of revising barristers employed.—Mr. BRUCE said that the legislation of last year had special reference to the heavy work of the time. He did not mean to say that it might not be necessary to make a redistribution and to increase the number of revising barristers, but that purpose might be effected by the judges under the existing Act.

PRIMOGENITURE.

The second reading of the Real Estate Intestacy Bill was moved by Mr. LOCKE KING, who went over again the principal arguments he had so often urged in its favour, derived from the injustice and hardships of the present law. He expected that the change would be confined chiefly to small proprietors, but if it operated in the direction of breaking up large properties he should not regret it.—Mr. DICKINSON seconded the motion, and the rejection of the Bill was moved by—Mr. BERESFORD HOPE, who examined its effect both on small and large estates. With regard to the first he described it as a measure of confiscation, for it would put them to the expense of frequent sales, and ultimately, therefore, would lead to the aggrandisement of large estates. He objected to it also that it would diminish the motives for exertion and self-reliance among younger sons, that it would limit the discretion of testators, and would subject these small properties to probate as well as succession duties, and he illustrated his arguments by the action of the law of gavelkind in Kent. As to large estates, he pointed out that, since free trade in corn, land had become more of a luxury than a necessity in England; and, preferring moderate residential estates both to large aggregations and minute divisions, he objected that the change would diminish the inducements of successful commercial men to invest in land. He indicated various cases in which retrospective injustice would be done, and maintained that all the evils complained of might be remedied by facilitating the making of wills.—Mr. WILLIAM FOWLER grounded a recent conversion to the Bill on justice, and on the principle that the law, when left to distribute an intestate's property, should have no preferences. Our present system he attributed entirely to the influence of the traditions of feudalism among us; and he controverted the objection that the existence of our aristocracy was bound up in the system. Objecting to compulsory subdivision as much as to large accumulations, he desired only that things should be allowed to take their natural course, and that the sale of land should be facilitated.—Mr. GOLDNEY admitted that the law needed amendment, maintained that the question ought to be considered along with the Wills Act, and pointed out many anomalies which would arise under the present rules of distribution.—Mr. LEVESON-GOWER supported this Bill as a measure of justice, having no fear that it would lead to excessive subdivision of property or would affect the position of the aristocracy, which he held it to be preposterous to connect with this law. Being friendly to a system of eldest sons, he objected to the present law that it placed primogeniture in a false light by encouraging a notion that eldest sons had a natural right to their fathers' landed property, and he anticipated that the Bill would foster a feeling in favour of more general and ample provision for the younger branches of a family.—Mr. BUXTON argued the question on ider grounds, and avowed that he supported the Bill because it would be a check and a discouragement, both in its actual and moral effects, on the creation of large estates—a feature in our social system to which he attributed much of the backwardness of our rural population.—Dr. BALL continued the debate in the same tone, and argued forcibly against a system of general partibility of land. In large estates in the hands of old families there were solid political and social advantages, while constant subdivision, as the example of France showed, produced apathy and a want of enterprise, outside the great towns, most detrimental to the progress of a country. Admitting that hardships might arise under our law, he pointed out how, without cutting up estates, they might be remedied by borrowing a clause from the Scotch Entails Act, and charging the provision for the widow and younger children on the life income of the property.—Mr. H. PALMER doubted whether this suggestion could be carried out, and, though supporting the Bill, did not expect it to have a wide operation; for while within a certain period 34,000,000*l.* of landed property had passed by will or settlement, only 3,000,000*l.* had gone by intestacy.—Mr. HENLEY's objection to the Bill rested on the fact that the great majority of those who died intestate were small proprietors, and under its operation he predicted that the race of 40*s.* freeholders would disappear.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL, on the part of the Government, supported the Bill as a small step in the right direction; but he did not anticipate much effect from it until the sentiment of the country was in favour of equal partition.—Mr. O. MORGAN and Sir H. HOARE also spoke in favour of the Bill, and on a division to the second reading was carried by a majority of 25—169 to 144.

The Libel Bill and the Sea Fisheries Act (1868) Extension Bill were withdrawn.

ESTATE AND INVESTMENT JOURNAL.

STOCK AND SHARE MARKETS.

Thursday afternoon.

The funds have advanced slightly, and there is somewhat more firmness in the money market. The Bank directors have reduced the rate of discount from 3½ per cent., at which it was placed on the 30th June, to 3 per cent. This movement is not likely to have any effect upon business, as the outer money market had been for some time as low as 2½ and 3 per cent. The principal feature is that it will enable receivers of deposits to make a half per cent. more profit than they have this week. The Stock Exchange is altogether occupied with the fortnightly payments, but the tendency of prices looks like realisation.

The fluctuations of the week have been as follows:—

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRACTICE—MOTION TO TAKE BILL OFF THE FILE—VEXATIOUS CONDUCT OF PLAINTIFF.—Where a plaintiff, after having had four bills successfully demurred to, filed a fifth for substantially the same object: the court, on an application by the defendant, ordered the bill to be taken off the file, and the plaintiff to pay the costs: (Mortlock v. Mortlock, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 773. V. C. S.)

COSTS OF PREPARING LEASES.—A lease contained a covenant by the lessor to grant a further lease, and a stipulation that the lease should be prepared by the lessor's solicitor. The lessor's solicitor raised various untenable objections, and put the lessee to considerable expense. The lessee required the lessor to pay the costs occasioned thereby, and threatened to file a bill for specific performance of the covenant. The lessor then wrote withdrawing all his objections, but refused to pay the costs occasioned by them. The plaintiff filed his bill the day after: Held that the defendant's solicitor was bound to prepare a proper lease, and the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, and of the dispute occasioned by the defendant: (Mappin v. Savory, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 777. V. C. J.)

SECURITIES FOR UNTAXED COSTS.

(From the Irish Law Times.)

A case, of some interest to solicitors whose costs, due to them by their clients, happen to be in considerable arrear, was decided a few days since in the Landed Estates Court. Lawyers, in various ways, being accustomed to hear occasionally from laymen, or from those outside of both branches of the legal profession, the imputation that their remuneration is disproportioned to the value of the services rendered by them, or is arbitrary and inequitable in its adjustment, it is desirable to remind our readers that in a case reported in the books the contrary has been held judicially in England, and the doctrine enunciated that solicitors being insufficiently remunerated for a portion of their services, it is not inequitable that, as regards another part of them, the amount of remuneration should exceed what would appear to be their due, if estimated by themselves. With these broad considerations, however, we are not present so much concerned as with the particular question which Judge Flanagan recently, contrary to his own individual opinion, felt himself coerced, by the authority of a single case, to decide against the claim put forward by a solicitor. In our reporting columns this week, the reader will see the case of The Estate of Mogue O'Connor, in which the contention was between Mr. W. H. Brownrigg, the solicitor having the carriage of the sale, and Mrs. Ellen O'Connor, the mother and guardian ad litem of minors beneficially entitled to the residue. The former became an incumbrancer on the lands sold in this matter, in the following way:—A mortgage, bearing date the 20th July 1865, and made between the late Stephen O'Connor, the husband of Mrs. Ellen O'Connor, of the one part, and Mr. Brownrigg of the other part, recited that the said Stephen O'Connor was indebted to the said W. H. Brownrigg, as solicitor and attorney, in the sum of 250*l.*, for costs between solicitor and client, incurred chiefly in a certain cause pending in the Court of Chancery, and that the said Stephen O'Connor had proposed to execute to the said W. H. Brownrigg a sub-demise of these lands, by way of mortgage, in order to secure payment of the said sum of 250*l.*, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, at the period of six months from that date, on the terms of the said W. H. Brownrigg, forbearing for that period to demand payment of the said debt. The deed then proceeded to convey the premises in accordance with the intentions expressed in the recitals. Subsequently to the sale of the lands (in which Mr. Mogue O'Connor, the trustee of his late brother, was owner and petitioner), and when the schedule of incumbrances came to be ruled, Mrs. O'Connor filed an objection to the claim of Mr. Brownrigg, on the ground, amongst others, that interest ought not to be allowed under the circumstances. Mr. Brownrigg, having given credit for a payment on account, claimed three years' interest on the balance, from the date of the mortgage.

Thus, the question to be decided on this part of the case was the following:—Can a solicitor obtain from his client, while the relation of solicitor and client subsists between the parties, a security for untaxed costs which shall also provide for the payment of interest? The amount of authority is meagre and conflicting; but for the discovery, by one of the counsel, of the particular case which coerced the learned judge to surrender his individual opinion, we might, perhaps, say there was none in this country. The judge himself investigated the English cases, and having stated in his judgment that the case relied on by the parties on both sides in the argument (Lyddon v. Moss, 4 De G. & J. 104.) did not sustain the proposition it was cited to prove, and that the fault in the security there was the contract to recover compound interest, the interest upon the costs being treated as part of the principal, he proceeded to consider the cases of Moss v. Bainbridge, 18 Beav. 497, and Morgan v. Higgins, 1 Giff. 270, said that, though the identical question now before the court did not seem to have been decided, yet upon the strength of those English cases, he should not have hesitated to award Mr. Brownrigg the interest claimed by him. But, on the morning of that day, a decision by the Irish Equity Exchequer, Fowler v. Moore, 2 Jones, 415, was cited by the counsel for Mrs. O'Connor, and the judge felt himself bound to follow it, though contrary to his own opinion. In this last case a bond had been given, pendente lite, to secure bills of untaxed costs with interest, and the court, consisting of Barons Pennefather, Foster, and Richards, decided against the solicitor's claim for interest.

With every degree of deference to the opinion of one so much more able to eliminate the law on this subject than we are, we think it is not so clear that the decision of the learned judge may not be sustained on higher grounds than he has himself placed it. If anything could be suggested to confirm his view, it might perhaps consist in the circumstance that in the report of Fowler v. Moore, the editor states himself to have been absent during the argument, and that no reference to authorities is made in the judgment. On the other hand, if we have interpreted his Lordship aright, he does not consider the precise point before him to be res judicata, so far as any of the English decisions are concerned. It is true that in Moss v. Bainbridge interest on the solicitor's demand was declared to be payable by the decree, and it is also true that, in Morgan v. Higgins, the Vice-Chancellor stated that where the transaction would be held to amount to the giving of a security for such sum as should be found due, the right to interest would follow as a matter of course. But with regard to the first of these, it is to be observed that in Lyddon v. Moss it was stated to be so peculiar in its facts that it was inapplicable there; there being this difference, amongst others, that the original contract to pay interest was made, not between the client and his attorney, but between the client and his brother. In Morgan v. Higgins there were broad considerations for setting aside the security, and though the statement with regard to interest is sufficiently decided in its character, it is not, to our minds, altogether reconcilable with the rest of the case. We fail to follow the reasoning of Judge Flanagan respecting Lyddon v. Moss. The language of the Master of the Rolls may be open to the charge of being amphibolous, but in our judgment, if he meant to confine his strictures to the case of compound interest, he has not taken extraordinary pains to seem to do so. We think we are there reminded of the principle to which this question must be referred.

Interest on an untaxed bill of costs as such is either payable or not payable. In Morgan v. Higgins the Vice-Chancellor says it is not, and no one, we suppose, will contend that it is. If it be payable at all, therefore, it must be by virtue of the agreement contained in the security. Now, to obtain such security from a client, pendente lite, is to obtain from him something over and above what he is bound to give—it is, in a word, to bargain for a benefit, which in a moral point of view may be entirely legitimate. But the solicitor who bargains for a benefit with his client, pendente lite, is bound, according to the general principle, to put the latter at arm's length. This he may do in either of two ways: he may provide that quoad that particular transaction the client shall have the advice of an independent solicitor, or he may give him such advice against himself as would have been necessary against a third party if the client had been dealing with a third party. This would imply his distinctly giving him to understand that the contract to pay interest was one he was not bound to enter into. It may be said that the contract to forbear to press for payment is an equivalent in every sense; but then it is the very inability to pay disclosed upon the face of such a contract that proves he client to be in the power of the solicitor, and perhaps assists to justify the application of the principle that the onus of showing the bona fides of the transaction lies upon the latter.

Judge Flanagan expressed a desire that this case, in the interests of solicitors, might go to the Court of Appeal, in order to have the law respecting it finally settled—a desire in which our readers will be likely to concur. Another consideration of at least equal moment protruded itself at the close—the practice of following Irish decisions where there have been English decisions to the contrary, and where there is a judicial consciousness that the latter are right. The tendency to amalgamation of the statutes, and the growing inclination (as we have somewhere seen it stated), to cite the Irish precedents in the English courts, would point to the discontinuance in the courts of equity of a lex loci for "that part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called Ireland."

SUSPICIOUS DEATH OF A BIRMINGHAM SOLICITOR.—Mr. William Manning Needham, a well-known Birmingham solicitor, of the firm of Ludlow and Needham, whose offices are at 38, Waterloo-street, in that town, has just met with his death under circumstances that will have to be investigated by a coroner and jury. Mr. Needham, accepting an invitation of a friend residing at Gravelly-hill, a fashionable residence a few miles out of Birmingham, went over there to dine and spend the evening. Having stayed until the last train, which leaves Gravelly-hill about half-past ten, Mr. Needham, who appeared to be in excellent health and spirits, left his friend's house shortly before that hour, with the view of catching the train and returning to Birmingham. What happened to the unfortunate gentleman subsequent to his departure is not at present known, but in a short time afterwards he was found lying at the bottom of some steps leading to the Gravelly-hill railway station, and in a state of insensibility. Mr. Oates, a surgeon residing in the neighbourhood, was at once sent for, but on his arrival life was found to be quite extinct. The body was then removed to the house of Mr. Davenport, maltster, close by, where it at present awaits the inquest.

INTERNATIONAL LAW.—An interesting trial has just been settled in Paris. It involved a question of international law. General Davesies de Pontés, a French subject, through his wife came into possession of certain landed estates at Eyford, in Gloucestershire, died in the Isle of Wight, and left all his property to one of a family, his most intimate friends, in whose house he died. It was understood that there was some secret understanding, and that the legacy was partly but a trust. The nearest of kin in France attacked the will on several grounds. It was written by some one, and signed by the testator; whereas the French law requires that a man's will must be indited propria manu. There was no place of signing and delivering notified; then undue influence was urged (this broke down, however, at once); and, lastly, it was set forth that there were secret clauses implied, if not easily proved, and that that alone would invalidate any testament in the eyes of the French law. The Imperial Court, however, held that the document was written in England, and so the question of propria manu fell to the ground; that the French law recognises wills drawn up by French subjects abroad, provided always they are good in the eyes of the law of that land in which they were made and signed. The pressure point was ignored; and finally the court held that, even if they could upset the secret trusts, they should only confirm (Mrs. d'Arcy-Irwin) the trustee in the position of residuary legatee. This case, having been argued and re-argued, to the benefit of lawyers and the damage of the poor people to whom the property justly belonged, has at last been finally settled by the Imperial Court in favour of the English defendant. The "Robins" have got their last fee, and the harassed litigants may go home and enjoy, if they can, after so much anxiety, their hard-gotten rights.

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES BEFORE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—The select committee appointed to inquire and report whether any further provisions should be made for the examination of witnesses on oath before the House of Commons have agreed to their report, which was published yesterday. As far back, they say, as can be traced by the broken light of imperfect records, it would appear that the House of Lords having to exercise judicial as well as legislative functions, have always adopted the practice with regard to both of relying upon sworn testimony; so habitual and unvarying, indeed, has been this practice that oaths were administered until within a very recent period by the House to persons called upon to give evidence before committees on matters of opinion, as well as on matters of fact. Although, from the earliest times, the House of Commons has asserted its claim to be a court of record, no distinct traces can be found prior to the reign of James I. of the manner in which it required the testimony of witnesses to be given. During the seventeenth century the entries in the journals seem to indicate that it was customary to order witnesses to be sworn before one of the judges, or before a magistrate of Middlesex or Westminster. This practice continued until the year 1757, when it was laid aside; and since then it has not been resorted to. Meanwhile Bills of pains and penalties having become of rare occurrence, it was chiefly with reference to controverted elections that the House was called upon to take evidence. The jurisdiction of the House of Commons in controverted elections, and for the most part in cases of divorce, has been devolved upon the courts of law. There still remain, however, a variety of questions of the greatest moment on which the House of Commons may be called upon to pronounce judgment. In all these, as well as in a variety of other instances, it seems natural that evidence should be taken in the most solemn manner. Both the Speaker and Viscount Eversley are of opinion that "the power of examining witnesses on oath is one which the House ought to possess," and that procedure by Bill would be the proper course to take for obtaining it. Sir Thomas Erskine May is of the same opinion. The committee therefore recommend that provision should be made by Act of Parliament for conferring on the House of Commons the power of examining witnesses on oath, and that the said power be further extended to select committees whenever the House in its judgment shall deem fit. A Bill, introduced by Sir John Esmonde, has been read a second time and referred to the committee, who think that its provisions would substantially carry into effect their recommendations.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

Reading, July 8.—Baron Pigott opened the commission here yesterday. Five common jury causes were entered for trial on the civil side, and 14 prisoners were for trial on the Crown side.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

Warwick, July 9.—The commission was opened here yesterday. The cause list is light. There are 25 cases in the county calendar, and 17 in that for the borough of Birmingham. There is one case of murder in the county. The prisoner, who is a woman, is charged with murdering another woman on the 5th March last, and was removed to the county lunatic asylum, on the 13th April. There is also a case of night poaching, with violence, upon the lands of the Earl of Warwick. The rest of the cases seem to be of an ordinary character. The Nisi Prius cause list contains 13 cases, of which 5 are set down for special juries.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Hertford, July 13.—The commission for the county of Herts was opened on Monday by Mr. Justice Mellor, and business was proceeded with to-day in both courts, the Lord Chief Baron presiding on the civil side and Mr. Justice Mellor in the Crown Court. There was rather a larger number of cases than usual, seventeen being entered, five of which were marked to be tried by special juries. Several of these were, however, withdrawn, or referred during the day. The gaol calendar only contained the names of eleven prisoners, and all the cases were of an ordinary character.

The Deputy Judge Advocate-Generalship has been given to Mr. O'Dowd, barrister-at-law, in succession to Mr. Lushington.

READINGS OF NEW STATUTES.

THE WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACT 1869. (a).

The provisions of this statute are of the utmost importance to brewers and the owners and keepers of beer and refreshment houses, and as the Act is now in operation, it is desirable that the attention of our readers should be immediately called to the great changes it introduces.

It is necessary to classify the statutes recited in the Act which are as follows: (1.) The Beerhouse Acts (11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4 c. 64; 4 & 5 Will. 4 c. 85; and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61). (2.) The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, s. 3; and the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 33, s. 1, relating to licences to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises. (3.) The Wine and Refreshment Houses Act (23 Vict. c. 27.)

The term "beer" is to include ale and porter, and the term "cider" is to comprise perry. The short title of the Act is "The Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869," and is to be in force for two years (sect. 22).

From and after the 15th July 1869, no licence for the sale of beer, &c. (except licenses for wine and refreshment houses, and licences to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises) is to be granted, except upon the production and in pursuance of the authority of a certificate to be granted by justices at the annual licensing meetings held in pursuance of the Alehouse Act (9 Geo. 4 c. 61) or at an adjournment thereof: (sects. 4 & 5.)

From the 5th section it is clear that certificates, upon which alone the excise authorities can grant the ordinary retail beer licences, are only to be granted once a year, namely, at the annual licensing meetings. Justices at the special sessions for transferring licences may, however, by the same section, grant certificates for wine and refreshment licences, and licences to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises.

With reference to the formalities necessary to obtain a certificate authorising the excise to grant a retail beer licence, it will be desirable to see what is required. First, to obtain a certificate in respect to a house holding a licence granted prior to the 15th July 1869; secondly, to obtain a certificate in respect to a house not holding a licence granted prior to such date.

First, a person applying for a certificate in respect of a house already licensed by the excise must twenty-one days at least before he applies, give notice of his intention to one of the overseers of the parish, township, or place in which the house is situated, and to some constable or peace officer acting within such parish, township, or place. The notice must set forth the name and address of the applicant, and a description of the licence or licences for which he intends to apply, and the situation of the house: (sect. 7.)

Secondly, a person applying for a certificate in respect of a house not already licensed by the excise, must also within twenty-eight days before such application is made cause a like notice to be affixed and maintained between ten in the morning and five in the afternoon of two consecutive Sundays on the door of such house or shop, and on the principal door or on one of the doors of the church or chapel of the parish or place in which such house or shop is situate, or if there be no such church or chapel, on some other public and conspicuous place within such parish or place: (sect. 7.)

It is proposed to offer some practical comments on each of the above heads.

1. As to obtaining a certificate in respect of a house already licensed by the excise.

A mere hasty perusal of the Act may perhaps leave a doubt whether the twenty-one days' notice to the overseer and constable is required in case of a house already licensed, for at the end of the 7th section is the following proviso: "Where application is made to the justices for the grant of a certificate under this Act by way of renewal only, notice in pursuance of this section shall not be requisite."

On careful perusal of the wording of the 7th section, and the proviso, it is tolerably clear that the twenty-one days' notice to the constable and overseer must precede the first application for a certificate which is to be made by beerhouses already licensed. Under the alehouse Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), the justices are to grant licences to inns, alehouses, and victualling-houses. But no such power is conferred upon them by the statute under consideration, which merely empowers them to grant certificates upon production, and pursuant to the authority of which, the excise are to grant beer, cider, and wine licences. Now, the proviso to the 7th section applies only to the renewal of such certificates, and consequently the first applications under the Act for certificates will not be by way of renewal, there being no certificates in existence to renew.

Another argument in favour of the necessity of giving the twenty-one days' notice in case of houses already licensed is, that where applications are to be made in respect of houses not already licensed, the notices on the house and church are also prescribed by the latter part of the 7th section. If, therefore, the twenty-one days' notice was not intended to be given respecting houses already licensed, there are no cases under the Act to which such notice only can apply.

A still stronger argument may be based upon the probable intention of the Legislature. It is almost universally agreed that the Beershop Acts have failed, and that many of the beer shops are an intolerable nuisance, not being sufficiently under proper control, and being conducted by persons of bad repute and in a disorderly manner. The object of the twenty-one days' notice is, therefore, to enable the police to make proper inquiries as to the character of the applicant, and the manner in which the house is conducted, and also to enable the overseer to ascertain that the house is duly rated, and report to the justices if necessary. This reading is in accordance with the 19th section, which provides that where, on the 1st May 1869, a retail licence is in force, it shall not be lawful for the justices to refuse an application for a certificate, except upon one or more of the grounds set forth in the 8th section, which applies to licences to sell beer not to be consumed on the premises. These grounds are four in number, and are as follows: 1. That the applicant has failed to produce satisfactory evidence of good character. 2. That the house or shop in respect of which a licence is sought, is of a disorderly character, or frequented by thieves, prostitutes, or persons of bad character. 3. That the applicant, having previously held a licence for the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or cider, the same has been forfeited for his misconduct, or that he has through misconduct been at any time previously adjudged disqualified from receiving any such licence, or from selling any of the said articles. 4. That the applicant, or the house in respect of which he applies, is not duly qualified as by law is required.

This provision clearly gives the justices the power to refuse to grant certificates to houses already licensed on any of the above grounds, and the twenty-one days' notice is therefore required in order that the justices may be properly informed as to the character of the applicants for such certificates, and the conduct and rating of their houses.

These provisions require the practitioner's immediate and careful consideration.

By the 5th section certificates for retail beer licences can only be granted at the annual licensing meetings which are held between the 20th Aug. and the 14th Sept., except in Middlesex and Surrey, which are held within the 1st ten days in March. It therefore follows that in all cases where persons already holding retail beer licences require certificates under the Act, they will have to give the twenty-one days' notice to the overseer and constable prior to the day fixed for the next annual licensing meeting. The results of neglecting to do so will be: First. That the excise will have no power to renew retail beer licences without a justices' certificate, and therefore the trade of the house will be necessarily suspended for a year. Secondly. That if a certificate be applied for next year, the applicant must go through the formalities required in the case of a new application for a retail beer licence under the latter part of the 7th section.

2. We pass on to consider the requirements necessary to obtain a licence in respect of a house not holding a retail licence prior to the 15th July 1869.

As we have already seen, the applicant in this case, in addition to the twenty-one days' notice to the overseer and constable, is to cause a like notice to be affixed and maintained between ten in the morning and five in the afternoon of two consecutive Sundays on the door of such house or shop, and on the principal door, or on one of the doors of the church or chapel of the parish or place in which such house or shop is situate, or if there shall be no such church or chapel on some other public and conspicuous place within such parish or place. This provision is somewhat similar to that contained in the Alehouse Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), excepting that in the last-mentioned Act the hours are ten and four, whereas in the present Act the hours are ten and five, and in the Alehouse Act the notices are not required to be "maintained" as they are in the present statute. The introduction of the word "maintained" will probably lead to some differences of opinion and practice. It may be contended that it must be proved that the notices were upon the house and churchdoor during the whole time between the hours of ten and five, and doubtless this is the literal meaning of the clause. Probably, however, justice will be satisfied with proof that such notices were posted shortly before ten, and were seen in the same place shortly after four.

As to the grounds upon which justices may refuse new applications for beer licences, it would seem that their powers are discretionary, and similar to those they possess under the Alehouse Act as to granting or refusing alehouse licences.

The 8th section of the Act is somewhat ambiguous. It provides that the provisions of the Alehouse Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), as to the terms upon which, and the manner in which, and the persons by whom, grants of licences are to be made; and as to appeal shall, so far as may be, have effect with regard to the grants of certificates under the present Act, subject to this qualification—that no application for a certificate for a retail licence not to be consumed on the premises shall be refused except upon one or more of the four grounds above specified. This section, however, cannot be intended to extend the provisions as to the notices and other formalities, which are now required to obtain new alehouse licences, to applications for certificates under the present Act, for the various notices required by the present Act are particularly mentioned. The 8th section probably refers to the provisions in the Alehouse Act relating to the time, place, and manner of holding, adjourning, and conducting the licensing meetings, the disqualification of certain justices, &c.

The form of the certificate is by sect. 6 to specify certain particulars. It is to be in force for one year, and is to be in the form given in the first schedule to the Act, as follows:

We, the justices assembled [or being the majority of the justices assembled] at the general annual licensing meeting [or an adjournment of the general annual licensing meeting, or at a special petty session] of Her Majesty's justices of the peace acting for the division [or liberty, &c., as the case may be] of _____, in the county of _____, holden on the _____ day of _____, 186____, do hereby authorise the grant to A. B., of _____, in the county of _____, of a licence or licences, if more than one be authorised, to sell by retail [beer, cider, or wine, to be consumed on or off the premises] at a house [or shop], situate [describe situation and the particular Act or Acts under which the licence is to be taken out].

Witness our hands this _____ day of _____.

No form of notice is prescribed by the Act but it is proposed next week to give some forms applicable to different cases. Also to consider the various other important clauses in the statute.

CAMBRIDGE BOROUGH SESSIONS.

Thursday, July 1.

(Before J. R. BULWER, Esq., Q.C., Recorder.)

REG. v. LIDDIARD.

Receiving stolen property—Indictment—Election—Arrest of judgment.

G. L. was indicted for receiving stolen property upon two days named in the indictment. The counsel for the prisoner did not put the prosecutor to his election upon which act of receiving he would proceed, but after a conviction moved in arrest of judgment:

Held, that the objection was too late.

The prisoner was indicted for receiving certain property, well knowing it to have been stolen. The indictment contained two counts; one for receiving on the 25th June, the other for another act of receiving on the 26th June. The prisoner was tried upon this indictment, and evidence given of both acts of receiving alleged in the indictment.

J. W. Cooper, for the prosecutor.

Naylor, for the prisoner.

The prisoner was convicted; and Naylor moved in arrest of judgment upon the ground that the prosecutor was bound to elect upon which act of receiving he would proceed.

The RECORDER ruled that the objection was too late; no doubt the prosecutor could have been put to his election upon which count he would proceed (Reg. v. Dunn, 1 Mood. C. C. 146), but the objection not being then taken it was too late to move in arrest of judgment: (3 T. R. 98; Reg. v. Hinley, 2 M. & R. N. S. 24; O'Connell v. The Queen, A. & Fin. 155.)

Sentence, three months' imprisonment.

SUFFOLK QUARTER SESSIONS.—BURY ST. EDMUND'S.

Tuesday, July 6.

(Before the Rev. T. ANDERSON, Chairman.)

REG. v. TAYLOR.

Larceny—Money given to a servant for a specific purpose.

W. T. was intrusted by his master with two sovereigns to pay some tolls and obtain provisions for the use of some lightermen in his master's employment, but instead of doing so, he appropriated the money to his own use, under a supposed right that, as wages were due from him, although not equal in amount to the sum he received, yet he was entitled to retain that sum.

Held, that it was a question for the jury under these circumstances whether the prisoner had a felonious intention.

This was an indictment for larceny; the prisoner, William Taylor, being the foreman of a gang of lighters, the property of the prosecutor, and it being his duty, as foreman, to pay the tolls, provide provisions for the men working the lighters. On the 15th May the prosecutor gave the prisoner the sum of £2 for the express purpose of purchasing some bread and paying some tolls; instead of doing this, the prisoner absconded, and when apprehended, said he had fallen asleep and lost the money. The tolls were not paid, and the barges were detained until security was given in the shape of a chain being left in pledge, and no bread was ever obtained.

J. W. Cooper, for the prosecution, submitted that under these facts the prisoner was guilty of larceny. He cited R. v. Lavender, 2 Russ. 160; R. v. Beaman, C. & M. 595.

The prisoner, who was undefended by counsel, elicited in cross-examination that on the 15th May his master owed him the sum of 14s. for wages, and he deducted that amount from the money he had received.

The CHAIRMAN left it to the jury to say whether or no the prisoner had a felonious intent in appropriating the money to his own use, or whether he took it with the intention of paying himself the wages due to him.

J. W. Cooper demurred to this direction. Where money was given for a specific purpose it was the duty of the servant to apply it to that purpose; and if, instead of so applying it, he converted it to his own use, then it was larceny.

The CHAIRMAN thought it was right to leave the question to the jury.

J. W. Cooper drew attention to the prisoner's statement that he had lost the money. The claim of wages had not been set up at all before the magistrates, and it was much less than the sum entrusted to him.

The CHAIRMAN charged the jury to the effect that it was for them to say, under all the circumstances, whether the prisoner brought himself within the decision in Reg. v. Lavender.

Verdict, Not guilty.

A MARRIAGE ARRANGED BY A JUDGE.—At the Worcestershire Assizes a farm servant named William Shields, twenty-three years of age, was charged with perjury, the case arising out of an affiliation case, the prisoner denying the authorship of several letters written by him to the complainant, Mary Burt. The case had not proceeded far when the prisoner said he was anxious to marry the prosecutrix, and she observed that she would have married him had he behaved properly to her. The Chief Justice (to the prisoner).—"Are you ready to marry her?" Prisoner.—"Yes, my Lord; I'll marry her the first opportunity." (Loud laughter, in which the judge heartily joined.) The Chief Justice.—But what does Mary say to that? Prosecutrix.—I am quite willing. The Chief Justice.—I think there must be a conviction, and, perhaps, the best plan will be to respite the sentence till next assizes, and if in the mean time they settle the matter by marriage that will be the best way to settle it. The conduct of the prisoner has been most gross and wicked, but, as he is now sorry, this will be the best way to settle the case. The jury found a verdict of guilty, and the Chief Justice said.—Prisoner, you must be bound over to come up for judgment at the next assizes, but I hope you will not be called upon. Prisoner.—Oh, I'll marry Mary before then, my lord. (Laughter.)

COUNTY FINANCIAL BOARDS.—A return has been prepared for the House of Commons, showing county by county, the total number of members of each class, honorary and elective, who will constitute the boards for financial purposes under the County Administration Bill. In some counties the elected members will be a very small minority compared with the number of magistrates on the roll, but in the following ten cases the elected members of the financial boards will probably exceed one-fourth of the number of magistrates on the roll. In Durham the elected members will probably be 47 to 159 magistrates on the roll; in Huntingdonshire, 12 to 43 magistrates; in Leicestershire, 28 to 106; in Lincoln, 17 to 53 in the Kesteven division, 34 to 112 in Lindsey, and 12 to 22 in Holland; in Middlesex, 122 to 390; in Northamptonshire, 32 to 124; in the Liberty of Ely, 17 to 53; in the East Riding of Yorkshire 34 to 107, and in the West Riding, 103 to 395.

CRIME AND VAGRANCY.—MEASURES TAKEN IN LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE.—This important question, which has of late occupied so much public attention, was alluded to by Mr. R. A. Cross, M.P., in his charge to the grand jury at the opening of the Kirkdale Sessions. He stated that in consequence of the prompt action taken by the magistrates of Cumberland and Westmoreland in the apprehension of vagrants, people of this nomadic and half-criminal class had flocked in great numbers into Lancashire, but the magistrates there, and also those in Cheshire, were now adopting measures of arrest which it was hoped would soon teach this army of robbers (for Mr. Cross could call them nothing else) that there was no resting place for them unless they adopted some honest means of livelihood. Mr. Cross next referred to the lamentable amount of ignorance which prevailed amongst the lower classes. We boasted that we were the foremost people in the world, but we were the last people in Europe in regard to education. He urged upon the jury the importance of recognising the fact that the boys and girls now in our streets would be the men and women of the next generation.

FALSE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.—A Parliamentary return recently issued, and which seems intended to be annual, showing the number of persons convicted in Great Britain in a quarter of the year (the second quarter) of having false weights and measures, belonging to a class of returns which give an imperfect representation of facts. It states that there were 447 convictions in the metropolitan police district, 165 of them in Newington, Surrey. In Lancashire there were 203. In Staffordshire, 208. In Sussex, Wilts, Westmorland, Northumberland, and Monmouthshire there were none at all. In all Berkshire there were only two convictions; in less populous Buckinghamshire there were 18, in Bedfordshire 17, in Cambridgeshire 49, in Cornwall there were only two, in Devon 48. In Hampshire there were only seven, and all in Portsmouth. In Nottinghamshire there were 11, all but one in Nottingham town. In Warwickshire 59, the majority in Birmingham. In the East Riding of Yorkshire there were five, in the West Riding 117. In all Wales there were 55, above a fourth of them in the borough of Welshpool. It is plain enough from the return that there is a vast number of unjust weights and measures in use; but where there is no efficient inspection there are few exposures. It has been urged that weights and measures cannot be absolutely perfect, but pieces of lead attached to a scale or to the weighing end of a beam are not accidents, nor will wear and tear for a reasonable account for large defects, such as 2lb. in 25lb., or 4lb. in 4lb. The return, extending to 207 folio pages, presents a long and discreditable list of shopkeepers, using weights which give the customers smaller quantities than they pay for. The Bath rule seems a fair one; all persons using weights and measures are required to have them examined twice a year at the office of the inspector, and those who comply with this rule are not summoned if, at any intermediate visit of that officer, their weights and measures merely indicate defects consequent upon the usual wear and tear.

IMPORTANT CASE AS TO THE IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS.—A decision of some importance to municipal authorities and owners of property in the county of Lancashire was given at the quarter sessions held at Preston, on Friday week, by the chairman (Thomas Batty Addison, Esq.), in a case in which the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company were the appellants, and the Over Darwen Local Board of Health the respondents. The appeal was brought to try the validity of an order made upon the railway company by the justices of Over Darwen, on the 20th May last, for the payment of a sum of 64l. 3s., being their proportion of the expense incurred by the local board in the improvement of a street adjoining the railway company's premises at Sough, near Over Darwen. The ground of appeal was that the street in question was an ancient highway, repairable by the public, being part of the old Roman road leading from Darwen in the direction of Turton, and that the expense of its repair ought, therefore, to have been defrayed by the local board as representing the public. The respondents, however, denied this, and also insisted that the appellants were not now at liberty to raise this objection in consequence of not having given the local board notice of objection before the works were executed, in accordance with a provision contained in the Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Act 1863, under which the works were executed. This Act provided that where the local board had served a notice upon the owner of any property adjoining a street in which such improvements were proposed to be executed, informing him of what was proposed to be done, and of the estimated cost, and had also deposited detailed plans and specifications for his inspection, showing the manner in which the expenses were proposed to be apportioned, then unless such owner gave the local board a written notice of objection before the works were carried out, he would not afterwards be allowed to question the validity of the charge, except on the ground that the works had not been executed in conformity with the plans and specifications. Mr. Leresche and Mr. Watson, who appeared for the respondents, argued that the effect of this provision was that where an owner of property lay by in silence, and allowed the local board, after ample notice to him of their intention, to expend the public money in improving his property without giving any notice of objection, he should not be allowed to dispute payment. They stated that when the statute in question was passed more than 1,500,000l. of public money was about to be spent in improvements of this kind by local authorities under its provisions, and the provision in question was intended to give those authorities some security for the repayment of the money thus expended, and to secure them against unforeseen objections which might be raised by owners of property who had remained quiet until the works had been carried out and their property benefited.—Mr. Addison and Mr. Gorst, who appeared for the appellants, contended that the section referred to did not apply to an objection of this kind, and that they were at liberty to raise it any time, as in case the street were shown really to be an ancient highway they were never liable to repair it, and therefore the proceedings of the local board were bad ab initio. After a long argument which lasted the whole of the afternoon, the Chairman gave judgment for the respondents, and confirmed the order made by the justices. On the application of the counsel for the appellants, however, he gave them leave to take a case on the point to the Court of Queen's Bench, the costs to abide the event.—Several other owners of property had also appealed on a similar ground, and their cases were directed to stand over to abide the result of the railway company's appeal.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WILL—EXECUTION.—At the time of the execution of his will B. was so weak as to be unable to affix his signature, and it was signed for him by the person who drew it. On affidavit that he had afterwards frequently confirmed the will, and that the next of kin did not object, probate was granted: (Re Elcock, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 757. Prob. Ct.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—COVENANT NOT TO ASSIGN WITHOUT CONSENT—FORFEITURE.—In Sept. 1860 B. leased a tenement to C. for fourteen years, with a covenant not to underlet, assign, &c., without his written consent, with a claim of re-entry on breach. In 1865 the lessee, with B.'s written consent, parted with the possession to D., but without a formal assignment of the lease. D. continued in possession till Jan. 1867, when, being in difficulties, he executed a deed of arrangement, but before doing so he applied to B. for consent to the lease being vested in the trustees, for which permission was given. In November the trustees agreed with D. for sale of their interest in the premises; and on the 16th Dec. an agreement of sale was executed and E. entered into possession. On ejectment brought by B., it was held that on these facts there had been no forfeiture: (West v. Dobb, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 737. Q. B.)

WILL—JOINT TENANCY—SEVERANCE.—B. gave all his estate, consisting of personality only, to his wife absolutely, "for the benefit of herself and children," and appointed her executrix. He died, leaving six children; one of the daughters married during the lifetime of the widow and subsequently died. The children were held to take as joint tenants, and the marriage of the daughter was held not to operate as a severance of the joint tenancy: (Armstrong v. Armstrong, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776. V.C.J.)

effectual releases and discharges for the same, and also to institute such actions, suits, or proceedings in any court or courts of law or equity as shall be deemed necessary or advisable for enforcing the payment or recovery thereof, and to appear to and defend any actions, suits, or other proceedings commenced or to be commenced against us or our said firm, and either to proceed to judgment and execution, or to become nonsuit, or to suffer judgment to go by default in any such actions, suits, or other proceedings as aforesaid, or to compromise the same as shall be most expedient, and to submit to arbitration any disputes or questions which may arise between us or our said firm and any other person or persons, and for that purpose to execute any bonds or agreements of submission, and to perform the award to be made in pursuance thereof, and to take security for any debt or debts due to us or to our said firm, or to receive payment or satisfaction for the same in real or personal property, and for that purpose to execute all necessary conveyances and assurances thereof, and afterwards, if deemed expedient, to sell and convert into money such property, and to sign, seal, and deliver all necessary conveyances, assignments, and assurances to the purchasers of the same or any part thereof; and to give and execute valid receipts for the purchase-money, and also to compound for any debt or debts due to us or our said firm, if deemed expedient, and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, one or more attorney or attorneys, substitute or substitutes, with the whole or less power to appoint, and from time to time, at pleasure, to revoke every or any such appointment, and other or others to appoint, and generally to act, in the entire management and conduct of all matters relating to or connected with our business or the business of our said firm, and to use and pursue all such ways and means, and make, do, and execute all such acts, deeds, matters, and things, as may be requisite or expedient for that purpose, in as full and absolute a manner as we ourselves could do, perform, and execute the same in our own proper persons. We, the said A. B. and C. D., hereby ratifying, allowing, and confirming, and promising, and undertaking to ratify, allow, and confirm all and whatsoever our said attorney or any such substitute or substitutes shall lawfully do or cause to be done in the premises by virtue of these presents. We, the said A. B. and C. D., hereby authorising our said attorney to appear before all and every or any the court or courts, magistrate or magistrates, officer or officers, constituted and appointed for the registration of deeds and documents in aforesaid, and to cause these presents and all other instruments, and writings connected with the execution and fulfilment hereof to be duly registered and recorded according to law. In witness, &c.

112. Power of attorney from mortgagee of hereditaments abroad to agent to enter and sell.

Know all men by these presents, that I, A. B., of, &c., hereby constitute and appoint C. D., of, &c., my true and lawful attorney and agent for me, and in my name, and on my behalf, or otherwise, for my use, as and when he shall think proper, to enter upon and take possession of all and singular the house with the garden and appurtenances thereto in . . . And also to enter upon and take possession of all and singular, or any part or parts, of the lands, hereditaments, and premises comprised in and assured to me by way of mortgage by a certain indenture, dated, &c., and made between Y. Z. of, &c. [mortgagor] of the one part, and myself of the other part, and for that purpose or any other purpose connected with the execution and fulfilment hereof, to commence and prosecute or defend such actions, suits, or other proceedings as my said attorney shall deem expedient, And for me and in my name to exercise, perform, and execute all powers of sale and other powers or authorities over or in relation to the said house, lands, and premises, and to execute all deeds and documents necessary for the purposes aforesaid as fully and effectually as I myself could or might lawfully exercise or execute the same if personally present. And also for me and in my name or otherwise for my use, to ask, demand, and receive of and from all and every person and persons in . . . or elsewhere in . . . liable or accountable in that behalf all and every sum and sums of money, goods, securities, and effects due to me, and in his or their custody or possession, or for which such person or persons is, are, or shall be liable or accountable to me in anywise, and upon the receipt thereof to give and execute effectual releases and discharges for the same. And I empower my said attorney on payment to him by the said Y. Z., his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, of the moneys secured to me by the aforesaid mortgage to re-convey or re-assign the land and premises comprised in the said security to the person or persons entitled thereto. And in default of payment to sell the same lands and premises and every or any part thereof, and convey and assure the same or such part or parts as shall be sold to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, and to give effectual receipts, releases, and discharges for the purchase-moneys. And for all or any of the purposes aforesaid one or more, &c. [Power to appoint substitute or substitutes, and to revoke appointment, from time to time, and authority to register documents in local courts as in precedent 111, supra.] In witness, &c.

112*. Power of attorney from inspectors under deed of inspectorship, to collect portions of their trust estate.

To all to whom these presents shall come, A. B. and C. D., of, &c. [inspectors] send greeting. Whereas, &c. [recital of deed generally and particularly clause therein giving power to inspectors to delegate]. And whereas all the conditions required by the Bankruptcy Acts then in force concerning deeds of inspectorship were complied with and fulfilled, and all things done necessary to make the said in part recited indenture a valid deed of inspectorship within the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, and the same was duly registered accordingly. Now these presents witness that for better recovering and receiving the goods and moneys hereinafter referred to, and in pursuance of the above-mentioned power conferred upon and vested in the said inspectors, and by virtue of all other powers us enabling in that behalf. We, the said A. B. and C. D., do jointly and each of us, doth separately, by these presents hereby constitute and appoint Y. Z. a partner in the firm of Y. Z. and Co., of, &c., the attorney of them the said debtors and each of them; and of us the said A. B. and C. D. and of each of us for them the said debtors and each of them, and in their or his names or name, and for us the said inspectors and each of us to claim, demand, sue for, recover, receive, and take possession of all goods, chattels, and effects, accounts, books, moneys, negotiable or other instruments or securities, being parts of the said joint and separate estates of the said debtors or either of them respectively which are now due, owing, belonging, or appertaining to the said debtors, or to either of them, or to us as aforesaid, or to the said joint and separate estates respectively from M. N., of, &c. [debtor], and from the persons comprising the partnership firm of "P. O. and Co." of, &c. NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SALE OF SHARES—USAGE OF STOCK EXCHANGE—NOMINEE OF JOBBER—ULTIMATE PURCHASER.—The plaintiff, through his brokers, sold to Guerend-Gurney shares to the defendant, a jobber, for the account day, and on the same day the defendant gave in the name of G. to the plaintiff's brokers as the ultimate purchaser G.'s name was given with his authority, and was not objected to at the time by the plaintiff or his brokers, and in due course a transfer to was executed by the plaintiff and handed to or to F., his broker, for him, and the price the shares was received by the plaintiff through his own brokers. It afterwards appeared that the shares had been in fact purchased by through his broker F., and that upon Over and Gurney's failure, shortly before the next day, S. had directed his broker not to pass G.'s name as the purchaser, and accordingly F., in direction of S., passed G.'s name to the defendant as that of the purchaser. This was done in pursuance of an arrangement made by with G., a person in poor circumstances, wholly irresponsible, that for the sum of 4l. he should take a transfer of the shares into

(a) It must clearly appear in this and like cases, of the persons seeking to give such a power are competent to do so, and expressly authorised to delegate what they are acting, otherwise such a substitution would be in contravention of the maxim, delegatus non potest delegare, and void. Where, however, authority is given by A. to B. to execute a power himself, or give it another; by so giving it he does not delegate it. (See Doe dem. Duke of Devonshire v. Lord G. Cavendish, 4 T. R. 774n.)

name; but of this arrangement the brokers on both sides and the plaintiff and defendant were entirely ignorant. G. not paying calls subsequently made, and the defendant, though requested by the plaintiff to do so, refusing to pay them, the plaintiff was compelled to pay the amount, and in an action to recover it back from the defendant, it was held, on the authority of Grissell v. Bristowe, in the Exchequer Chamber, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 390; L. Rep. 4 C. P. 36; 38 L. J. 10, C. P., by Kelly C. B., Bramwell, B., and (hesitante) Pigott, B. (dissentiente Cleasby, B.) that the defendant having given in, with the nominee's authority, the name of G. as the ultimate purchaser, and the plaintiff having accepted it without objection, and executed a transfer of the shares to G., the defendant had performed his part of the contract as jobber, and exonerated himself of all liability thereon. Per Kelly, C.B. —Any holder of shares in a joint-stock company may lawfully sell and transfer them, and cease to be the proprietor of them, and vest the property in them in the vendee, with or without consideration, or even paying a sum of money to the vendee to accept them, although the latter be irresponsible or insolvent; and if the name of an insolvent, who has thus become the owner of shares, be given in by the jobber as the ultimate purchaser, the seller by the usage of the Stock Exchange, may object to him, and has ten days from the account-day for that purpose; but if he fail to do so, and accepts the nominee without inquiry, he is bound by the usage to recognise him, and him alone, as the purchaser. Per Bramwell B.—Upon a sale of shares in the Stock Exchange market, where both the buyer and seller are members of the Exchange, the sale must be taken to be according to the rules and practice of the Stock Exchange, and there is no question as to the reasonableness of such rules and practice. Per Cleasby, B.—The usage for the jobber to substitute a name for his own is limited to the legitimate purposes for which it was intended, and does not apply when the name given is not that of an ultimate purchaser, but of a man of straw, selected because he is a man of straw, and bribed to permit his name to be used. The ticket by which the name is passed must, by the usage, be a bona fide document; it passes current among the brokers, and this currency makes it a most important document, and must be upon the faith of its being genuine. Here, it falsely represented G., the pauper substitute, to be a purchaser at 2s. 6d. discount, or 14l. 7s. 6d. a share, and so imposed upon the plaintiff's brokers, who made out the transfer upon its basis. I should decline, therefore, to infer that the same usage which made it pass current recognised, as coming within the usage, a document fabricated for the purpose of imposition. The defendant has not satisfied the usage, nor having given the name of an ultimate purchaser, in compliance with it, and, therefore, continues responsible to the plaintiff: (Masted v. Paine, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 148. Ex.)

ANSWERS TO THE FINAL EXAMINATION QUESTIONS.

TRINITY TERM 1869.—SECOND DAY.

VI. BANKRUPTCY AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

56. Verdict when provable.—A verdict is only prima facie evidence of a debt, which the assignees are at liberty to impeach; and if there be legal or equitable grounds upon which the verdict cannot stand, it is the duty of the commissioner to inquire into them, and admit or reject proof accordingly: (Doria & Mac. Bank. 786.) Even when damages in tort have been assessed by a jury, they are not considered as a liquidated debt provable under the bankruptcy till judgment has been actually signed: (Sm. M. L. 598, 5th edit.)

57. Proof of debt.—He may do so by statement and declaration: (See the mode, Doria & Mac. Bank. 786.)

58. Creditor holding security.—The chief rule on this subject is that a creditor holding a security upon the bankrupt's estate shall not be suffered to prove unless he will give it up, or its value has been ascertained by sale. But a creditor holding a security of a third person is not obliged to give it up or sell it before proving. So a joint creditor holding a separate security from one of the co-debtors, or separate securities from both of them, may prove against the joint estate without surrender or sale of his security. And the holder of a joint security may prove against the separate estate of one debtor, and recover what he can against the other: (Sm. M. L. 595, 5th edit.)

59. Action—Election.—Yes; he may relinquish his action, and then prove under the adjudication; and such proof will be considered an election to take under the adjudication, and the creditor is thereby freed from the costs of the suit: (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 182.)

60. Action.—See preceding answer.

61. Proof for costs.—Costs, though untaxed, of obtaining any judgment, decree, or order, which may have been made before bankruptcy, for any debt or demand may be proved. So the payment of costs enforceable by attachment may be proved: (Will. P. P. 138, 5th edit.)

62. Judgment-debtor summons.—Every judgment-creditor who is entitled to issue a ca. sa. against the debtor in respect of any debt of 50l., exclusive of costs, may at the end of one week in the case of a trader, and at the end of one month in the case of a non-trader, issue a judgment-debtor summons requiring him to appear and be examined respecting his liability to pay the debt under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134: (See further Will. P. P. 128, et seq., 5th edit.)

63. Composition-deed—Evidence.—It must be duly registered under the 194th section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134.

64. Composition or trust deeds.—(1) A majority in number, representing three-fourths in value of 10l. and upwards, after deducting the value of securities held, must assent to the deed and prove their debts by affidavit or declaration; (2) the deed must be executed by the trustees; (3) the execution by the debtor must be attested by a solicitor; (4) within twenty-eight days from its execution, the deed, duly stamped, and a certified copy, and schedule of debts and liabilities, the times when they were incurred and the consideration for them, the names and addresses of the creditors, the amounts due to them, the securities held by them, and the value of such securities, &c., verified by affidavit, must be left with the chief registrar of bankrupts; (5) the fact that the required majority of creditors have assented, and the value of the property must be verified. A memorandum of the deed must also be left and advertised in the Gazette within forty-eight hours afterwards: (See Bankruptcy Acts 1861 and 1868, and Orders thereon.)

65. See answer No. 58.

66. Requisites to adjudication.—There must be proof, by affidavit or otherwise, of a trading within the meaning of the bankrupt laws, a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt, and the debt must have been contracted whilst the debtor was a trader, or must have been subsisting during that period, and due before the bankruptcy; an act of bankruptcy must be committed within twelve months before the filing of the petition, and the creditor must proceed to obtain the adjudication within three days after filing his petition, or within such extended time (not exceeding fourteen days) as shall be allowed by the court: (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106.)

67. Steps after adjudication.—A duplicate of the adjudication is served on the bankrupt, who is allowed seven days, or such extended time as the court thinks fit, to show cause against the adjudication, and if this be not done, it is forthwith to be advertised in the Gazette: (See the further proceedings, Will. P. P. 135, et seq., 5th edit.)

68. Act of bankruptcy by trader-debtor—Summons.—Under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, which provides that a creditor may deliver in writing the particulars of his demand, with a notice requiring payment, and file an affidavit of the truth of the debt, that the debtor is a trader, and that he has delivered particulars and notice. The trader is then summoned to appear before the commissioner and state whether he admits or denies the demand, and swear he has a good defence. If he admits it, or any part of it, he must sign and file a written admission. If he refuses to admit the demand, the court may require him to sign and file a deposition on oath that he has a good defence on the merits, and enters into a bond with two sureties to pay such sum and costs as may be recovered in an action by the creditor. If he does not do so, or makes default in appearing to the summons (having no lawful impediment), and does not, within seven days after personal service of the summons or filing the admission, pay, secure, or compound for the debt, he commits an act of bankruptcy on the eighth day, provided a petition be filed against him within two months from the filing of creditor's affidavit: (See sects. 78 to 81.)

VII. CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES.

71. Justices of the peace.—Justices of the peace were formerly called conservators; and of these, several are so by virtue of their office: the first is the King; then comes the Lord Chancellor; the lord treasurer; the lord high steward; the lord marshal; the justices of the Court of Queen's Bench; the Master of the Rolls; the coroner. Justices of the peace are either for the borough or county: (See further, 2 Steph. Com.)

72. Highway.—By the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, amended by 4 & 5 Vict. cc. 51, 59; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 71, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), the inhabitants in vestry assembled may direct the surveyor to apply to two justices of the division to examine a highway, with a view of its being diverted or stopped up; and if a certificate of the justices in favour of the proceeding is sent to the quarter sessions, the justices there assembled are to make the order accordingly. But in case of a diversion, the proceedings must be by consent of the owner of the lands through which the new highway is to pass. And a party, thinking himself aggrieved, may appeal from the certificate of the justices to the quarter sessions, before the order of that court is made: (3 St. C. 249, &c., 5th edit.)

73. Landlord and tenant.—Where the rent does not exceed 20l. and the term is ended by notice to quit, &c., the landlord, &c. may give seven days' notice of his intention to apply to justices. On the hearing, on proof of the tenancy, the title and service, the justices may issue a warrant for the delivery up of possession at not less than twenty-one or more than thirty days: (See Stone's Justice, 194; Law Examination Reporter, No. 3, p. 49.)

74. Mode of procedure.—The prisoner is taken before a magistrate. The evidence of the witnesses is taken down in writing in his presence, and signed by them and also by the magistrate. The depositions are read over to the prisoner, and anything he may say after being cautioned is also taken down. If the magistrate is satisfied that there is a prima facie case against the prisoner, he will commit him to prison for trial, or admit him to bail. An indictment is subsequently preferred at the assizes against him to the grand jury, and if they return a true bill he is tried in due course by the petit jury.

75. Competency of witnesses.—Very little difference now prevails as to the competency or incompetency of witnesses in civil and criminal cases; yet an important exception exists as to husbands and wives who are witnesses for and against each other in ordinary civil actions and suits but not in criminal cases: (Rosc. Cr. Ev. 116, 6th edit.)

76. Rules of evidence.—The general rules of evidence are the same in criminal as civil cases. And the primary division is into primary and secondary evidence; and the best evidence must be produced, if possible, before any other evidence is admitted: (Rosc. Cr. Ev. 1, 6th edit., et infra.)

77. Irrelevant matter.—Evidence which would otherwise be inadmissible is received because it serves to identify the prisoner with the commission of the crime; or to explain his motives or intention; and in other like cases: (Rosc. Cr. Ev. 86, et seq., 6th edit.)

78. Circumstantial evidence.—Direct evidence is the best or primary mode of proof, as where a prisoner was seen to commit the crime. It is circumstantial when the fact itself cannot be proved by direct evidence, but by surrounding circumstances, as on proof of a felony having been committed and the property is shortly afterwards found in the possession of the prisoner: (Russ. Crimes, 726 733.)

79. Presumptions.—Presumptions of law are rules of jurisprudence, while presumptions of facts are inferences of facts from the proved existence of other facts—acts of reasoning. In civil cases it is always necessary for a jury to decide the question at issue, and whatever be their decision rights of the parties will be affected; but in criminal cases there is always a result open to a jury which is partly looked upon as merely negative, namely, that which declares the accused to be not guilty: (Rosc. Cr. Ev. 14, 15, 6th edit.)

80. Presumptions.—(1). Not to convict one of stealing the goods of an unknown person merely because he would not give an account how he came by them unless there was proof of a felony of those goods. (2). Not to convict of murder or manslaughter unless the fact were proved to be done, or the body found dead.

81. Burden of proof.—Presumptions of law are sometimes so strong as to throw the burden of proof on the prisoner; as when A. kills B. with a deadly weapon, malice premeditated is presumed and must be rebutted by the prisoner.

82. Witnesses.—In cases of treason and perjury.

83. Dying declarations.—When made in full confidence of approaching death and when the death is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declarations.

84. Confessions.—The confession must be voluntary, for if made by threat or inducement of a temporal nature having reference to the charge it is not receivable. The inducement must, however, be by a person in authority, as the prosecutor.

85. Privilege of witness.—The grounds are three:—(1) that to answer the question would expose the witness to consequences so injurious that he should be allowed to decline doing so; (2) that to answer the question would be a breach of confidence which he ought not to be forced to commit; (3) that to compel the witness to answer the question would be against public policy: (Rosc. Cr. Ev. 137, 6th edit.)

(a) The questions are given ante, p. 168.

MERCANTILE LAW.

WHAT IS "MACHINERY."—A point as to the meaning of "machinery" in the mortgage of a mill, has been decided by Lord Justice Giffard in a case Ex parte Astbury and Ex parte Lloyd's Banking Company, re Richards and Hill. The dispute was between the assignees of Richards and Hill, who were bankrupts, and the banking company, who were mortgagees of the premises and machinery of a rolling-mill. The latter claimed under the mortgage, as against the bankrupts' assignees, certain duplicate sets of iron rolls as part of the machinery, and this claim was ratified by the Lord Justice. His reason was that the duplicate set of rolls were like duplicate latch-keys to a lock—it was unreasonable to argue that under a deed only one set of latch-keys would pass. His Lordship also decided that the "straightening plates" for a weighing machine passed under the mortgage, though the machine itself being quite detached, and not being part of the fixed machinery of the mill, would not so pass.

TELEGRAPH LAW.—The case of Playford v. The Electric Telegraph Company is probably one of the last cases we shall hear of to recover damages from a company for a mistake in a telegram; but the point raised was curious, though the case cannot be of much importance now as a precedent. The plaintiffs having a cargo of ice at Grimsby, invited an offer from merchants at Hull for it, and the latter telegraphed that they would give 23s. per cwt. This price the telegraph company made 27s., and the plaintiffs at once sent the cargo to Hull to their great loss. In an action against the company, however, to recover that loss, it was decided that the plaintiffs could not maintain it, as the contract to send the message was not with them. Such a decision undoubtedly reveals a great imperfection in the law. Either the receiver of the telegram should be entitled to recover damages for the wrong-going of the telegraph company in a matter where they certainly had an interest, or the company should be considered the agent of the sender of the message, so that the plaintiffs would have been entitled to hold the sender responsible for the message as delivered, his right of action against the company being undoubted. But the law is ceasing to be of practical interest, when the public are about accepting an agency from which no damages will be recoverable. We may suggest, however, that the telegraph department ex gratia should create an insurance fund for mistakes in messages. The liability to fatal mistake is much greater with telegrams than with letters, and this is a good practical reason for not applying to it the Post Office rule of no damages for mistakes or delay.—Economist.

MARITIME LAW

NOTICE OF ABANDONMENT.—The rule has been laid down by the Queen's Bench, in the case of Strange v. The English and Scottish Marine Insurance Company, arising out of the American war, that notice of abandonment may be given after capture on any material change in the condition of the things insured, and that a forced sale under the orders of the court, the defendants objecting to give bail for the full value of the goods, was such a change. The mere prolongation of the litigation would not have been enough when the assured had elected not to treat the loss as total; but the sale of the cargo "placed the case on quite a different footing," and the assured became entitled to give notice of abandonment.

MARITIME LAW—THROUGH FREIGHTS.—According to Greeves v. The West India and Pacific Steamship Company, the agents for through freights, and the shippers who employ them, would require to be very careful in their arrangements. The plaintiffs in this case had shipped through to San Francisco by arrangement with the defendants, who, however, only signed the bill of lading "for the service from Liverpool to Colon," two other companies signing it "for the service from Colon to San Francisco." Notwithstanding this the defendants received the whole freight; and the goods having been lost between Liverpool and Colon, the question was whether they were entitled to retain the whole, and pay the two companies which had never received the goods at all, under the stipulation that "freight and prime is to be considered as earned, ship lost or not lost," or whether they should retain all the freight except what they themselves earned. The latter was the view taken by the court, and the defendants were held to have acted wrongfully in paying to the second carriers an allowance for freight on goods which they had not begun to carry. Had the defendants signed the bill of lading for the whole service, the judgment perhaps would have been different, but the evidence was held to prove that the service and freight were to be distributed.—Economist.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

COURT OF ARCHES ARE BOUND TO ACCEPT LETTERS OF REQUEST.—CONSTRUCTION OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE ACT.—After a report of a commission of inquiry on a charge of heresy, a bishop sent the case by letters of request to the Court of Arches. That court having refused to accept the letters of request so sent, on appeal to the Judicial Committee, it was held (reversing the judgment below), that on the true construction of the Church Discipline Act, the judge of the Court of Arches could not refuse to deal with the case. The words of sect. 13 of the Act, "to be there heard and determined according to the law and practice of such court," are to be construed according to their ordinary acceptation, as creating the duty as well as the power of so hearing and determining the case sent. Letters of request are no more than the process by which the cause is to be placed in a condition to be heard and determined by the Superior Court. Comments on the cases of *Brookes v. COUNTY COURTS.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

COSTS.—The plaintiff, on the 15th July 1867, and before the passing of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, commenced an action in this court against the defendant for goods sold and delivered, which action by a judge's order was referred for trial to a County Court, but before trial the above statute came into operation. At the trial a verdict was returned for the plaintiff for 13l. Held (per Mr. Justice Lush and Mr. Justice Hayes), that by the operation of the above statute the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs; but per Mr. Justice Hannen that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs by virtue of the Statute of Gloucester: (Mirfin v. Atwood, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 779. Q.B.)

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. Serjeant WHEELER, Judge.)

MILLIGAN v. MACK.

Admiralty jurisdiction—Wages.

In this case, which which was heard a short time since, his HONOUR gave judgment as follows:—This was a plaintiff entered on the common law side of the court, since the time at which the order in council constituting this court an Admiralty Court took effect, to recover from the defendant, the owner of the ship Mary Mack, the sum of 25l. 8s. 1d., claimed to be due to the plaintiff as master of such ship. Mr. Bremner appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Nordon for the defendant; and when the case came on for trial Mr. Nordon objected that the cause had been wrongly entered on the common law side, and that the court has now no power to entertain the suit except under its Admiralty jurisdiction. This objection—which is a very formidable one, and is supported by the high authority of Messrs. Williams and Bruce in their recent very able work on Admiralty practice—arises under the 5th section of the Act 30 & 31 Vict. c. 71, by which Admiralty jurisdiction is conferred upon County Courts. The 2nd section authorises Her Majesty, by order in council, to appoint that any County Court should have Admiralty jurisdiction, and to assign to it a district for Admiralty purposes. And the section further provides that any such order in council might be from time to time varied as deemed expedient, and that a County Court so appointed to have Admiralty jurisdiction, and no other County Court, should, for the purposes of the Act, be deemed a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction. Sect. 3 provides that any County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction should have jurisdiction and all powers and authorities relating thereto to try and determine, subject and according to the provisions of that Act, certain enumerated causes, which, says the section, are "in this Act referred to as Admiralty causes." Amongst the enumerated causes is any claim for wages not exceeding 150l. The 5th section, upon which the present question hinges, provides that, after the time specified in each order in council under that Act, appointing a county court to have Admiralty jurisdiction within any district, and no County Court other than the County Court so appointed should have jurisdiction within that district in any Admiralty cause, provided that all Admiralty causes at that time pending in any County Court within that district might be continued as if no such order in council had been made. What, then, is the meaning of this section? For the plaintiff it is contended that it leaves the common law powers of all the County Courts untouched; whilst the defendant insists that any causes which by the Act are made Admiralty causes, and which, when the order in council appointing a particular County Court to have Admiralty jurisdiction took effect, were pending under the common law jurisdiction of such court, might be continued as if no order in council had been made, but that no further plaintiffs could be entered on the common law side of the court in respect of causes which by the Act are made Admiralty causes, all such claims being thenceforth cognisable only under the provisions of the Admiralty Act. Now, unless and until a County Court were made an Admiralty Court under that Act, it had not and it could not have any Admiralty causes pending, and therefore it is difficult to understand how this section can be said to apply to the case of a court which has not, and never had, Admiralty jurisdiction. Upon looking back to the 2nd section, it will be found that it is expressly provided that any order in council appointing a particular court to have Admiralty jurisdiction, and assigning to it a particular district, may be from time to time varied as may seem expedient, so that, in fact, there may be a succession of orders in council, under one of which Admiralty jurisdiction may in the first instance be given to a particular court, and under another of which it may be taken away from that same court. And the introductory words of the 5th section point to a varying state of things, for they speak of "the time specified in each order in council," evidently referring to successive orders in council, in which the state of things existing under any previous order in council may be changed. The proviso at the close of the 5th section may, therefore, be interpreted as applicable to the case of a court which has been made an Admiralty Court under the Act, and in which Admiralty causes have been pending, but whose powers as an Admiralty Court have ceased by some subsequent order in council. The effect of this interpretation is that the common law powers of the County Courts remain unaffected by the Act. This construction has the advantage of being consistent with what I think may be fairly assumed to have been the intention of the framers of the Act, namely, to add a jurisdiction, but not to interfere with an existing jurisdiction where the amount claimed is within the ordinary common law powers of the court. And it would really be a great evil if the court were to be compelled to adopt the construction of the Act contended for by the defendant; because the result would be to compel the institution of an Admiralty suit instead of an ordinary plaintiff in the most trivial cases of, say seaman's wages, and to take away from every County Court in England a jurisdiction which each court (but for the Admiralty Act) possesses in common. It is often very difficult to construe the terms of an Act of Parliament; but where, in a statute intended to confer a benefit upon the community, as in this case, by improving the remedies or adding a new remedy for the assertion of private rights, the language used is either doubtful in import or admits of diverse interpretations, I conceive it to be the duty of the court so to interpret it as to secure to the public the benefit intended. That benefit seems to me in this class of cases to consist in giving to parties having a maritime lien the benefit of that lien by affording facilities for the institution of Admiralty suits in certain County Courts, leaving open the ordinary remedy at common law. The difficulties of the conclusion I have come to upon the words of the statute are enhanced by the fact that my view appears to differ from the opinion expressed by the very learned writers to whom I have referred, who consider that the "section takes away, subject to the proviso, all common law jurisdiction as to the claims mentioned in sect. 3 from all County Courts other than the County Courts mentioned in the Order in Council," and that "all such claims seem to be subject to the provisions of the Act." I am glad to add that my opinion is subject to review, and that I shall be happy to give every facility for the purpose.

BUYING STOLEN PROPERTY.—On Friday, at the Westminster County Court, an action was brought by Mr. Harold, one of the "Royal Christys," against Mr. Watson, musical instrument dealer, of Holborn, for the recovery of 11l., which he had paid to him for the purchase of a valuable flute in May last. The flute in question was stolen from the office of Mr. L. P. Emile Clairat, of Lloyd's, in Leadenhall-street, in July 1867.

On the discovery of the robbery, Mr. Clairat applied to the city detective police, and advertised his loss in the daily papers, and likewise in the Pawnbrokers' Gazette. The flute cost thirty guineas. Mr. Harold, on purchasing the instrument, finding it wanted repairing, took it to the maker, Mr. Clinton, of Percy-street, who recognised the flute as the only one of that description made by him, and immediately informed Mr. Clairat of the circumstance. Mr. Clairat placed the matter in the hands of Detective-officer Smart, who traced it as having been pawned at Mr. Attenborough's, No. 72, Strand, on the afternoon of the day of its being stolen, and subsequently sent to Messrs. Debenham's for sale at a public auction, where it was purchased by Mr. Watson. The Judge stated that, as the flute was distinctly proved to be stolen property, it must be given up, and the 11l. be paid to Mr. Harold, with costs.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BANKRUPTCY—LANDLORD AND TENANT—ELECTION BY ASSIGNEES.—R. held of the plaintiff, as tenant from year to year, two farms, the one from 29th Sept. 1864, the other from 29th March 1865, and became bankrupt in Aug. 1866. R.'s assignees then took possession of the farms, and certain disputes having arisen between them and the landlord as to the observance of the terms on which R. held the farms, the assignees refused, in Oct. and Nov. 1866, to allow the landlord to enter on the farms for the purpose of cultivating them, or for any other purpose, and sold the feed of parts of the farms up to Christmas 1866, and did not deliver up possession of the one farm till March 1867, or of the other till Dec. 1866. The assignees having refused to pay rent after Sept. 1866, and having neglected to cultivate the farms, on a case empowering the court to draw inferences of fact: Held, that the assignees by their conduct must be taken to have elected to take the farms, and consequently that they were liable for the rent owing up to the time of their delivering up possession, and for the damage caused by their neglect to cultivate the farms: (Bradshaw v. James, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 781. Q. B.)

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Wednesday, June 30.

Re GEO. UNDERWOOD.

The B. A. 1861—Suspension of proceedings in bankruptcy under sect. 110.—Parochial rates. The court has no jurisdiction to order payment of rates in full where the assignees have divested themselves of the estate in favour of the bankrupt, and where he has obtained his order of discharge.

Motion in this case was made to the court on the 23rd inst., and judgment reserved till this day. His Honour said:—In this case an application has been made by Mr. Tidswell on behalf of the collector of the extra-parochial district of Toxtethpark, for leave from this court to apply to the justices sitting in petty sessions for a warrant of distress on the goods of the bankrupt, in satisfaction of a claim for 78l. 15s. due for poor rates to the overseers of the said district. It appears by the file of proceedings, that a proof for 87l. 3s. 9d. was duly made by the collector on the 7th Oct. 1868. On the 20th of Oct. 1868, proceedings in bankruptcy were suspended under the provisions of sect. 110, Bankruptcy Act 1861. Subsequently, on the 30th Dec. 1868, an order was made by Mr. Registrar Lee, duly acting as deputy for the commissioner of this court, in the terms of sect. 156, Bankruptcy Act 1861, for payment of 78l. 15s. being poor rates in full. It was forcibly argued by Mr. Tidswell, on the authority of the judgment of Mr. Commissioner Bacon in Ex parte St. Andrews, Holborn, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 281, that it was not in the power of a debtor extending a deed of assignment or composition to escape from the conditions which gave to certain public burdens a priority over the claims of creditors; but I am of opinion that it is unnecessary for me to review either the facts or the numerous decisions to which I was referred, as Mr. Tidswell has failed to satisfy me that there is any ground for the interference of this court. The leave of the court is indisputably necessary in the case of deeds of arrangement under sect. 198 (Bankruptcy Act 1861), but there is no provision of a like description applicable to liquidation or composition under sect. 110. The representative of the parish officers must apply to the justices in petty sessions for a warrant of distress in the ordinary way. That tribunal will decide all questions both of law and fact; and if the overseers be dissatisfied with the decision of the justices, they have an opportunity of appeal by applying for a rule in the Court of Queen's Bench, under the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44. I am therefore of opinion that the present application must be refused.

Tidswell said that his client's application to the Court of Bankruptcy was in consequence of intimation from the magistrates that they considered the question to be within the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy.

His Honour repeated that no case had been made out for the interference of the Court of Bankruptcy.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION FOR ARTICLED CLERKS.—I intend presenting myself shortly for the preliminary examination, but see no prospect of being articulated to a solicitor for several years. Supposing I successfully pass the preliminary examination now, can I be articulated five or ten years hence? C. G.

[Certainly.—Ed.]

LAW STUDENTSHIP.—Can any one inform me where I can obtain particulars as to the law studentships given by the Council of Legal Education, and the exhibitions given by the Inns of Court? Can articulated clerks compete for both or either of these? GEORGIUS.

[Only Bar students can compete. Apply to the steward, Lincoln's-inn.—Ed.]

DEED OF ARRANGEMENT.—A., finding himself in difficulties, proposes to pay his creditors a composition. His liabilities amount to about 40l., and there cannot be any assent required to the deed as there are no debts amounting to 10l. and upwards, the largest one being 9l. I shall be glad if some of your readers will inform me through the columns of your journal whether the deed can be registered under the Bankruptcy Act, and, if so, whether the same steps (save the list of creditors over 10l.) must be taken as in the case of an ordinary deed. Queries.

55. FREIGHT—BROKERAGE.—A shipbroker takes a captain to a merchant, who offers him a freight of 16s. per ton for a certain voyage, which he declines. Subsequently another broker offers him 16s. 6d. for the same voyage, which he accepts, and this broker draws up a charter-party, which is signed by the merchant aforesaid, the captain and broker. The difference in freight between 16s. and 16s. 6d. the broker makes good out of his own pocket. The captain is now sued by the first-mentioned broker for commission on freight, on the ground, it is presumed, of being the first to introduce the captain to the merchant. I should be obliged by the opinion of some of your readers, citing cases if possible, as to the validity of the claim. It should also be stated that a third broker had previously been to the said merchant, at the captain's request, and obtained the offer of the said freight, but the captain did not accompany this broker to the merchant's office. It is customary to allow one-third of the brokerage to the merchant and one-third to the captain or owner. Can the broker claim more than his share? X. Y.

Answers.

(Q. 30.) APPRENTICESHIP.—"W. H. F." appears to have confined his attention to the interpretation clause of the Act of 1867, and to have considered neither the rest of the Act nor the previous enactments which for the time it supersedes. Now, if he will read the very next section (sect. 3) he will find that the Act is expressly confined to the scope of certain existing enactments; and this being so, there can be no grounds for contending that the common law right in question, if unaffected by those enactments, is affected by the Act of 1867. Apparently the sole ground on which "W. H. F." bases his opinion is that by the interpretation clause the word "employed" shall include apprentices, whether under the age of twenty-one or above that age. I confess I do not see what that has to do with the question; but, taking the argument for what it is worth, "W. H. F." will find in studying the previous enactment, that refractory infant apprentices were as liable to be punished before 1867 as they are now, and that in this respect there is nothing to distinguish this Act from its predecessors. Irrespective of sect. 3, I can see nothing in the Act from which even a vague inference can be drawn that it was intended to abolish the right in question, beside which, I think that the right is of such a character, and depends upon such broad principles, that nothing short of an express enactment can disturb it. M. E. S.

Q. 41.) MARRIED WOMAN—REAL PROPERTY.—The views expressed by "W. H. F." in answer to this query, appear to be so contrary to common sense, and to be referable to no well-known principle, that I should be glad to know what authorities he can adduce in support. That he can adduce sufficient authorities I do not doubt, as his opinion is expressed with such confidence, but in the mean time may I venture to say that I know of none, and that my views coincide with those of "E. H. B.," viz., that the child must be legally regarded as the child of the first husband. It is true that where a child is born after marriage, that could not possibly have been conceived in wedlock, it is in law considered as the child of the husband; but the principle on which it is so considered is by no means applicable to the present case. It is, however, the only one I can think of as tending to lead "W. H. F." to the opinion he has expressed. M. E. S.

(Q. 44.) APPOINTMENT OF NEW TRUSTEES—EXERCISE OF POWER.—I do not agree with "W. H. F." and "J. P." in the opinion they come to herein. Stone v. Rowton, 17 Beav. 308; 1 Eq. R. 427, is clearly applicable to the case here submitted. If the power had been properly followed the surviving trustee should have appointed a trustee in the place of the deceased trustee, and the trustee so appointed should then have appointed a trustee in the place of the surviving trustee on his declining to act. Is it not necessary in order to give a retiring trustee power to appoint in his own place to add the words "for this purpose a retiring trustee shall be considered a continuing trustee," or words to that effect? I should like to be informed whether in Hadley v. Hadley, quoted by "J. P.," words to that effect are not contained in that power. The enabling words are altogether wanting in the case stated by "Querist," and I believe their absence is fatal to the appointment purporting to have been made by the retiring trustee. W. S.

—I must beg leave to differ from "W. H. F." and "J. P." on the point raised in this query, in spite of the assertion of the former that "there can be no doubt" on the subject. It appears from the statement of facts that after A. had renounced, B. appointed D. as sole trustee in his own stead and retired. Now the words of the power, so far as material, are, that in case either of the trustees should renounce, it should be lawful for the surviving or continuing trustee to appoint a fit person in the place of the trustee so renouncing. Evidently then the power is not well exercised by the appointment of a new trustee in the place of B., and that is the first flaw in the exercise of the power. Again, the power is vested in the "surviving or continuing trustee." A. having renounced, I think that his subsequent death cannot be taken into account, and that B. cannot be called the surviving trustee within the meaning of the power. Neither can B. if he retire be called a continuing trustee, and the appointment made by him is consequently invalid. He should first have appointed a new trustee in the place of A., and then if he wished to retire, the new trustee might, as the continuing trustee, have appointed another trustee in his stead. Upon this point the case is on all-fours with Travis v. Dingworth, 34 L. J. 665, Ch. The cases quoted by "J. P." are not precisely applicable to, and cannot govern, the present. In Carnoy v. Best, 19 Beav. 414, the power was vested in the surviving or continuing or other trustee, and the decision rested on the force of the words "other trustee." In Hadley v. Hadley, 5 De G. & S. 67, the words were "acting trustee," and it was held that a trustee would come under that denomination, if he merely acted by appointing another trustee and then retired. A third flaw in the appointment is, in my opinion, the appointment of a sole trustee, which, I think, is not warranted by the power. The words of the power, so far as material, are "To appoint any fit person or persons in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying," &c., and without doing violence to the natural meaning of the words, I do not see how the expression can be construed otherwise than as if it were "to appoint a fit person in the place of the trustee, or fit persons in the place of the trustees so dying," &c. Moreover, the intention of the settlor to sanction a departure from the original number of trustees must be clearly expressed: (Stones v. Rowton, 22 L. J. 975, Ch.), and the most that can be said here is, that there is a doubt on the point. On the three grounds above stated, I am of opinion that the power was not well exercised, and that "D." can make no title. M. E. S.

LAW LIBRARY.

Selwyn's Abridgment of the Law of Nisi Prius. Thirteenth Edition. By DAVID KEANE, Q.C. and CHARLES P. SMITH, M.A. London: Stevens and Sons.

To the lawyers of the last generation there was no better known book than Selwyn's Nisi Prius; it was on the shelf of every office, in every bag at the assizes. By reason of its alphabetical arrangement, its abundant information was readily accessible; it had no rival; it formed, in fact, the portable law library of the practitioner. How it came to lose any portion of its popularity it would be hard to say, for, though it had rivals, none of them approached it in accuracy. Stephens's book, greatly exceeding it in size, did not supply more plentiful law to compensate for its increased bulkiness. Perhaps it was that the changes in the law were so rapid that it was found to be impossible to keep pace with them, and that scarcely was "copy" ready for the press before law reforms completed or announced forbade the costly process of printing what in a twelvemonth would have been worthless. Be this as it may, prudence dictated delay year after year in the production of a new edition, and it was not until a lull in the process of change offered some chance of permanency for their labours that the editors of this one, Mr. Keane, Q. C. and Mr. C. P. Smith, adventured upon publication. Even as it is, they have found it necessary to omit the title "Bankruptcy," over which a complete revolution has passed since their volumes have issued from the press.

But here we have at last an invaluable body of sound practical law, so reduced in bulk by judicious compression that the whole subject is thoroughly treated in two not very ponderous volumes; thus exactly reversing the usual fate of law books, whose custom it is to grow in bulk with every successive edition, until a little treatise for the pocket becomes a burden for the bag. It will be obvious from the accumulation of statutes and decisions since the former edition, that the greater portion of the work must have been rewritten, and with what laborious care this was done will appear from this, that the mere list of cases cited fills no less than 120 columns of small type.

Although professing to be a book of Nisi Prius law, it is quite as useful in the County Courts, which now have jurisdiction on almost every subject comprised in these two volumes; and therefore it will be as much the text-book of that popular tribunal as of the Superior Courts. Moreover, it contains just those subjects on which the solicitor is most frequently consulted by his clients, and for which he needs the latest, readiest, and most reliable information. Here he will find it, and thus it will be found as useful in the office as in the courts.

If there be any reader to whom it is not already known, it will suffice to tell him that the plan of the work is this: The subjects of Nisi Prius contention are arranged in alphabetical order for convenience of reference, and each one is treated by describing, first, the general law relating to it and the evidence necessary to support the action, then the declaration, then the plea, and finally the damages and judgment.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM LEE, Q.C.

Mr. William Lee, one of Her Majesty's Counsel and a bencher of the Inner Temple, who died at his residence, Brighton, on the 7th of this month, in the 83rd year of his age, was called to the Bar so long ago as July 1813. Mr. Lee was a most learned real property lawyer, and his opinion was so highly esteemed by the Chancery Judges, and especially by the late Lord Justice Knight Bruce, that Mr. Lee was often called upon by that learned judge to give his opinion as amicus curiæ. Mr. Lee might always have commanded a large practice, but he lacked business habits, and for ten or fifteen years past he may be said to have done nothing in the way of his profession. In spite of increasing years and infirmities he continued to haunt the courts, too long for his own comfort and dignity. Lord Westbury, when he came to town fresh from his successes at Oxford, entered the chambers of Mr. Lee as a pupil; and many years after, when the pupil had become Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, at a dinner given to the Benchers of the two Temples, Lord Westbury gratefully as well as gracefully alluded to the valuable instruction which he had received from Mr. Lee. If the late Mr. Tidd was justly proud of having counted among his pupils Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Cottenham, Mr. Lee pointed with equal pride to the success of his pupil Lord Westbury, both at the Bar and on the woolsack. Mr. Lee was in the habit of saying good things in a dry and sarcastic manner. One may be mentioned. When, twelve years ago, to the surprise of every one, the late Lord Wensleydale was created a peer for life, Mr. Lee asked "was his Lordship tenant for life without impeachment?"

PROMOTIONS & APPOINTMENTS

The Right Honourable Sir Robert Joseph Phillimore, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England, has appointed Mr. John Postlethwaite Cartwright, of the City of Chester, to be a standing Commissioner for taking bail; and also a Commissioner to administer oaths in the said court.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Edwin Bedford of Haberdashers Hall, London, gentleman, to be a London Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. Charles Edward Challinor, of Hanley, in the county of Stafford, gentleman, a Commissioner to administer oaths in Chancery in England.

Council will be heard at twelve o'clock.

As to applications to be made to the masters.

Adjourned summonses will be heard at eleven o'clock precisely in each court, and the summonses of the day immediately afterwards.

Counsel will be heard at twelve o'clock.

Affidavits in support of ex parte applications for orders (except those to hold to bail) to be left the day before the orders are to be applied for, except under special circumstances, such affidavits to be properly indorsed with the names of the parties and of the attorneys, and also with the nature of the application.

N.B.—The judge directs particular attention to the rule of Michaelmas Term 1867, and desires it should be distinctly understood that he will not hear any summons or application directed by the said rule to be heard by the masters.

14th July 1869

All summonses to be heard before the judge will be made returnable at half-past ten o'clock, until further order.

LAW SOCIETIES.

THE HAMPSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

We are pleased to learn that this society has been established. At a general meeting held on the 9th inst., a code of rules was agreed to, and the following officers were appointed. C. B. Hellard, Esq., President, H. Ford, Esq., Vice-President, T. Cousins, Esq., Secretary, A. Besant, Esq., Treasurer. The following gentlemen were appointed members of the council: G. C. Stigant, Esq., C. J. Longcroft, Esq., S. S. Long, Esq., J. J. Webb, Esq., and S. J. Elliott, Esq. The annual dinner is appointed to take place on Thursday, the 22nd inst.

NEGATIVE VOTING.—On Monday evening, at the meeting of the Jurisprudence Department of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, Mr. Thomas Hare in the chair, a paper upon "Negative Votes" was read by Mr. Clair J. Grece, LL.B. Mr. Grece observed that by the present practice negative opinion was not elicited or asked for. The voter was precluded from voting against, say both the objectionable candidates, and so was often driven to vote for one candidate as the only means of excluding the other. The logically correct course would be for him to vote against both. Another evil was, that while any number of candidates may be put forward, the support of the electoral body may be so divided amongst them, that the absurd result may readily arrive that while the election purports to be that of the majority, the representative of a minority of the constituency may be declared elected, as occurred at Brighton in the case of the election of Mr. Moore a few years ago. Mr. Grece suggested that recognition should be conferred upon negative votes. The Legislature had recently enfranchised an extensive section of the community, and he claimed for his suggestion that it would be a measure of enfranchisement, not, it is true, of persons, but of opinion. An interesting discussion followed the reading of the paper, and votes of thanks to Mr. Grece and the chairman closed the meeting.

BREAKFAST—EPPS'S COCOA—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—The very agreeable character of this preparation has rendered it a general favourite. The Civil Service Gazette remarks:—"The singular success which Mr. Epps attained by his homeopathic preparation of cocoa has never been surpassed by any experimentalist. By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills." Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold by the Trade only in $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., and $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. tin-lined packets, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homeopathic Chemists, London."

LEGAL NEWS.

Judge Springer, of Iowa, recently admitted a lady to the Bar as an attorney, at Mount Pleasant, in that State.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The Earl of Radnor's personality has been sworn under 160,000l. Amongst the bequests are two legacies of 10,000l., one left to his daughter, Lady Jane, wife of Mr. William Ellice, the other to his daughter Lady Mary, wife of Lord Penzance, and to these two daughters the Earl has left his rings and his shares in the Metropolitan Association for Improving the Dwellings of the Industrial classes. He has left legacies to his servants, and to each of his labourers working on his estate 20s. A provision is made for his son Edward from his estates at Folkestone, Kent, and those in Wiltshire. The residue of his property he leaves to his eldest son, the present Earl, heretofore Viscount Folkestone.—Sir James Emerson-Tennent's personality has been sworn under 6000l. His only son, Sir William Emerson-Tennent, Bart., succeeds to the settled estates in Ireland, from which a provision is made for his wife and his only surviving daughter, Eleanor. The will of the late Mr. T. Brown was proved under 140,000l. personality, more than one-third of which he has disposed of in charitable bequests, as follows:—Christ's Hospital, 10,000l.; Booksellers' Provident Institution, and also their Retreat, each 10,000l.; Stationers' Company and School, each 5000l.; Royal Literary Fund, 3000l.; Hetherington Blind Charity, 2000l.; Benevolent Society of Blues, 5000l.; and a legacy of 500l. to each of the sixteen under-mentioned societies and institutions:—Artists' Benevolent Fund, National Benevolent Institution, London Orphan Asylum, Idiot Asylum (Redhill), Travellers' School (Pinner), Printers' Pension Society, Bookbinders' Society, St. Ann's Society (Brixton), Deaf and Dumb Asylum and Blind School (St. George's-fields), Free Hospital (Gray's-inn-road), St. Bartholomew's, St. George's, St. Mary's, and the Cancer Hospitals, and National Life-boat Institution. Ladies' Charity School, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, 100l.; to seventeen clerks in Longman's house, each 50l.; to Mr. W. Longman, 500l.; to Mr. T. Roberts, his late partner, 500l.; to Mr. Thomas Longman, 5000l.; to testator's sister, Mary Ann Brown, 10,000l.; to his housekeeper, 1500l.; to his confidential servant, W. Dignan, 7000l.; Mrs. Dignan, 500l.; to his three godchildren, each 500l.; to his executors—viz., M. H. Tatham, solicitor, 2000l.; Edmund Hodgson, book auctioneer, 2000l.; and to W. Sharp, of Longman's, 3000l.; all legacies free of duty. There are various legacies varying in amount. The residue is to be divided amongst the grandchildren of his former partner, Thomas N. Longman.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

THE business on the circuits has been remarkably meagre. Perhaps the Home has shown the greatest dearth. The causes at Nisi Prius have been in the main of slight importance, whilst criminal offences have been lighter than usual.

THE Registration of Trade Marks Bill is withdrawn. The Habitual Criminals Bill, which originated in the Lords some months ago, is also to be withdrawn, the HOME SECRETARY declining to undertake the responsibility of attempting to pass such a measure at the present advanced period of the session.

A SINGULAR judicial power has been conferred on juries in an American state. A recent statute enacts that, "In all cases of felonies which by existing laws are punishable with death, it shall be competent for the jury empanelled to return with their verdict of guilty, and as part of the same, either that the prisoner shall suffer death by hanging as now provided by law, or that he be imprisoned in the penitentiary for the term of his natural life, or for a term not less than fourteen years, as they may decide."

OF Mr. O'Dowd, the new Deputy Judge Advocate-General, the Globe writes: We may call the Premier fortunate, in finding for his appointment a candidate who combines a thorough acquaintance with the esprit de corps and the training—professional as well as mental—which belongs to the Bar, and with the corresponding elements in the military spirit. This is a combination not often met with in a high degree of development, and it is one which stands the country in good stead when the work to be done is of so delicate and difficult a nature as the administration of military law. We are quite satisfied that Mr. O'Dowd is the right man in the right place, but, as we have said, it by no means follows that Mr. GLADSTONE should give general satisfaction by this appointment. That this should be the result arises, in a considerable degree, from the fact that Mr. O'Dowd has made his way into public life through the gate of the literary profession—a gate which has in general, we are afraid, been made much too difficult of access to those who are outside the happy valley of official influence and emolument. If, however, Mr. O'Dowd had merely served his party in the ordinary routine of partisan writing, we should not have been so ready to congratulate him on his promotion. But he was able to combine with this more ephemeral kind of political advocacy work which qualified him to serve his country as well as his party. His connection with the Army and Navy Gazette completed and signalled his acquaintance with military life in all its details, and the influence and independence of that journal will be certain to gain the confidence of the whole military profession for the new Deputy Judge-Advocate.

LIQUIDATORS, SOLICITORS, AND TRUSTEES.

THE MASTER of the ROLLS has, in the matter of the Accidental Death Insurance Company, used very strong expressions upon the frequent contests for the office of liquidator, which occupied so much of the time of the courts, to the injury by delay to the interests of suitors. He seemed to think it was more a question to be disposed of in chambers than to be fought out in the courts, and so far we entirely agree with him. But it is not for this that we notice the case in question, but for an incidental remark that has a special significance at this time. "The real contest in all these cases," he said, "was who was to be the solicitor to the liquidator, who was generally merely a tool in the hands of the solicitor."

There is a partial truth in this observation. Undoubtedly a winding-up is at least as profitable to the solicitor as to the liquidator, and therefore it is only in the natural course of things that solicitors should seek it, and if two persons are seeking the same object, it is but common prudence in them to join hands and pull together. But it is unjust to say that the liquidator is only a tool in the hands of the solicitor, for their interests are mutual and their alliance is on even terms. The powers of the liquidator are limited, and although he can give a great deal of profitable business to the solicitor, he cannot, with safety to himself, make work for him, and that is what Lord ROMILLY must have designed to convey by the expression that the liquidator was merely the tool of the solicitor.

But the subject has a special interest at this moment. The Bankruptcy Bill practically extends the system of winding-up to all bankrupt estates. The trustees are designed to be, and in practice will be, official liquidators. They are to be paid, and bankruptcy trusteeship will become a regular business. Indeed, it can only be performed efficiently by persons who make a business of it, who will devote their whole time and thought to it, and keep an establishment of clerks and collectors. The pay for each case will be small, and it can only be profitably managed on a large scale, where the great bankruptcies with heavy assets will pay for the little ones. A solicitor must be attached to every bankruptcy; few estates can be wound-up without some litigation. The solicitors may fairly look to this source of business as anxiously as they do the winding-up of companies, and we have no doubt that their bills will continue to be, as ever they have been, the principal claim in the expenses of a bankruptcy. It was to meet this difficulty that we suggested,—and had the opportunity remained to us, we should have pressed it upon the consideration of the House as the most prudent course—to make solicitors in all cases the official liquidators in bankruptcy, paying them by a liberal commission. None would or could do the work so well, or, upon the whole, so cheaply. Is it too late?

THE TRADES UNION FUNDS PROTECTION BILL.

THE Bill is very short. It merely removes the doubt raised by the recent equally divided judgment of the Queen's Bench, by declaring that no society registered under the Friendly Societies Act shall be deemed, for the purposes of the 24th section of that Act for the punishment of fraud and imposition, to be a society established for a purpose which is illegal, or not to be a Friendly Society within the meaning of such section. It is limited to one year. This is all that can be asked for, although, as before observed, neither the necessity nor the advantage of it is apparent, seeing that the general law gives to trades unions precisely the same protection against fraud and embezzlement as it gives to other associations and to private persons. Friendly societies possess the advantage, if such it be, of a summary proceeding before justices; but this is an exceptional privilege, granted in consideration of their charitable objects, a claim to which a trades union has no more title than a co-operative store, or any other society formed for profitable or social purposes. We fear that by putting forth this small and really worthless claim now, they will endanger the much larger and more useful claim which they will next year prefer to be admitted to corporate privileges.

LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A FAMILIAR difficulty arising out of the existing legal relations of husband and wife, is illustrated by the case of Fleet v. Perrins, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 814, the difficulty, namely, of determining whether a claim by a wife is a chose in action, and then whether it has or has not been reduced into possession by the husband. In that case the Court of Exchequer Chamber was not unanimous, the Chief Baron coming to the conclusion that, although the Court of Queen's Bench and his brother Judges in the Court of Appeal had taken the correct view as regarded the justice of the case, that view was opposed to first principles.

It must always be a matter of regret when justice and first principles conflict, because justice may be very clear as regards a particular case, and yet inapplicable as a principle of law, to all cases. If any system of equitable procedure could be invented by which legal principles could be stretched to meet the requirements of individual cases, the advantage to the community would undoubtedly be great. The nearest approach to such an invention is the resolute action of the courts in favour of the justice of the cases taken individually, notwithstanding they thereby to some extent strain or violate first principles.

The case to which we are referring presented these facts. The defendant received money to be applied for the use of a married woman. Part of this money was so applied. Both the woman and her husband being dead, two questions arose: first, whether there was here a chose in action; and, secondly, who should sue, the representatives of the wife or of the husband.

The first question may be said to be new. Mr. Justice Blackburn said in the court below (19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 148): "There is no doubt that all personal property of a corporeal nature, such as goods or cash belonging to his wife before marriage, vests in the husband by the marriage, and that all such property given or acquired by the wife after marriage also vests in the husband. But chooses in action belonging to the wife before marriage do not vest in the husband unless he does some act to reduce them into possession during her coverture, and even during coverture the husband may prevent the wife from making a contract in an action on which he may join with her during her life, though he may disaffirm her interest, and sue on the contract as made with himself alone. If he does permit the wife to make such a contract, and does not reduce it into possession during the coverture, it survives to the wife." This he followed up by saying that the court saw no reason why the rule of law should be different in cases of a contract in writing and any other, and therefore it is to be taken as established that a chose in action may exist without a writing,—that it being shown that some person was made the deposit of money for the benefit of a feme covert, a chose in action is created. Then comes the question under what circumstances it will remain the sole property of the wife, to be recovered by her personal representative in the event of her death.

The case of Bird v. Peagram, 13 C. B. 63, often cited in Fleet v. Perrins, exemplifies, as Mr. Justice Smith said, the distinction between the case of property actually reduced into possession by the wife and a mere chose in action. There it was held that the husband could bring an action in his own right after the death of his wife to recover the rents of certain leasehold property conveyed by the wife on her marriage to trustees. The wife had actually received the rents, and deposited part of the money with the defendant. In Fleet v. Perrins, on the other hand, the money did not come into the possession of the wife, but remained a mere chose in action at the time of her death.

Such was the opinion of all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, with the exception of Chief Baron Kelly. The Chief Baron objected to the conclusion of his colleagues that it could be correct only upon the supposition that personal property may belong to a wife during coverture, and that husband and wife may sue jointly for money had and received though the interest of the wife does not appear upon the face of the proceedings, which (as his Lordship remarked) is in the teeth of Bigood v. Way, 2 W. Bl. 1236. Baron Channell, however, who is one of our oldest "pleader Judges," said, "I think that the husband and wife might have sued the defendant in the present case for money deposited with him for his wife." His only doubt was whether the action would have lain in the form which had been adopted. Eventually he agreed with the rest of the court in holding that there was a chose in action which had not been interfered with by the husband.

We have noticed this case to show, that if the Bill relating to married women, which has just passed its third reading in the House of Commons, is not one to be desired, the law of husband and wife calls for revision. The question of property as between husband and wife is not one which should be left to the tender mercies of special pleading.

PACKED PARCELS.

By the judgment of the House of Lords in the case of the Great Western Railway Company v. Sutton, noticed in last week's "Sayings and Doings," a conclusive decision has been given on the much-vexed question of "packed parcels."

Carriers of goods by road or canal because of the expense and slowness of the means of carriage at their command, found competition with railway companies impossible. They then adopted the system of "packed parcels," and many carriers made this their almost exclusive business.

According to this system, the carrier collects at a central office the parcels of various consignors, sorts them, packs together the parcels destined for different consignees in the same neighbourhood, and forwards them so packed by rail, the distribution and delivery of the several parcels being entrusted to the carrier's local agents. The carrier thus has these advantages: 1st. He has the trouble of collection and delivery only, the actual carriage being done by the railway company. 2nd. He gets for himself the difference between the charge for weight, which he pays to the railway company, and that for number of parcels, which he receives from the various consignors.

The railway companies have tried to check the carriers in this practice, by charging at a much increased rate for "packed parcels," the carriers disputed the legality of such charges, and the question thus raised has repeatedly come before the courts. It is obviously one of much interest to the carriers, to the railway companies, and to the public.

It will be convenient to collect here the results of the principal decisions hitherto arrived at. The earliest case on the subject was that of Pickford v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, 10 M. & W. 399, in which, in 1842, it was held that a charge of 1d. per lb. on a packed parcel was not a reasonable one. The gist of the decision is expressed thus by Baron Parke: "The remuneration is excessive and unjustified by the increase of responsibility from the circumstance of the properties being separate. It is impossible to support on this ground a charge for 4l. 1s. 8d. for the first package, for which, if it had consisted of parcels one property, 1l. 6s. 6d. would have been the proper charge, and a charge of 3l. 1s. 6d. instead of 9s. for the second."

In Parker v. The Great Western Railway Company, 11 C. B. 582, the plaintiff, a carrier, was held entitled to recover any additional charges paid for packed parcels, the defendants' Act providing that the charges should be imposed equally on all persons using the railway, and it being admitted that the above charge was imposed upon carriers only.

The next decision, that in Crouch v. The Great Northern Railway Company 11 Exch. 742, went further. There Chief Baron Pollock laid it down that the question whether a railway company was entitled to charge extra for packed parcels was one of fact and not of law; that the question ought to be left to a jury to determine whether the difference, in point of risk or trouble or otherwise, between a package containing several parcels belonging to different persons (i.e. a packed parcel), and a package containing several parcels all belonging to one person, was such as to justify an increased rate of charge for the former; and the jury having found that there was no such difference, it was held generally that the increased rate could not legally be charged. Baron Martin, however, in the same case rested his judgment on the violation of the equality clause that such a charge would be.

In Piddington v. The South-Eastern Railway Company, 5 C. B., N. S., the opinion of Chief Baron Pollock, that the question was one of fact for a jury, appears to have been approved, and it was held that to charge for packed parcels at a double rate was unreasonable in itself and a violation of the equality clause of the defendants' Act of incorporation.

Mr. Justice Willes said: "It is clear upon the whole facts of the case that the increased charge is made for the purpose of preventing people, who are likely to send packages of the description in question, viz. carriers, from entering into competition with the company in the conveyance of goods—a thing which it has over and over again been decided that these companies cannot be permitted to do."

We may pass over other cases in which no new point on the question has been decided.

The judgment of the House of Lords in the present case concludes the question, for it is probable that by no device on the part of the railway companies can the effect of it be evaded. They cannot make in all cases an increased charge for packages, consisting of several parcels, whether belonging to the same or to different persons, because such charge would be held to be unreasonable. They cannot charge carriers at a higher rate than other persons for packed parcels, for that the present case has determined. They cannot in the case of packed parcels insist on delivering the several parcels to the consignees and make an extra charge for such delivery, for this was decided in the case of Baxendale v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 1 Ex. 137; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 26.)

And were any other mode available to maintain a higher charge for the conveyance of packed parcels, it would fail from the difficulty that the railway company would have in ascertaining whether a package entrusted to them was a packed parcel or not. The parcel could not be opened (Crouch v. London and North Western Railway Company, 2 C. & K. 789), nor could it be insisted that a declaration, specifying the contents, should be signed by the sender prior to the acceptance of the parcel for conveyance by the company, (Ib. 14 C. B. 255).

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LAW ON JETTISON AND GENERAL AVERAGE.

THE extraordinary state of perplexity in which the judgments in this country and the United States have placed the subject of general average, in respect of the fundamental branch of jettison, will doubtless lead to a considerable amount of future litigation.

We therefore once more recur to this subject, for the purpose of concluding our notices of American cases in regard to it with some observations on the most recent leading case by which the present law of the United States in regard to jettison is ruled.

It is a case entirely in conflict with English law, namely, Faulkner and Rogers v. The Augusta Insurance Company, determined by the Court of Appeals of South Carolina, Charleston, in Feb. 1842 (2 Macmillan, 161). Insurance to the amount of 6270 dols. was effected on goods per schooner Estell, from Charleston to Mobile. In April 1840 the vessel struck on the Florida Reef, and was taken off and carried into Key West, and labelled for salvage, and part of the goods insured were sold to pay the salvage and expenses on ship and cargo. The ship afterwards proceeded on her voyage, and on arrival at Mobile an average agreement was entered into by the owners of ship and cargo. The assured (the plaintiffs in the suit) were credited in the statement of average with the value of their goods sold as above-mentioned, 1735 dols. 34c., and charged with their contributory share of the general average, 879 dols. 52c.; amount to be made good by other contributors, 853 dols. 82c. The assured took no steps to recover the contribution from the ship and freight, and the residue of the cargo, but sought recovery, on their own policy, of the entire loss of the goods sold, 1735 dols. 34c. It was argued, in favour of the insurers, that the plaintiffs "had an ample remedy for the recovery of the contribution due to them in Mobile, and would have recovered if they had not been insured. But if they or their agents suppressed the demand against the vessel and cargo from favour, it was a fraud upon the insurers; and if they did so from negligence, the consequences of their neglect should be borne by themselves." The court, however, held that they were entitled to recover the entire loss in the first instance from the insurers 1735 dols. 34c.

Richardson, J., in delivering the judgment, said, "No doubt is entertained that such loss is embraced by the policy." And, "looking at the strict legal right of the insured, and to the unquestionable liability of the insurers upon the policy as a contract of indemnification to the former, the court does not perceive how the insured can be suspended in their right of action by the mere qualified obligation first to demand contribution of the other shippers. I would think, therefore, that the adjustment of average loss among the different shippers and the average agreement are to be considered as a counter indemnity to the insurers after paying the whole loss. Chancellor Kent recognises this as the proper rule of law, and Abbott, p. 396, informs us that in England the average loss is commonly paid in the first instance by the insurers."

Wardlaw, J. and Butler, J. dissented from the opinion of the majority of the court on the following grounds, expressed by the former: "It is contrary to the good faith required in all contracts of insurance for the insured to put the underwriters in a worse condition than the insured would have been if no insurance had been made. The excess of the plaintiff's goods sold for salvage over their share of the average was in truth an advance made by them for the other shippers," and, it might have been added, for the shipowner, "and the average bond taken by the master, the common agent, was a mutual covenant signed by all the persons concerned, binding themselves to pay each his contributory share of the average on demand. The agents of the plaintiffs, when they and all others concerned were together in the port of destination after adjustment of the average, do not appear ever to have made a demand, but have contented themselves by sending the adjustment and average bond to the underwriters, looking to them for an entire indemnity. The underwriters may pay and may recover from those bound to contribute, by suits in the name of the plaintiffs, but now that the shippers (or consignees) are separated, what hope is there for the underwriters that they will be able, at reasonable expense, to procure reimbursement? A demand by the agent of the plaintiffs, at the time when they should have made it, might have effected complete justice without expense or circuitry; and I think that without showing that this demand was ineffective, or was in some way excused, the plaintiffs should not be permitted to recover from the underwriters more than their share of the average (2 Marshall on Insurance, 547; 2 Phillips on Insurance, 127)."

This judgment is in direct conflict with the English law, which holds that loss by sale of cargo to pay the expenses of a ship at a port of refuge is not a loss by perils of the sea, recoverable from underwriters, but that the value of part of a cargo necessarily sold, and thus applied, is a forced loan which the shipowner is entitled to make for the benefit of all concerned, and for which he is liable to reimburse the proprietors of the goods sold.

If part of the cargo was given in kind to salvors instead of a money payment for assistance rendered in rescuing the whole property from total loss, the net market value which the goods sold would have produced on arrival with the ship and the residue of the cargo at the port of destination, is the amount which ought to be reimbursed to the proprietor of the goods sold, together with the freight of them, and to be apportioned on the entire values of ship, freight, and cargo. It is similar to a case of jettison.

In the foregoing judgment, the court said that, "Abbott informs us that in England the average loss is commonly paid in the first instance by the insurers." But in the time when Abbott wrote, and ever since, it has been the unvarying practice of English underwriters until now to pay only the proportion of general average loss or expense applicable to the goods insured.

This mistake runs through all the leading American cases on the subject in question; and in the recent English case of Dickinson v. Jardine, the mistake has been made of supposing that the Judges in the United States charged the underwriters with the insured value of the jettisoned goods, instead of with the actual loss of them at their market value when it was less than the amount insured. There does not appear to have been any American case in which the merchant was held entitled to recover the amount insured on goods jettisoned when it exceeded the actual loss of them at their market value.

In the leading American cases alluded to the underwriters were charged in the first place with the total loss of market value actually sustained or with the total amount of general average expenses disbursed by the assured, leaving them to recover the proportions from the other contributors on the values of ship, freight, and cargo; and in the case decided by Mr. Justice Kent, on which they are all founded, the assured was not allowed to recover a constructive total loss because the corn, for the total loss of part whereof they were charged as general average, was warranted free from particular average.

The American authorities, however, draw from these cases the strange deduction that, because according to their law a loss of 50 per cent. occurring before the completion of the voyage gives a right to abandon goods insured free from particular average, and to claim a constructive total loss, if the claim for jettison arising before the termination of the voyage amounts to 60 per cent., the assured may recover a total loss, although he transfers by abandonment a claim for contribution amounting to 20 per cent., thus reducing the actual loss to 40 per cent.; but if he claims and receives the 20 per cent. from the contributors, his loss becomes less than one-half, and cannot be made total by abandonment. He can recover a constructive total loss only by abandoning previously to claiming contribution for the benefit of the insurers, and he is entitled to take his choice, and involve the insurers in the falling state of the market, or to reserve the profit on a gaining market to himself, just as he pleases.

We have extended our observations on this subject to a considerable length because of its importance, and because of the anomalous position of the case law in regard to it in this country and the United States.

We shall probably conclude with a brief account of the present law of England as to the liability of insurers for loss by jettison, which requires to be understood and acted upon until it is altered by the determination of a court of appeal.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

I.—TAXES AND CUSTOMS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 14.)

THIS is a compendious Act of thirty-nine sections, embodying the Budget and regulating the altered duties of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Some of its provisions and their severe effect upon the tax-payers by the new arrangements for payments of the various taxes were described last week. Other noteworthy provisions are as follows:—

SECT. 7 abolishes the present parochial assessors of income tax, and substitutes for them the inspectors or managers of taxes. But the taxes are still to be collected by the parochial officers, at a poundage of three half-pence only.

SECT. 11 exempts from Inhabited House duty "any tenement or part of a tenement occupied as a house for the purpose of trade only, or as a warehouse for the sole purpose of lodging goods, wares, or merchandise therein, or as a shop or counting-house, or being used as a shop or counting-house."

Duty on Fire Insurance.

From June 25 this duty is wholly repealed—that is to say, on policies issued after that date, and on all renewals of policies; but where the duty has been already paid before the 12th April last, even as in some cases for five years in advance, there can be no return of it: (ss. 10-12).

But with respect to policies effected since the 12th April last, a proportionate sum of the duty paid is to be allowed: (s. 13).

Tea Licences.

Licences are no longer to be required for the sale of coffee, tea, cocoa nuts, chocolate, or pepper (s. 14).

Assessed Taxes and Excise Licences.

It is not necessary here to repeat the list of Assessed Taxes as modified.

The duties on letting horses for hire or hackney and stage carriages and the mileage duties thereon are abolished.

The Assessed Taxes are, on and after the 1st Jan. next, to be collected by means of Excise licences, precisely as is the dog tax. Hitherto, the articles kept during one year were paid for in the following year. Thus, if B. kept a horse between April 1867 and April 1868 he was not assessed for it until April 1868. But henceforth he is to take out a licence in January to keep a horse during the coming year, in fact, paying the tax in advance; and if during the year he should keep any excisable article, he must at once apply to the Excise for a licence to keep it, or be subject to a very heavy penalty should he omit to do so. For facilitating this process, the commissioners are to provide forms of declaration to be made by the taxpayer.

By sect. 24 the commissioners may serve a special notice on any person signing such declaration to be made under a penalty of 20l.

The penalty for omitting to take out a licence for any taxable article is 20l., to be recovered before justices. But it is expressly provided that no such penalty shall be enforced if the defendant proves to the satisfaction of the justices that he had delivered a declaration and paid the duties within the time prescribed by the Act that is to any, before the expiration of the month of January, or within twenty-six days from the time of commencing to keep such taxable article.

Livery stable keepers and persons letting servants on hire are to keep books of account, stating particulars as to the servants, horses, and carriages so kept by them. The object of this is to prevent the possible fraud of private carriages obtaining exemption by professing to be carriages let for hire (s. 20).

Duties may be recovered by distress. Assignees are to pay duties owing by bankrupts. Licences are to be produced when required by any officer of inland revenue.

The duty on shepherds' dogs is to be paid by the employer of the shepherd, but the licence is to be granted in the name of the shepherd (s. 38).

II.—AMENDMENT OF THE LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 18.)

THIS short statute of four sections is designed to amend certain defects in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845. It enacts that the costs of arbitrations under that Act shall, where either party so requires, be settled by a Master of the Superior Courts. It repeals the 33rd section of the Railways Regulation Act 1868, and provides that any proceedings commenced in pursuance thereof may be continued under this Act. Special provision is made for assessing the value of land held by trustees, and it is to be cited as "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1869."

III. PRESERVATION OF SEA BIRDS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 17.)

THIS Act is designed for the protection of sea birds during the breeding season. It is contained in nine sections, and dated 29th June 1869.

After defining what are to be deemed sea birds, it proceeds to create a close season for them from April 1 to Aug. 1, and enacts that any person who shall kill, wound, or attempt to kill or wound, or take any sea bird, or use any boat, gun, net, or other engine or instrument for the purpose, or "have in his control or possession" any sea bird recently killed, wounded, or taken during such close time, shall be subject for every such bird to a penalty not exceeding 1l. and costs to be recovered before a justice. But the section is not to apply to young birds unable to fly (s. 2). The Home Office may, on application from the justices of any county in quarter sessions, vary or extend the close time. Any person offending refusing to give his name and abode is to be subject to a further penalty of 2l. A moiety of the penalty is to go to the informer, and the other moiety in aid of the County rate. Offences within the Admiralty jurisdiction are to be treated as if they had been committed on land. The Queen in Council may, by order, exempt any remote parts of the sea coasts of the United Kingdom from the operation of the Act.

IV. REMOVAL OF PRISONERS IN THE COLONIES.

(32 Vict. c. 10.)

THIS Act is intended to facilitate the removal of prisoners from one colony to another for the purpose of punishment. It enacts that any two colonies may, with the sanction of the Privy Council, agree for the removal of prisoners under sentence of transportation, imprisonment, or penal servitude from one of such colonies to the other for the purpose of undergoing their punishments. Such removal is to be by warrant. Prisoners are to be detained in legal custody during the period of such removal. He is to be subject to the laws of the colony to which he is removed, and the last clause legalises all removals heretofore made.

SPECIAL BAILS BILL.

We have received the following letter in reply to the one which we published last week:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have read a strange letter in your impression of to-day (July 17) on this Bill, signed with the initials "S. J. H." The owner of them seems sadly ruffled in temper at an imaginary slight thrown on attorneys and solicitors by the Chancellor, in moving the second reading. Having myself been instrumental in causing the introduction of this Bill into Parliament, it may not be out of place for me to say, that "S. J. H.'s" comment is, most probably, founded on a very imperfect report of what the Chancellor said; and further that, even supposing that the report he has seen were exact, I can by no means perceive that discourtesy on the part of the Chancellor which seems to have been discerned by "S. J. H.'s" diseased imagination. The Chancellor's well-known character would incline any sensible man to believe that he was, when moving the second reading, far more likely to be intent on giving to his audience sufficient reasons for passing the Bill than on making an opportunity to cast an irrelevant and needless slight on absent persons, not to mention that the point of the slight would be sure to be utterly lost on the audience in question—the House of Lords. "S. J. H." asks, "Is any comment necessary?" I should say "No."

It is a fact that solicitors were prohibited from taking out special bail commissions by the Act of William and Mary, which originally authorised the grant of them. Why this was is not easy now to see, but so it certainly was. It is likewise a fact through changes in legal procedure of late years, and more particularly of the Act for abolishing arrest on mesne process, the necessity for putting in special bails arises but seldom, and that it has thus become no longer worth any one's while to spend money and time in obtaining such commissions, looking only to the remuneration attaching to the performance of the office. Nevertheless such bails are still occasionally required, and there ought to be some one to take them. If no one can be found in the country to take them, an aggregate of cases may involve much practical inconvenience and useless expense, the attendance in London of at least three persons to each case being then requisite. None but attorneys, however, can be expected to take much notice of so infrequent an inconvenience as regards individual cases. A case having, however, arisen in my own practice, and having been consequently at some trouble myself, I called attention to the subject, that the difficulty I found might be removed for the future from the path of myself and my professional brethren; and this Bill was introduced into Parliament by Mr. Hadfield, M.P., who having been formerly in practice as a solicitor was well qualified to understand and explain the subject. To that gentleman's kindness and perseverance I am now indebted, that the Bill, though brought forward late in the session, has made good progress. The method taken was to submit a Bill which enables all persons authorised to take affidavits in the country under an Act of Charles II.'s reign to take bails. These persons may or may not be attorneys; that Act leaves that point open; but in practice, I believe none but attorneys ever think of applying for appointments under it to the Judges. This course necessarily involved the removal of the prohibition imposed on attorneys by the Act of William and Mary. Attorneys are in reality the only persons who can be expected to feel an interest, or take trouble about facilitating the lesser details of legal practice, whether of frequent or infrequent occurrence; but they may be expected, and actually do so to a sufficient extent, for the mutual convenience of themselves and each other, and of course of their clients too; and some such idea as this, I am sure, is all the Chancellor would mean to imply, if he did say anything to the effect that it was not now worth the while of any but an attorney to obtain power to take special bails. Since, however, the obtaining a separate commission, as heretofore was needful, would, in fact, be as little worth the while of an attorney as of anyone else, so far as pecuniary recompense is concerned (as would probably soon appear, if all that the Bill proposed were to move the prohibition on attorneys, leaving the expense and trouble of obtaining a separate commission as before), the scheme before mentioned has been submitted to Parliament, and has met with general approval on the part of all who cared to know anything on the subject. How the Chancellor's explanation of the Bill (which he voluntarily undertook to conduct) could be twisted into a discourtesy to that branch of the Profession whose business it was designed to facilitate, I am at a loss to understand.

Your obedient servant,

WM. E. TATTERSHALL, Solicitor.

THE LAW WORK OF THE SESSION.

(From the Irish Law Times.)

THE legislative session of 1869 is rapidly drawing to a close. In less than a month the 12th Aug. will summon our legislators, hereditary and elected, to a "slaughter of the innocents" more attractive than that of which the Palace of St. Stephens is annually the scene. Already we may look back on the work of the session as practically ended, for no Bill now introduced could be carried through the necessary stages of first, second, and third readings, committees and reports in both Houses, before the close of the session. No new measure of legislative reform can now be introduced. The only question is, how many of the few already introduced can become law? The session of 1869 may fill an important chapter in the political history of the century. But to the lawyer it will be flat, stale, and unprofitable.

Why is this? It is not for lack of work. Whether we narrow our view to Ireland, or extend it to the entire empire, we encounter on every side legal problems of greater or lesser magnitude awaiting the attention of the Legislature. Look for a moment at the vast undertakings to which practical statesmen are afraid to do more than allude, but which have long engaged the attention of law reformers. We are promised an expurgated collection of our statutes. This instalment of justice we may soon obtain. A digest of our law is not an impossibility—about a quarter of a century hence. From a code we are distant—say a century. The Judicature Commission have recommended the conversion of our existing tribunals into chambers or divisions of our Supreme Court, administering one uniform system of law, and set in motion by a uniform course of procedure and practice.

These are undertakings of first class magnitude and universal application. They embrace every department of our law. But there are others of more moderate dimensions. The marriage laws of the United Kingdom, for example, have been the subject of an elaborate and exhaustive report. Whenever the national conscience is awakened, a commission and a report are the result. The British nation is subject to periodical fits of legal penitence as well as of virtuous indignation. The number of branches of the law which have been set upon, reported upon, and finally neglected, is truly appalling. The grand jury laws of Ireland were reported upon last year. The Chancery and Common Law Commissioners in their second report considered the law of judgments in Ireland, and recommended the appointment of a distinct commission to investigate the question. Nothing has been done since. The new Common Law Procedure Bill is indefinitely postponed, but of this we do not complain. The report of the Judicature Commission afforded a reasonable excuse for the adoption of this course. The English bankruptcy code has been reformed, but that of Ireland neglected. Perhaps our legislators acted on the maxim, stat experimentum in corpore vili. At all events, whatever be the cause of their neglect of Ireland, it will have this good result in practice, that we shall be able to profit by the experience of our neighbours. The fact, however, remains undisputed that the only considerable measure of law reform which has been passed for Ireland for many years was the Chancery Act of 1867, to which several valuable pieces of patronage were attached. It was edifying to witness the emulation with which the two rival political parties contended for the honour of the parentage of this Bill.

What is the cause of this neglect of legal reform? The obvious reply is, the Legislature was engrossed by one great political question, and had no time to bestow upon such trifles. But what was the House of Lords doing while the Irish Church Bill was before the Commons; and what was the House of Commons about when the Bill was before the Lords? Did not the nights spent in debate and in committee form the working days of the session, and a balance remains which, if economically employed, could be rendered most effective. The true cause is that the Legislature is set in motion for the most part by one or other of the two great political parties, the leaders of which care but little for legal reform, pure and simple. To this cause must be added the apathy of the public, who do not realise the extent to which their interests are concerned; the amount of work with which the Legislature is incumbered, of a character not strictly legislative.

LEGAL PROCEDURE AND THE PROFESSION IN SCOTLAND.

A PAPER was read last February before the Juridical Society on the above subject, by Mr. William Neish, a barrister, which deserves to be more widely read than it has been. We therefore make some extracts:

The subject of the present paper (he says), though referring to the judicatures of Scotland alone, cannot be without interest to the English lawyer, more especially as some of the most eminent members of our Bar are thoroughly conversant with Scotch law and legal forms, from their large practice in Scotch appeals to the House of Lords. The dissatisfaction, long and generally expressed throughout the country, and especially in Scotland itself, with the Supreme Courts in Edinburgh; the publicly avowed opinion of one of the most learned of its Judges, and the pronounced views of English lawyers expressed in Parliament and elsewhere, led to the appointment, under the late Government, of a Royal Commission to inquire into and report upon the whole subject. With all deference, however, to the eminent and very learned gentlemen who are members of it, I venture to think that its composition is not such as to inspire perfect confidence, or to lead to the necessary reforms. It is no disparagement to say that, for the most part, it is composed of gentlemen familiar only with the very courts and forms of procedure now called in question, and having a natural bias in their favour, and whose more immediate interest it is not to infringe on the prestige, patronage, and supposed dignity of their own courts or on their wealth and endowments. Nor is it unfair to remark that the commission is prosecuting inquiries in an atmosphere not the most favourable for seeing things as they are, or for promoting thorough and beneficial reforms.

In treating of any Scotch legal subject it is, of course, necessary to use technical language, which, I know, will seem in some instances barbarous to the English ear; but I shall do so as sparingly as possible—and it will not be forgotten that every art and science has its own peculiar terms—such that even the English lawyer is familiar with barbarous Norman French and abbreviated dog latin.

The first thing that strikes any one acquainted with the judicial systems of England and Scotland is the disproportionate number of the Scotch judges as compared with the English. In England the number of the judges of the Supreme Courts including the Lord Chancellor, and the three additional common law judges lately created, is twenty-seven; whilst the number of judges of the Scotch Supreme Courts in Edinburgh is thirteen—namely, five puisne judges, or Lord Ordinary, and two Courts of Appeal of four judges each, known as the first and second divisions of the Inner House; a number too many according to the experience and observation of the learned judge referred to—and as anyone would naturally suppose. The population of England to that of Scotland may be stated at least as six to one, and its wealth and the extent of its business (including legal proceedings), is in a greatly increased proportion. No doubt it has been said that in England there are besides, the judges of the Courts of Bankruptcy, of the County Court and of other courts of special and local jurisdiction; but, on the other hand, there are in Scotland the numerous and powerful staff of sheriffs as sheriff-substitutes in every county—all professional men—and, in my opinion, more than a set-off to the English judges referred to. Then, besides the legal business of England proper, there should be borne in mind the onerous and constantly increasing duties of its judges in appeals from India, China, Ceylon, Australia, New Zealand, the Cape, the West Indies, the Canadas, and our numerous other Colonies, besides Scotch appeals. In many of these cases, no doubt, the valuable assistance of ex-chancellors and retired judges is cheerfully given; but few of them are disposed of without the presence either of the Lord Chancellor for the time being, or of other judges from the courts of Chancery or Common Law. These are duties which the Judges in Scotland know nothing of. It is unfortunate that we have no satisfactory statistics of the judicial business of England and Scotland. Even when such returns are made, however, there is a difficulty in comparing them, owing to the different forms of procedure, and to the Scotch returns being incumbered with much routine administrative business done by the associates and clerks of court in England; my own long-formed opinion is that the number of the Judges of the Court of Session might safely be reduced from thirteen to seven—that is, there might be four Lords Ordinary instead of five, and one

Court of Appeal, or Inner House, of three instead of two Courts of Appeal as now, of four each. Four Judges in each of the two appeal courts are too many, and one court of appeal of three would, in my humble opinion, be quite sufficient to discharge all the duties required of it. In the Inner House each of the four Judges, generally speaking, considers it necessary to give his opinion at length, and as might be expected they do not always agree in the result, nor when they do, in their reasons. This, amongst other causes, helps to swell the list of appeals in the House of Lords. In fact, it is not too much to add that the thirteen Judges are not unfrequently in each others' way. I regret, however, to observe that the honourable and learned member for the Wigtown burghs, now second Scotch law officer of the Crown, has already, in a public lecture, pending the inquiry of the commission, announced the foregoing conclusion, if I may so call it, that there must on no account be a diminution of the number of Judges in the Court of Session, whatever reforms there may be in other directions. He thinks it would lead to the delay of business, already much complained of. On the other hand, as already said, one of the learned lords (Ormidale), who before he was elevated to the bench had large experience, first as a W.S., and afterwards as an advocate, has publicly and emphatically declared that the number of the Judges is too great for all the duties they have to discharge. One of the best appeal courts in England, and one much relied on, consists, as the meeting knows, of three members. I refer to the Court of Appeal in Chancery. This court, for the most part, consists of only two members—the Lords Justices—and lately, when its business fell into arrear through the illness of Sir J. Lewis Knight Bruce and other causes, an Act of Parliament enabled the Lords Justices to hold separate appellate courts, which they did, and speedily and satisfactorily cleared off all arrears. I must not omit to notice that some of the Judges of the Court of Session, under the name of Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, act as Judges of the Supreme Court of Scotland; but their duties are not heavy, and might advantageously be made lighter by extending the jurisdiction of the sheriffs in that direction. I was lately struck with a case in this "high court" as illustrative of the economy of judicial time in Scotland. It was an appeal from a decision of the Sheriff-Substitute at Stirling at the instance of a person who had been fined 10s. for fishing with a rod and line in the river Forth for salmon, without the vestige of a title, except (as he contended) such title as belonged to everyone of the public (Anderson v. Anderson, C. of S., 3 Ser. vol. 6, p. 117), and that even as against the prosecutor, who had an express grant from the Crown of the salmon fishings in that part of the river Forth. The appeal first came before Lord Cowan at the autumn Circuit Court of Justiciary in Stirling, and although the case did not seem to be one admitting of any reasonable doubt (and none was expressed), his Lordship, in Scotch law language, "certified" the appeal to the High Court of Justiciary in Edinburgh, at a very heavy cost, no doubt, to the litigants. Before the "High Court" in Edinburgh it duly appeared, and there no fewer than seven grave and learned lords sat in judgment upon it, when without hearing the respondent, each of them considered it necessary, some at length, to express his own individual opinion that the case admitted of no doubt whatever, and that the poacher had been justly amerced in the 10s. Surely a case so small, and, as the decision without hearing the respondent shows, so simple, indeed, the learned Lord who sent it to the High Court in Edinburgh is reported to have said: "To hold that rod and line fishing may be lawfully used by anyone, would destroy the whole salmon fishings in the country"—surely, I say, such a case might have ended with the sheriff, or at most been finally disposed of in the Circuit Court at Stirling, and at any rate did not require seven learned Lords to dispose of it.

The Circuit Courts are held in the various assize towns twice a year—in Glasgow oftener; but the business before them is, with a rare exception, criminal cases, by far the greater number of which ought to be dealt with by the sheriffs. The exception is an occasional appeal of a small debt cause from the Sheriff's Court; for, as it is somewhat startling to anyone out of Scotland to be told, it is nevertheless a fact that there is very seldom any jury trial in a civil cause set down for hearing except in Edinburgh, however distant the parties and witnesses may be. And this is so, notwithstanding that the Scotch judges have the same power on circuit to try civil causes as the English Judges have. It may not be out of place to remark in passing that trial by jury in civil causes is entirely foreign to the Scotch code, and was engrafted upon it for the first time by an Act of Parliament in 1819. Perhaps it may be in consequence of this that it has never worked well in Scotland, and being there conducted in a cumbrous, dilatory, and expensive way, it is by no means popular. In many cases where formerly a jury was imperative, the litigants may now agree to leave the entire question with the Judge.

Upon the question of referring matters to accountants, he says:

Again, in questions of account, which frequently involve intricate points of law, it is not an uncommon practice to remit to accountants, not officers of court, except in so far as the remit may make them such, "before answer," to make up a state of accounts betwixt the parties litigating. "Before answer" simply means that the remit is made without deciding anything as to the relevancy of the case, or giving any judgment or opinion upon the questions of law involved. Thus the accountant has in his report not unfrequently to present alternative and various views of the questions raised, and even to suggest to the court what the law is or ought to be, though himself not belonging to any branch of the Profession. These reports lead to great expense, which has been known to be ruinous to the parties engaged. In a late appeal from the Court of Session, in which I had the honour to appear with our noble and learned Vice-President, Lord Cairns (then Sir Hugh), he remarked, with reference to this system, that if he were a litigant he would much prefer the accounts being taken in such cases at the expense of the country as in England, than at his own as in Scotland! It need scarcely be added that the clerks and assistants in the Scotch courts are not less numerous than those in the English, and that they might be made equally efficient. Nor is it an uncommon thing in Scotch judicial proceeding to allow evidence or "proofs to be led," as it is called, and other expensive inquiries to be made all before answer, and which, as the term implies, may be afterwards found to be worse than useless, simply because the pursuer, on his own showing, has had no case ab initio, a point equally apparent before the proof of inquiry was allowed as after it. Only to-day my attention has been called to the report of a case showing this too common practice of the Court of Session. It came before the first division of the court on the 6th of this month, by way of appeal from the Lord Ordinary (Manor). It was a claim for 44l. in several small items. The defendants contended that under the Scotch law the claim could not be proved by witnesses, or parol evidence, as being above 100 pounds Scots (or 8l. 6s. 8d.) upon which the plaintiff joined issue. Here was a pure point of law, which the Lord Ordinary ought at once to have decided; but, instead of doing so, his Lordship's judgment or interlocution was this: "allow both parties proofs, in general terms, before answer, and under reservation of all objections, to competency"—thus preferring to postpone consideration to the legal issue, and to send the unfortunate litigants into an expensive inquiry, which, confessedly, might not be of the slightest use, and which in the end it was held not to be; for the defendants having "reclaimed" or appealed against this order to the Inner House (1st division), three of the learned lords out of the four, having at once applied their minds to the legal issue, without the advantage of any opinion from the Lord Ordinary, however, held that any proof on inquiry was of no use and utterly incompetent, except as regarded an item of 30s., which no doubt ended the cause, unless, indeed, it should find its way to the House of Lords (Annand's Trs. v. Annand, 6th Feb. 1869).

He concludes thus as to the position of solicitors in Scotland:

It would be an omission were I not here to say a word in reference to the anomalous position of the solicitor branch of the Profession in Scotland. This has more to do with the business of the Supreme Courts than at first sight may appear. Instead of all solicitors in Scotland holding their office or diploma direct from the Supreme Courts as in England, it is only the two ancient corporations (with a trifling exception), of the Writers to the Signet and the Solicitors before the Supreme Court; or, in common parlance, the W.S.'s, and the S.S.C.'s, who do so; and they alone, to the exclusion of all others, are entitled to practise as solicitors in the Supreme Courts in Edinburgh. All other solicitors may practise only in the Sheriff Courts or other inferior courts to which they are attached; and any partnership or alliance betwixt an Edinburgh solicitor and one in the provinces is regarded by the Court of Session as pactum illicitum. It may be, and generally is, that the solicitor in the provinces is equally well qualified with his brother in Edinburgh to conduct business in any court; he has undergone the same course of general and legal education, and passed his required examinations, still he cannot practise in Edinburgh unless he be a member of the close crafts referred to, nor can any one in partnership with him do so. One condition of entering them is, amongst others, that the candidate must have served a long apprenticeship with a member of the corporation he seeks to join. It naturally follows that the provincial solicitor prefers to try his causes in the Sheriff's Court, and when they have run the curriculum there, where he has acted both as counsel and solicitor (or procurator as he is called), that he advises his client at any reasonable sacrifice to avoid the Court of Session, where, whilst the result is uncertain, the expense is not; even when the cause is gained, for in the conduct of it on appeal in Edinburgh the provincial solicitor is not only allowed no fees (except of a nominal amount), on the ground of what is called "double agency," and that, however necessary to the conduct of the cause his correspondence and general assistance may be, but contrary to the general rule of law where an agent discloses his principal, the provincial solicitor in such cases is personally liable to the Edinburgh solicitor for all costs incurred to the latter. The result is that the legitimate business of the Court of Session is in this way really much curtailed. Besides the Edinburgh corporations, there are others in Glasgow and Aberdeen of an equally exclusive character. It is imperative that all these petty monopolies should be abolished, and all members of the solicitor branch of the Profession put upon the same footing in Scotland, as they now are in England.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Thursday, July 15, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cairns, and Lord Colonsay heard the case of Campbell v. The Earl of Dalhousie and others, raising a somewhat singular question. The appellant is the younger brother of a claimant to the earldom of Breadalbane. In March 1868, by a petition to the Court of Session, under the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69 (the Act for perpetuating Testimony), the appellant asked the court to order the respondents, who were trustees of the late Marquess of Breadalbane, to search for and exhibit documents contained in the charter room at Taymouth Castle. The respondents urged that they could not get the documents, for though they had the key of the charter room, yet the room itself was part of the mansion house of Taymouth, now occupied by the present heir of entail in possession of the estate. The Court of Session held that such an order could not be made on the demand of a party who had no present title or interest whatever, and this was the subject of the appeal. Their Lordships now, without calling on counsel for the respondents, dismissed the appeal with costs, the Lord Chancellor observing that this was an attempt to strain the statutes beyond that for which they were intended.

On Thursday and Friday, July 15 and 16, Massy v. Rowen and others was argued. This was an appeal, ex parte, as to certain of the respondents, from a judgment of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, reported in Ir. Rep. 1 Eq. 110. There was a devise to trustees to hold rents and profits in trust for the sole use of H. E., a woman then unmarried. The court below held that the words of the will were insufficient to indicate an intention to defeat the marital rights of the husband, whom H. E. afterwards married. The House of Lords now affirmed that judgment, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

On Monday last the Bishop of Lichfield sat with the Lord Chancellor and Lord Colonsay, in order to make up the requisite number of lords in the hearing of the case of Howden and others v. Rocheid, on appeal from the Court of Session, the object of the action being to acquire certain estates for the benefit of the creditors, on the ground that an entail of them was bad. The question raised was whether lands held by pro indiviso rights (similar to those of co-parceners before partition) could be entailed. The case was partly argued, and will be further heard on Monday next.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

On Thursday, July 15, judgment was delivered in two important Admiralty appeals, the Lion and the Karnak.

In the case of the Lion, a collision had occurred between her and another vessel, for which it was admitted that the Lion was alone to blame. The Lion was at the time of the collision in charge of a duly licensed pilot. The owner claimed exemption from liability, and the question then arose whether it was compulsory on the Lion to take a pilot on board. That depended on whether there were passengers on board, and as to this the facts were these: At the time of the collision the wife and father-in-law of the captain were on board by the invitation of the captain without the permission of the owners. The captain said nothing to them about paying their fares till after the collision, but their fares were paid when the ship reached her destination. Sir Robert Phillimore held (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 803; 37 L. J. 39, Adm.), that the captain's wife and father-in-law could not be considered passengers under the above circumstances, so as to make the employment of a pilot compulsory, and thus exempt the owners from liability under sect. 388 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. Their Lordships now affirmed this judgment with costs.

In the Karnak the assignees of a bottomry-bond proceeded against the owners of the cargo. The master having incurred various debts for repairs and necessities, communicated with the managing owner of the vessel, but failed in an attempt to communicate with the owner of the cargo. The vessel being in danger of arrest, he borrowed money, but not from any of the previous creditors, on a bottomry-bond on ship, freight, and cargo. Two questions arose: first, whether the bond was valid against the cargo? and, secondly, whether certain sums borrowed by the captain from the charterer at the port of loading were to be considered as a loan, or as an advance upon the freight? On the first point, their Lordships now held, affirming the judgment of the court below (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 661), that the bond was valid, a necessity for hypothecation having been shown, although the repairs were completed before any proposal for the bond was made by the captain, and although the owner of the cargo was not, in fact, communicated with. On the second point, their Lordships now held, reversing the judgment below, that the sums so borrowed were advances on the freight.

On Saturday last, judgment was given in a curious case, Reg. v. Murphy, on appeal from New South Wales, the hearing of which was noted in "Sayings and Doings" for June 26. Murphy was tried for murder in Sept. 1867, and after a trial lasting some days, was found guilty and sentenced to death. Afterwards the Supreme Court of the colony made absolute a rule for a venire de novo, in effect, a new trial, on the ground entered on the record, that the jurors, before they had delivered their verdict, were improperly allowed the free use of the newspapers of the day, which contained reports of the trial as far as it had gone, in one of which the heading was "The South Creek Murder Case." This fact depended solely on the affidavit of the prisoner's attorney, on the information of one of the jury, after their discharge. Sir William Erle now delivered judgment to this effect; the venire de novo was bad, because no new trial can be had on the charge of felony, because the Supreme Court had not jurisdiction to grant it, and because the evidence of the fact relied on was mere hearsay and insufficient. The verdict must therefore be affirmed, and the order of the court below be reversed.

On Tuesday last judgment was given in the Bishop of Capetown v. The Bishop of Natal, on appeal from the Supreme Court of Natal. We reported the hearing in "Sayings and Doings" for July 10. The question, it will be remembered, was whether the appellant or the respondent had the right to the Cathedral at Pietermaritzburg, which has hitherto been used as the cathedral of the diocese of Natal. The appellant relied on the Crown grant in 1850 of the land, on which the cathedral stands, to himself and successors, bishops of Capetown, in trust for the English Church at Pietermaritzburg. The respondent relied on the facts, that the appellant resigned his office of Bishop of Capetown in 1853, that subsequently the old diocese of Capetown was subdivided into the dioceses of Capetown, Graham's Town and Natal, and that by respondent's own letters-patent it was declared that the church, then in course of erection on the said land, should be the cathedral church of him and his successors, bishops of Natal. The Supreme Court decreed that the land and the cathedral stand vested at law in the respondent. Lord Justice Giffard now delivered judgment to this effect: There was proof that the respondent was obstructed in his use of the cathedral, and that of such obstruction the appellant was the author, acting under a supposed title in himself. It was competent to the Crown to declare in the letters patent that the church should be the cathedral of the respondent, and the effect was to give him the right of access to and use of the cathedral. On the other hand, the appellant had no estate or interest, as trustee or otherwise, in the cathedral. His interest under the Crown grant ceased on his resignation. And had it continued, he would, as trustee, have had no right to obstruct the respondent. But the Supreme Court had, by its decree, dealt with the actual estate and with the trust, in a manner which could not be properly done in such a suit as the present. The order that their Lordships would recommend Her Majesty to make would be, that the respondent have free and uninterrupted access to the land and the cathedral, and the exercise of all rights in reference thereto which ought to belong to him as Bishop of Natal, and that the appellant abstain from obstructing the respondent in respect thereof. No costs of the appeal, but those in the court below must be borne by the appellant.

ROLLS COURT.

Among the cases worthy of notice which have occurred during the past week, we may in the first place notice three cases in Re Blakely Ordnance Company. In the winding-up of this company, the A list has been settled, and as it appears that the existing members will not be able to satisfy the liabilities of the company, the official liquidator is now settling the B list. The three cases which we are about to mention are all applications to place on the B list past members of the company. The first of these cases was Creyke's case, which was an application to have Creyke's name placed on the B list, in respect of forty shares. He had applied for the shares in June 1865, and they were duly allotted to him, and registered in his name, but were forfeited in the following November in consequence of his having failed to pay a call which was made. The question which arose in this case was, whether Creyke was liable under the 38th section of the Companies Act, 1862, to be settled on the list as having been a member within the period of a year prior to the commencement of the winding-up, which took place in June 1866. His Lordship was of opinion that the present case was governed by Bridger and Neill's cases, L. Rep. 4 Ch. App. 266, and that Mr. Creyke must be placed on list B, notwithstanding the forfeiture of his shares.

The next was Bailey's case. Bailey had obliged his friend Capt. Blakely, the managing director of the company by consenting to have 100 fully paid up shares in the company placed in his name, and had signed two transfers, one from Blakely to himself, and the other from himself with a blank left for the transferee's name. The transfer to Bailey was registered in Aug. 1865, and the transfer from him was not registered till May following, so that his name was on the register for some nine months; moreover the shares contained in the transfers were not fully paid up, but had only 5*l.* paid up per share. His Lordship said that two things were required to make a person a shareholder—he must have agreed to accept the shares, and they must be registered in his name. Here there was registration, but there was no acceptance, for Bailey had agreed to accept fully paid-up shares, and not partly paid-up shares. The contract was in his Lordship's opinion void from the commencement, and Bailey had never been a member at all; his name must, therefore be omitted from list B.

The third was Holland's case. Holland had transferred his shares in Aug. 1865, within the period of one year prior to the commencement of the winding-up. His ground for disputing his liability to be placed on the B list was, that no debts now existed, which were incurred prior to the time when he ceased to be a member. This was admitted to be true, unless the liability of the company in respect of the debentures which they had issued to Capt. Blakely in part payment of the business purchased of him by the company, was a liability incurred prior to the time when Holland ceased to be a member. His Lordship was of opinion that Capt. Blakely accepted the debentures in payment of the amount due to him, and that the debt was wiped off by his acceptance of the debentures. As it was admitted that no other debt existed in respect of which Col. Holland, as a past member, was liable to contribute, his name must be omitted from list B.

This court did not sit on Tuesday or Wednesday, Lord Romilly being engaged on the House of Lords Committee on the Bankruptcy Bill.

V. C. STUART'S COURT.

Since our last notice the case of Barber v. Etches has been decided, and inasmuch as it involves a question as to the validity of a gift for promoting the opening of places of public amusement on Sunday, it is of some interest. The bill was filed in December 1868, praying that the trusts of the will of the late William Jeffrey Etches, formerly of Derby, cheese factor, who died in October 1867, might be carried into execution under the direction of the court. The testator in his will, dated the 27th February 1868, said he had disbursed a good deal from time to time in doing good to satisfy his conscience in the sight of God, and then, after appointing executors, the testator said, "There are lodged in the hands of Samuel Morley, Esq., some of the certificates of my Crystal Palace stock, as security for 4420*l.* of my late father's left in my hands to be applied as per his will. This 4420*l.* I direct to be paid within twelve months of my death to the said Samuel Morley, the trustee of my late father's will. There is 20,000*l.* of ordinary stock, and 10,000*l.* of Seven per Cent. Crystal Palace Preference Shares, all of which I direct, say, 30,000*l.* to be handed over to the directors of the Crystal Palace Company, and after their paying legacy duty, then the yearly income accruing from them to be applied for the purpose of promoting the opening of the Palace on Sundays, and after that object is attained then to be applied in adding to the attractions of the Palace and grounds. I leave 20,000*l.* in the hands of Samuel Smith, Esq., and Company, at 5 per cent. interest, and I hereby give and bequeath to my reputed wife E— S—, to enjoy for her life (not subject in any way to the control or use of J— S—, should he be living), the interest of this, say, 1000*l.* per annum, free of legacy duty, and likewise I give and bequeath to her the use of Victoria-street and St. Peter-street houses, the stables and houses in Bag-lane, and the cottage at Litchurch, my plate, pictures, &c., for life. After her death, 10,000*l.* of the aforesaid 20,000*l.* to be handed by my executors to the Financial Reform Association at Liverpool; and the remaining 10,000*l.* to be paid to the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control at London, to both which societies I have been a subscriber." There was a residuary bequest to a brother and another gentleman carrying on the business at Derby. The cause now came on to be heard on a petition praying for the sanction of the court to a compromise, the effect of which was that the Crystal Palace Company should have a moiety of the fund bequeathed to them, and the residuary legatees the other moiety.—The Vice-Chancellor made an order in the terms of the prayer of the petition.

In Stebbing v. Martin a motion was made on behalf of the plaintiff for an order to commit the defendant Martin and his agent (Chaplin), for a breach of an injunction, by which the defendant was restrained from causing any goods taken under a distress to be removed from No. 7, Percy-street, Tottenham-court-road. The defendant is mortgagee of a leasehold interest in that house for 35*l.*, and having induced the mortgagor to attorn tenant to him at 150*l.* rent, the defendant during pendency of a suit for redemption of the property, put in on the 9th July a distress for half a year's rent. On the 10th July Vice-Chancellor Stuart granted the injunction, and notice of it was given the same day to the defendant and his agent (Chaplin), who was in possession. A letter was then written by the defendant's solicitor to Chaplin informing him that he was entitled to stay until his charges were paid, and Chaplin, consequently, on the 12th July removed part of the goods from the house for sale. On the part of the defendant it was contended that although Chaplin had disobeyed the injunction, he had acted on his own responsibility, and that as he was the servant of a broker whom the defendant had employed, the defendant ought not to be made responsible for his acts. The Vice-Chancellor, in deciding the case, said that a clear breach of the injunction had been committed by both parties. The letter to Chaplin, in fact, amounted to instructions to him to pay himself his charges. If a defendant were allowed to shelter himself by saying that his agent only was responsible, the orders of the court would be nugatory. On the defendant and Chaplin undertaking to bring back the goods within two days, the court would make no order except that they should pay the costs of the motion.

V. C. MALINS' COURT.

The past week has not been very fruitful in notable cases, but one or two may be mentioned. Re the Macclesfield Brewery Company (Limited) raised the question as to whom the sheriff is to look to for his costs and poundage. In this particular case, the company being ordered to be wound-up, several judgment creditors had sued it and obtained judgment; and the sheriff (of Chester) had seized certain property in the ordinary way. A motion was made under the 163rd section of the Companies Act of 1862, to restrain the sheriff from selling, and asking the delivery up of the property already seized. This was merely met on behalf of the sheriff, with the excuse that his functions were simply administrative, and he would not do otherwise than obey the exigency of the writ; and, therefore, at all events he must have his fees, and poundage, and costs. This was opposed on behalf of the official liquidator on the ground that the Master of the Rolls, in the case of Re The Waterloo Life Assurance Company, had held that the sheriff must look to those who employed him, and, therefore, that in this case the judgment-creditors who had sued the company were the parties responsible to him. The Vice-Chancellor said that that view agreed with his idea, and therefore the sale must be restrained, and the goods delivered up.

The next case was a point of practice in Re Woodward, Solicitor, which was an application that a solicitor might attend and be cross-examined, he being subject to the usual summons for taxation. To this he objected, that under the 19th rule of the Act of Feb. 1861, fourteen days had expired before notice given. The answer to that was, that under the authority of The Singer's Sewing Machine Company v. Wilson, 2 H. & M., the old practice still permitted, and parties could come under the 40th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, as before. The 19th rule was merely permissive, and gave an easier manner of procedure by calling on the respondents to produce their witnesses. The Vice-Chancellor, having called on the other side, considered that the summons to tax was improper, inasmuch as the bills, except one, had been paid for a lengthened period; and that the proper remedy was by petition. The order of 1862 was then referred to, which provided that every application to tax must be by summons. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that that was so, but considered still that the summons was erroneous because it did not state the ground on which the applicant relied. This, however, it was insisted was not before the court, on the technical question, it not being possible or proper to go into the merits. An application has since been made which may have the effect of a reconsideration of the whole subject.

The next case was The General Provident Assurance Company, Cross's case, the question on which was whether the name of a former shareholder in this company, named Cross, described as an outfitter at Plymouth, was liable to be placed on the list of contributories in the winding-up of this company. Cross was originally a holder of 200 10l. shares in the company, and it was now admitted that as to fifty he was still liable, the only question being as to the other 150. These, in Aug. 1867, had been transferred by him—fifty to Thomas Haywood, the manager; fifty to Clift, and fifty to Thomas Brodigan; and Brodigan having subsequently refused to take his shares, Haywood had agreed to take them. The official liquidator's case was that these shares, although regularly transferred and the names of the transferees entered on the register, were, in fact, so transferred without consideration, and that, Haywood and Clift being officers of the company, it was a mere juggle to escape liability. The Vice-Chancellor held that there was no doubt that Mr. Cross, in consideration of assisting the company in its difficulties, was to be relieved of his liability in respect of 150 of his shares, and that he received no consideration for the transfers. The evidence showed that, failing to induce the directors to become individually responsible, Mr. Cross only succeeded in getting the company to take the shares off his hands. That was a transaction beyond the powers of the company, and therefore Mr. Cross's name must be placed upon the list in respect of 200 shares. His Honour regretted to be obliged to come to that conclusion, for he considered that Mr. Cross had been very unfairly treated by the company.

Re The Imperial Land Company of Marseilles (Limited) was an application, on behalf of the official liquidators of the company, for leave to issue a special summons under sect. 115 of the Act, and also to serve notice of motion for the committal of Mr. Albert Grant for disobedience to a former summons of the court. He had evidence to the effect that Mr. Grant was largely indebted to the company, of which he was formerly a director, and that he had disregarded a summons by the chief clerk, requiring his attendance as a witness. The summons was served upon him personally in Paris on the third of the present month, and the only notice taken of it was an intimation from his solicitors that he would probably attend in August. This was the first application of the kind, but it was believed that the court had perfect jurisdiction to make the order, and that under the Commercial Convention the French courts would give effect to it. The Vice-Chancellor gave leave to serve the summons upon Mr. Albert Grant and his solicitors, but said it must be taken for what it was worth.

ELECTION LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

UNDUE INFLUENCE—MASTERS AND MEN—FELLOW WORKMEN—AGENCY.—The wrongful dismissal by an employer of a voter or voters from his employment shortly before a general election, upon the ground of his political opinions, is evidence of intimidation, within sect. 5 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, upon which the court is bound to act, if it believes that evidence. Workmen may be intimidated directly by dismissal, or the fear of dismissal themselves; and indirectly by the dismissal or the ill-treatment of others, upon the ground of their political opinions. A circular was issued by a Tory meeting before the municipal contest, which stated that "it was decided that all millowners and their managers and overlookers, and all master tradesmen and others possessing influence should be strongly urged to exert that influence so as to secure, in the municipal election as well as in the Parliamentary, the success of" the Tory candidates: Held, that the effect of that circular was to make an agent of every person having authority down to the last grade, that of overlookers over the hands, and to request, and therefore authorise, each such to influence the hands who were under him, for the purpose of inducing them to vote for the candidates upon whose behalf that document was issued; and that any overlooker, and consequently anybody in that or any higher grade, who bonâ fide took up the Tory side, and who acted upon that circular, and did canvass for the sitting members, became their agent, for the purpose of unduly influencing voters under his control: Held, further, that the terms of the circular, taken with the fact that the municipal and Parliamentary elections formed part of the same contest, proved that for both elections there was the same system and plan of action. If fellow workmen, for political purposes, ill-treat one another, and expel one another from the common place of employment, they are guilty of the offence against which the undue influence clause of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act is specially directed. And if masters stand by whilst persons of subordinate position and workmen in their employ exercise undue influence over other persons in their employ, there is a strong inference against the masters that they aided and abetted the conduct of those exercising undue influence, but not an inference sufficiently strong to affect the election. The question whether what was done at a municipal election had any effect upon the Parliamentary election is one of fact, and it is for the court to say whether the parties engaged in the municipal election had not the Parliamentary election in their minds. If the municipal election occurred three months before the Parliamentary election, and the interests involved in the former were purely local or personal, that would divide the one from the other, and no notice ought to be taken in reference to the Parliamentary election of what was done with respect to the municipal election. If before a general election a master has reasons for getting rid of a person who is in his employ, apart from the reason that they do not agree in politics, the master is not bound to abstain from dismissing him because the election is coming on. But, semble, unless it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that there was a clear ground for discharging the servant apart from his politics, it is inevitable that the discharge may be imputed to dislike of his politics, and not dislike of his person: (Blackburn Election Petition, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 823. Willes, J.)

THE NOTTINGHAM ELECTION PETITION.—At the Judges' Chambers, before Baron Bramwell, the Nottingham Election Petition, "Torr and others v. Seely, the younger," came on for hearing in reference to an application for particulars on the part of the sitting member. Mr. Hoskins asked his Lordship for particulars as to the allegations in the petition. Bribery and intimidation were alleged, and he wished the names of the voters said to be bribed, as also the names of those who had bribed them, to be given. Mr. Gates, as counsel for the petitioners, objected to the names of the persons who had bribed the voters being given. It was not usual, and both Mr. Justice Willes and Baron Martin were against such an application. Mr. Hoskins said he had had a good many election petitions in the present year, and his experience was that without such information the particulars were of little or no value. Besides, Mr. Justice Blackburn always required the names to be given of those who it was alleged had bribed the voters. Baron Bramwell said he could only act in the best way he could in the absence of the election petition Judges. He, however, thought that such names should be given. A discussion arose as to the parties who had intimidated or organised a mob at the election. His Lordship made an order as to some particulars, but said he would write to Baron Martin, who was try the Nottingham petition, and ascertain his view as to the names of the persons who had bribed, and who had got up the mob on the election, being stated. Mr. Hoskins reminded his Lordship that the trial of the petition was appointed for the 29th inst. Baron Bramwell made an order as mentioned.—On Thursday, Mr. Rickards, on the part of Mr. Seely, the sitting member, waited on Mr. Baron Bramwell at chambers, to ascertain the opinion of Mr. Baron Martin, who was to hear the petition on the 29th inst., as to the "particulars" to be given by the petitioner. Mr. Baron Bramwell said he had heard from Mr. Baron Martin, who recommended the rule of Mr. Justice Blackburn to be followed, as to the names of the persons who had bribed, as well as the parties bribed. He therefore granted the full order as prayed.

STOCK AND SHARE MARKETS.

The Stock and Share Markets continue firm, although there is no great activity in business. The extreme easiness of money, and the impression in some quarters of a further reduction in the official minimum will encourage enterprise, but the public are not too eager to support every company introduced.

PUBLIC COMPANIES.

The report of the English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered Bank, to be presented on the 26th inst., states the amount available for distribution is 23,051l., and a dividend is recommended at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and the appropriation of 1000l. to the reduction of bank premises and furniture accounts, leaving 1051l. to be carried forward.

The report of the Provincial Banking Corporation (Limited), to be presented on the 2nd Aug., shows an available total of 8348l., and recommends a dividend at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum, and the appropriation of 1000l. to reserve (increasing it to 15,000l.), leaving 1441l. to be carried forward.

The report of the Midland Banking Company (Limited) to be presented at Sheffield on the 30th inst., shows an available total of 8639l., and the usual dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum is recommended, which, after an appropriation of 1500 in further reduction of the purchase of business account, will leave 2373l. to be carried forward.

The report of the Merchant Shipping Company (Limited), to be presented on the 25th inst., states that this year there has been no loss of any of the ships of the company and that the result of the completed voyages has been very satisfactory; also that a fair amount of business has been done at the dockyard. A dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum is recommended, and the appropriation of 15834l. to reserve, insurance, and depreciation account, leaving 2074l. to be carried forward.

The report of the Land Securities Company (Limited), to be presented on the 29th inst., shows an available total of 3348l. A dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum is recommended, and an appropriation of 500l. to the reserve fund, which will thus stand at 2500l., leaving 806l. to be carried forward.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE BILL.

On the order of the day for considering the report of amendments to this Bill, Lord REDESDALE objected to the Bill on the ground that it imposed obligations on women which could not but be objectionable to the sex. It was said that women had been appointed overseers; this was, no doubt, the case in default of any more eligible person, and there was also no doubt the duties were properly discharged in such cases; but it was one thing to appoint a woman under exceptional circumstances and another to make an objectionable rule.—The Earl of KIMBERLEY thought it desirable the House should understand precisely what his noble friend objected to. This was not a proposition giving to women the municipal franchise for the first time. Previous to the passing of the Municipal Act in 1835 women did vote at municipal elections, but that Act took away their right to do so. Subsequently local government Acts gave them the franchise in the places in which those Acts were in force; and hence arose the anomaly that, whilst they could vote in the numerous towns in which the local government Acts were in operation, when a town obtained a charter of incorporation they were excluded. Therefore this Bill merely restored to women a franchise which they formerly enjoyed, and their Lordships were not discussing the wider and more doubtful question of extending to women the right to vote at Parliamentary elections.—Lord CAIRNS said that, as an unmarried woman could dispose of her property, and deal with it in any way in which she thought proper, he did not know why she should not have a voice in saying how it should be lighted and watched, and generally in controlling the municipal expenditure to which that property contributed.—The report of amendments was then received.

BANKRUPTCY AND IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT BILLS.

On the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR, the following noble lords were appointed the select committee on these Bills:—Lord Chancellor, Lord Privy Seal, Viscount Halifax, Lord Overstone, Lord Belper, Lord Chelmsford, Lord Westbury, Lord Colonsay, Lord Cairns, Lord Romilly, and Lord Penzance.

The Stipendiary Magistrates (Deputies), the Prisons (Scotland) Administration Act (1860) Amendment, the Court of Sessions Act (1863) Amendment, and the Local Government Supplemental Bills went through committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LAW OF HYPOTHEC (SCOTLAND) ABOLITION BILL.

Mr. C. EWING urged the second reading of this Bill.—The LORD-ADVOCATE said that, looking at the matter as a practical question, the landlord was neither more nor less than a creditor holding a security. In point of principle, it might be better that the law did not exist, as those engaged in agriculture would thrive fully as well without it. But, on the other hand, unless there were a real standing grievance, he hesitated to incur the risks which would be produced by a change. In well-cultivated districts the law of hypothec was probably of little avail, but in those not well cultivated it was of more importance. He was not opposed to a modification of the law, and he was willing to assent to the second reading with the view of bringing about such a modification. It appeared to him that the real result of the abolition of the law would be to better the existing relations between landlord and tenant. Would the landlord give the same terms to the tenant without this security as he did with it? Evidently the taking away of the security would have a tendency to raise the landlord's terms. When a landlord after-rented his farm—that was, took the rent after the first year's crop had been gathered and sold—he gave substantially a year and a half's credit. If he exacted rent at starting, the capital of the tenant would be immediately swallowed up, and he must go to other sources to get credit if he meant to continue the cultivation of the farm. The existence of hypothec, therefore, lowered rent, and beyond all doubt the tendency of the abolition of the law would be what he had stated. The small tenants would thus be driven to eke out the additional rent by their own manual labour, and the status of both large and small tenants would be lowered. The great improvement in the land of Scotland had been owing to the exertions of the small farmers, and by the abolition of this law the current of improvement might be checked. Looking at the way in which matters were managed, especially in the north, between landlords and tenants, he feared that its abolition might be prejudicial, as at present, owing to the security it afforded, the landlord often allowed the tenant to tide over a bad season which he might otherwise be unwilling to do. He was prepared to consent to the second reading, on the understanding that the Bill would not be further pressed this session. This was accordingly done.

SPECIAL AND COMMON JURIES BILL.

Lord ENFIELD moved the second reading of this Bill, the object is to make a change in the qualification of jurors, and which embodied the recommendations of the judicature commission. It was proposed that the qualification of householders as common jurors should be a rental of 50*l.* in places having more than 20,000 inhabitants, and 30*l.* in places with smaller populations. The qualification for special jurors was proposed to be a rental of 100*l.* in places with populations above 20,000, and a rental of 60*l.* in places with smaller populations. It was also proposed to provide a better mode of making out the jury lists, and that no juror should be summoned a second time until the whole list was exhausted. It was intended to give special jurymen a guinea per day, and common jurymen half a guinea. It was also proposed that jurymen should be allowed to have fire and refreshment at their own expense when considering their verdict.—Mr. GRAVES thought that more care ought to be taken in the drafting of any future Bill, particularly with regard to exemptions now enjoyed by town councillors.—Mr. A. W. YOUNG approved of many of the enactments of the Bill, but though it required careful revision. He was of opinion that in some cases the jury might consist of a less number than twelve, and that if a verdict of three-fourths of the number might be taken, after a certain period of deliberation, the result would be more satisfactory.—Mr. G. GREGORY objected to suitors being called upon to pay common jurors, considering that suitors were entitled to juries without being put to any expense.—Mr. Alderman LUSK thought that common jurymen were hardly dealt with, and hoped that the Bill would be proceeded with during the next session.—Mr. WHEELHOUSE thought that the services of jurors attending in criminal cases ought not to be overlooked.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL hoped the House would allow the Bill to be read a second time. He believed it to be well drawn, and that it was well entitled to consideration. He thought the suggestion of the hon. member for Leeds deserving of notice, and that nothing was more unfair than the working of the jury system with regard to criminal trials. According to the letter of the present law, every man properly qualified ought to be on the common jury list, and special jurors ought to be liable to serve on both juries. It was unfair that common jurors should be paid only at the rate of 8*d.* a cause, whilst grand jurors were allowed a guinea. The intention of the law was fair enough. It meant that special jurors were to do double work, and therefore to receive double pay; but in practice special jurors were not taken out of the common jury list, but were placed in a special list, and did not serve on common juries. In Lancashire the law was properly carried into effect, and the jurors were generally of a very good class.—Mr. HENLEY thought it impossible that a Bill of this kind could be properly dealt with by a private member, and that the matter ought to be taken up by the Government. It was questionable whether the figure at which jurymen were taken should be increased. A great number of the people tried in the criminal courts were in a very humble class of life, and he did not think it fair that they should be tried by persons far above them in condition. There was nothing in the Bill to prevent a man being on both the special and the petty jury, which would enable him to try the same case twice over.—The Bill was then read a second time.

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.

The debate on this Bill, adjourned from June 8, was resumed by Mr. TALBOT, who begged Mr. T. Chambers to withdraw it, alleging the time of the year, and the absorbing question which was likely to occupy the House for the rest of the Session.—Mr. BERESFORD HOPE added his entreaties to the same effect; and Lord BURY, a zealous supporter of the Bill, gave similar advice on the ground that the debate had fallen into double entendres and arguments to which an improper signification was attached. It was impossible too, at this time of the Session, to carry the Bill in the face of the not altogether justifiable means used against it by the Opposition.—Mr. T. CHAMBERS declared his determination to go on with the Bill, and Mr. GLADSTONE dissented from the argument that a Bill supported by a majority should be withdrawn because the opposition to it had passed the ordinary Parliamentary limits. Referring to Mr. Talbot's argument, he added, significantly, that he was entirely ignorant of the grounds on which it was assumed that the rest of the session would be occupied with one question, and on the merits of the Bill he was of opinion that these marriages ought to be legalised, and that it should be left to each religious denomination to determine their religious character. Mr. Chambers ought, therefore, to be encouraged by the House to resist a mere policy of obstruction.—After some further conversation, a motion by Mr. TALBOT that the order be discharged was defeated by 86—143 to 57.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD OR DRINK ACT (1860) AMENDMENT BILL.

On the motion of Mr. DIXON, the order for the second reading was discharged, and the Bill was withdrawn.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

The adjourned debate on the motion for third reading was resumed by Mr. RAIKES, who suggested that the object of the Bill might be attained in a more satisfactory way than that indicated in it. It would be better to enact that any married woman earning the livelihood of the family should be enabled to go before a County Court judge, and make a declaration to that effect, and that then the judge should order that such woman should be able to hold property as if she were unmarried. It was said that this Bill would be a step towards the enfranchisement of women, and many hon. gentlemen opposite thought this end one desirable to be attained. He did not acknowledge this; but admitting its truth for the sake of argument, it ought not to be brought about as a collateral result of a Bill brought in by a private member, but should be undertaken by the Government. The time had not, in his opinion, arrived at which women should be placed on a perfect equality with men, and he should therefore move that the Bill be read a third time on that day three months.—Mr. JESSEL said he should support the Bill, on the ground that a woman entering the married state ought not to be deprived of the property she possessed, or of the right of contracting in the future. He denied that the object of the Bill was to give the parliamentary suffrage to women, and hoped that such an impression would not cause hon. members to vote against the Bill.—Mr. B. HOPE said on the face of it the Bill went in for altering the whole conjugal relations in regard to property. By refusing to read the Bill a third time, they would leave it as a document before the country, instead of sending it to another place, where it would, perhaps, not escape accidents. (Hear, hear.)—The House divided on the question that the Bill be now read a third time, and the numbers were: For the third reading, 131; against it, 32; majority in favour, 99. The Bill was then read a third time.

THE IRISH MAGISTRACY.

Sir P. O'BRIEN asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland whether the attention of the Irish Government had been called to the imperfect constitution of the Irish magistracy; and whether any steps had been taken by the Lord Chancellor for Ireland to revise the list with a view of increasing the confidence of the Irish people in that body.—Mr. C. FORTESCUE said the question referred to the exercise of those duties which, as the head of the Irish magistracy, devolved on the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, in whom, he was bound to say, the Irish people reposed a large amount of confidence. The Government knew from him that he had been for a long time engaged, as a matter of public convenience, in examining and revising the lists of the magistrates of Ireland. Beyond this he (Mr. C. Fortescue) was unable to give any information.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SUIT TO EXECUTE TRUSTS—PRACTICE.—In a suit to execute the trusts of a settlement an inquiry was directed as to letting some of the property, and ultimately the proposal of the plaintiff, who was also receiver in the cause, was approved by the judge. He failed to perform his contract, and the suit was brought on for further consideration, when it was held (on appeal by the plaintiff), that an inquiry which was directed by the Master of the Rolls as to the damages sustained by the trust estate by reason of his default, ought not to have been inserted; but their Lordships gave leave to the other cestuis que trust to bring before them upon notice an original motion for such an inquiry, and ordered that the appeal should be brought on with that motion. The order of the Master of the Rolls was then affirmed, but without costs to any party: (Branker v. Carne, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 797. Ch.)

LEASE—COVENANTS.—In an indenture of demise of a public-house the lessor covenanted for himself and his assigns that he or they would not build, erect, or keep, or be interested in building, erecting, or keeping a public-house within half a mile of the demised premises: Held, that the covenant did not run with the land, and could not therefore be sued upon by an assignee of the lease: (Thomas v. Haycraft, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 814. Ex.)

CHOSE IN ACTION—REDUCTION INTO POSSESSION.—The defendant, having received money from a third person for the use of a married woman, wrote to her acknowledging that he held it at her disposal. She died, and her husband, who survived her about a year and a half, in no way interfered as to the money. On his death, held, that the administratrix of the wife was the proper person to sue for the money, the facts showing a chose in action of the wife, which her husband had not reduced into possession: (Fleet v. Perrins, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 814. Ex. Ch.)

ceiver had been appointed by the Court of Chancery in a suit relating to the administration of the estate of an intestate, this court declined to appoint an administrator pendente lite until the Court of Chancery had signified its opinion that for some real or technical reason such an appointment was desirable: (Tichborne v. Tichborne, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 820. Prob.)

UNPROFESSIONAL ADVISERS.

We have received the following:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Meeting-house-lane, Sheffield, July 16, 1869.
Sir,—A person against whom a client of mine had recovered a judgment called on me lately and handed me the inclosed. I sent it to the Law Society, but they tell me they have no power to protect the Profession in matters of this kind, the writer of the inclosed not being a member of their body. I certainly thought they were more powerful for the good of the Profession than they declare themselves to be; but, however, as they are not, perhaps it may be as well to make this benevolent individual (albeit he cannot spell his own name correctly) more widely known, for the benefit and comfort of the thousands under pressure to whom he so feelingly refers.—Yours truly,
W. E. TATTERSHALL.

(Enclosure.)

Private and confidential.

173, Balls-pond-road, Islington, London,
June 17, 1869.

"Sir,—I trust you will excuse the liberty taken by me in addressing you, but, having seen your name in a list which I am in the habit of perusing, and seeing that you have judgment against you, I naturally conclude that you are suffering from a pressure which thousands are doing at this critical period.

If you will allow me to offer you the benefit of my long experience I feel convinced that I should be able to afford you immediate relief to your mind, as well as protection to your person and property.

I shall be most happy to give you my advice upon all subjects connected with bankruptcy, deeds of composition, private arrangements with creditors, and all matters connected hitherto, either by letter, or by a personal interview at my office as above, free of charge.

I further beg to state, should you favour me by requiring my services, I will endeavour to fulfil those duties that devolve upon me both faithfully and efficiently.—I am, yours respectfully, FREDRICK HOLLOWAY.

Incorporated Law Society, U. K.

Chancery-lane, London, W.C., 12th July 1869.

Dear Sir,—I submitted your letter of the 18th ult. to the council at as early a period as the pressure of other important business would permit.

The council, having considered the matter, desire me to inform you that as Mr. Frederick Holloway is not a member of this society, they have no power whatever to interfere in the matter.

I return the circular in accordance with your request.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.
W. E. Tattershall, Esq., Meeting-house-lane,

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Aylesbury, July 20.—The commission for the county of Bucks was opened yesterday afternoon by Mr. Justice Byles. The business is excessively light. On the civil side there are only two causes, one of them to be tried by a special jury. On the Crown side there are 11 prisoners for trial. The offences charged against them are,—shooting with intent to murder, cutting and wounding, rape, burglary, and larceny.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

Derby, July 15.—The commission was opened here yesterday by Mr. Boden, Q.C., their Lordships being detained at Warwick. The calendar contains 16 cases. There is one charge of murder against a woman named Annie Ingham. The prisoner cut the throat of her infant son, a child of nine months of age. The defence is understood to be that she was insane at the time of the commission of the act. The rest of the cases do not appear to be of an unusual character. The cause list is exceedingly light, there being only three common and two special jury cases. The court sat at ten o'clock this morning.

Nottingham, July 20.—The commission was opened here yesterday. The cause list contains only 3 cases, two common juries and one special jury. The county calendar contains 8 cases of a very ordinary character, that for the town only 4. One of these latter is a charge against William Powell, and 5 others for stealing silk to the value of 250*l.*, the property of William Elliot Baker. The case has caused considerable interest in Nottingham.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

Worcester, July 16.—Mr. Baron Pigott opened the commission here yesterday, and attended Divine service. The cause list this morning contained 7 entries, of which 1 only was marked for a special jury. The calendar for the county contains the names of 21 prisoners, and the city calendar the names of 5 prisoners. In the county there is a charge of murder and 2 of manslaughter, and in the city 1 of manslaughter; but in other respects the offences are of an ordinary nature.

Stafford, July 21.—Mr. Justice Montague Smith opened the commissions and attended Divine service here yesterday. There are 23 causes for trial, of which 6 are marked for special juries. The calendar contains the names of 51 prisoners. There is 1 charge of murder, 1 of manslaughter, 1 of attempt to murder, 1 of attempting to commit suicide, and several serious offences against the person. The grand jury ignored the bill for murder.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Chelmsford, July 17.—The business of these assizes, which commenced yesterday, terminated to-day. The calendar of criminal cases was light in point of number and character. It contained the names of 24 prisoners, and the most serious cases that can be mentioned were one or two of violent assaults, except a case of rape, which broke down. Mr. Hawkins, Q. C., gave his assistance in trying prisoners, and they were all disposed of yesterday. The Lord Chief Baron, in charging the grand jury, observed that out of 24 prisoners only two could read or write.

Lewes, July 21.—The commission for the county of Sussex was opened and business was proceeded with yesterday morning at ten o'clock in both courts, the Lord Chief Baron presiding in the Crown Court, and Mr. Justice Mellor at Nisi Prius. There are 15 causes entered, 4 of which are marked to be tried by special juries. One of these, however, the great foreshore case, a question of boundary, Lloyd v. Ingram, will not be tried, as arrangements have been made, it is said, to dispose of it in some other manner. This is a new trial, the cause having at a former assize for this county occupied several days. The whole of the common jury causes were disposed of yesterday, and they were of the most uninteresting character.

NEW LAW COURTS.

The following has been addressed to the editor of the Times:—

"Sir,—As a statement has appeared in your columns to the effect that the Council of the Incorporated Law Society are not acting in harmony with the wishes of the members of the society in their advocacy of the Carey-street site for the erection of the courts, I am directed to request the favour of your inserting the accompanying copy of a resolution, which was passed unanimously at the annual general meeting of this society on the 16th inst.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.
Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, July 17."

"At the annual general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society, July 16, 1869, proposed by Mr. T. Burgoyne, of 160, Oxford-street, seconded by Mr. W. C. Milne, of Harcourt-buildings, Temple, and resolved unanimously—"That this meeting hereby expresses its entire and cordial approval of the steps which have been taken by the council in opposition to the removal (as threatened by the Bill lately brought into Parliament) of the site for the new law courts and offices from Carey-street to the Thames Embankment, or elsewhere; and this meeting earnestly deprecates such removal as injurious to the interests equally of the suitors, the public, and the members of the legal profession."

At the Mansion-house on Monday Mr. Horace Lloyd, Q. C., and Mr. Edmund Alfred Pontifex, civil engineer, appeared before Alderman Sir Robert Carden to answer a charge of assault preferred at the instance of the Great Eastern Railway Company. The defendants had entered into their own recognisances to answer the charge, and Mr. Pontifex had taken out a cross summons against the person complaining. Mr. Lloyd was accused of assaulting Daniel Everett, an inspector at the Fenchurch-street railway-station, by seizing him by the throat and forcing his head against a railway carriage; and Mr. Pontifex of assaulting the complainant, at the same time, at the door of the station, by striking him on the hand with his walking-stick. On the case being called, Mr. Straight, barrister, who appeared for the Great Eastern Railway Company, said he was happy to state that, by the good sense of the defendants, the Bench would be spared a very painful investigation. The company felt themselves bound to protect their servants in the performance of their duty, and it was of importance that gentlemen, such as the defendants were, should have an equal claim to protection while travelling on the company's line. The defendants had handed to him a document which, he understood, they wished to be read in public. It was in these terms:—"Messrs. Lloyd and Pontifex contend that they are not to blame. A scuffle took place in which it is difficult to say for certain what the facts are, but as they are assured by the company that their servants were acting in the discharge of their duty, the defendants are prepared to adopt this view, and, while not admitting that any assault was committed which cannot be justified, yet express their regret for any interference with the officers of the company. They are induced to take this course by the assurance they have received from the company that Inspector Everett has for many years borne an irreproachable character in their employ, and without any complaint of any kind being made against him." Mr. George Lewis, jun., solicitor, who appeared for the defendants, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Serjt. Parry, expressed his assent to the terms contained in the document in reference to a matter which would otherwise have involved a long investigation. The company having withdrawn from the charge, the defendant, Mr. Pontifex, who had taken out a cross-summons against Inspector Everett, would also withdraw his complaint. Sir Robert Carden joined in the general satisfaction that an unpleasant inquiry had been avoided, and all parties concerned left the court.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

READINGS OF NEW STATUTES.

The unusually short time which is afforded for the purpose of mastering the contents of this Act, which received the Royal assent on the 12th inst., and practically came into operation on the 15th inst., renders it necessary that we should resume the subject without delay.

It is most essential to remember that the keepers of all beerhouses, whether for consumption on the premises or not, should give certain notices, and comply with certain formalities prior to applying to justices at the general annual licensing meeting for a certificate, upon production and in pursuance of the authority of which alone the Excise have power to grant a licence.

The Act does not prescribe any form of notice; but we have given at foot a form which has been carefully drawn. It is prepared to meet the case of a house holding an excise licence prior to the 1st May 1869, and situated in a borough. It may, however, be easily altered where the application is in respect of a house not licensed prior to that date, or situated in a county. In consequence of the peculiar phraseology of the 8th section, it has been thought desirable that the notice should be somewhat similar to the notice necessary to be given of an application for a new spirit licence, the form of which is prescribed in the schedule to the Ale-house Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 61).

It will be desirable that all applications for a certificate under the new Act should be supported by a memorial to the justices certifying the good character and respectability of the applicant, and as to the conduct of the house. Applications for certificates in respect of houses not licensed prior to the 1st May 1869 should also be supported by evidence as to the requirements of the neighbourhood, and of any other circumstances rendering the grant of a certificate desirable. At the foot is the form of a memorial to the justices, which can be altered to meet the different cases which arise. It should be signed by persons of repute. The general practice is to admit such documents as evidence, without any proof of the genuineness of the signatures thereto. By the 8th section applications for certificates in respect of licences to sell by retail beer, &c., not to be consumed on the premises, and by the 19th section applications for certificates for retail beer licences to be consumed on the premises in respect to houses holding licences on the 1st May 1869 may only be refused on the four grounds set forth in the 8th section, and which are as follows:

(1.) That the applicant has failed to produce satisfactory evidence of good character.

(2.) That the house or shop in respect of which a licence is sought, or any adjacent house or shop owned or occupied by the person applying for a licence is of a disorderly character, or frequented by thieves, prostitutes, or persons of bad character.

(3.) That the applicant having previously held a licence for the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or cider, the same has been forfeited for his misconduct, or that he has through misconduct been at any time previously adjudged disqualified from receiving any such licence, or from selling any of the said articles.

(4.) That the applicant, or the house in respect of which he applies, is not duly qualified as by law is required. Where an application for any such last-mentioned certificate is refused on the ground that the house in respect of which he applies is not duly qualified as by law is required, the justices shall specify in writing to the applicant the grounds of their decision.

It is clearly contemplated here that all applicants for certificates shall "produce satisfactory evidence of good character," and hence the necessity of the application being supported as above suggested.

A certificate under the Act may be transferred to a new tenant or occupant of any house in respect of which an excise licence is in existence, or in respect of which a certificate shall be granted under the Act by the justices (or a majority of them) in petty sessions for any borough, &c., within which the house is situated, which transferred certificate shall be in force till the then next general annual licensing meeting, or special sessions for transferring licences, as the case may be; and a new tenant or occupant of any such house may, without a certificate, sell beer, &c., until the then next petty sessions (sect. 9).

No notices seem necessary for a transfer of a certificate under this section, although certain notices are required prior to transferring an alehouse licence (9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 11).

Sect. 10 provides that a licence in force for premises situate in Middlesex and Surrey may be renewed without a certificate at any time prior to the first general annual licensing meeting held for such counties after the passing of this Act. This clause is rendered necessary in consequence of the general annual licensing meetings for Middlesex and Surrey not being held until the first ten days in March.

By sect. 11 penalties are imposed for the forgery of a certificate.

The powers of constables and officers of police of entering and examining houses holding licences to sell beer to be consumed on the premises, are extended to entering and examining houses holding licences to sell beer, &c. not to be consumed on the premises, and licences under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, s. 3, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 33, s. 1, which statutes are referred to in our previous article. In case the holder of any such licence, or any servant or other person in his employ, or by his direction, shall refuse to admit, or shall not admit, any constable or officer demanding admittance, the same penalties shall attach as in the case of a retailer of beer, &c., to be consumed on the premises (sect. 12). These last mentioned penalties are imposed by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 7, and are—not exceeding 5*l.* and costs, to be recovered within twenty days, and for a second offence two justices may disqualify. But they cannot impose a penalty (see R. v. Tott, 25 J. P. 327).

The 13th section is a very extraordinary one, and it is difficult to imagine why it was thought necessary. It provides that, "In any legal proceeding under any of the said recited Acts it shall not be necessary in order to prove the sale of beer, cider, or wine, in or upon any house or premises, to prove the receipt or payment of any money in respect of such sale; but proof that any beer, cider, or wine was drunk or consumed in or upon such premises by any person other than the keeper of such house or premises, or some servant or inmate residing therein, shall be prima facie evidence of the sale of such beer, cider, or wine, in or upon such house or premises."

In the first place it is to be observed that it was clear before the passing of the Act, that it was not necessary to prove the receipt or payment of money in order to substantiate a charge of unlawful selling. A sale might be presumed from strong circumstances: (see Finch v. Blundell, 26 J. P. 71; Smith v. Vaux, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 46.) The section therefore is unnecessary.

But it is worse than unnecessary; it will render a conviction infinitely more difficult than it was before, for it provides that proof that any beer, &c., was drunk or consumed on the premises shall be prima facie evidence of a sale. Now prior to the present Act it was not necessary to prove the drinking or consumption of any beer, &c., in order to convict of an unlawful sale. As before observed, a sale might be presumed from strong circumstances; but a serious question arises under this section, whether the Legislature have not now pointed out the mode in which a sale must be proved—namely, by proving a consumption. If this is so, convictions will be very rare, as persons using houses during prohibited hours will rarely drink in the presence of the police officers, any more than they will pay for the liquor in his presence. It may, however, be contended that this section merely points out one mode in which a sale may be prima facie proved.

But whatever construction is put upon the section, it is a most unnecessary and bungling clause, and must cause a very great deal of difference of opinion. It affords another proof that those who frame our statutes have frequently no practical knowledge of the subjects with which they deal. It is also a strong argument for appointing some competent lawyer to draw our new statutes.

The 14th clause is directed against persons holding licences to sell not to be consumed on the premises. It provides that where any such person, with intent to evade the provisions of any Act of Parliament, permits beer, &c., to be taken off his premises for the purpose of being for his benefit or profit consumed in any other house, or in any tent, shed, or other building, premises, or place, it shall not be necessary to prove that such last mentioned house, tent, &c., belonged to the licensed person, or was hired, used, or occupied by him, if proof be given to the satisfaction of the justices that such beer, &c., was consumed therein, with such intent to evade. On such proof being given, such beer, &c., shall be deemed to have been consumed on the premises of the licensed person, and he shall be subject to penalties accordingly.

Section 15 enacts that "if any person shall suffer beer or cider to be drunk in his house at any time during which the house ought by law to be closed, he shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding 40*s.* for each offence." This is a very important section, and is novel. The marginal note in the statute is "Penalty for selling beer or cider to be drunk at illegal times." This is clearly incorrect, and calculated to mislead. The section does not relate to selling, but to "suffering beer or cider to be drunk." Before the present Act, a beer retailer had a right to entertain his friends gratuitously during the prohibited hours, provided he did not keep his house open and did not sell: (Overton v. Hunter, 23 J. P. 308;

1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 366.) He had also a right to supply beer, &c., in exchange for other goods to be delivered to him subsequently: (Petherick v. Sargeant, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 68.) The section under consideration renders it an offence to suffer beer to be drunk during prohibited hours, and the words used would seem literally to extend to a case where the beer retailer was entertaining his friends gratuitously. It would also, in strictness, extend to his own family and the inmates of his house; but it is presumed this construction could not be supported. It would probably extend to drinking by lodgers during the various times at which beer retailers might supply lodgers under former Acts of Parliament. It is open to doubt what operation this section will have as to "travellers." At any rate it is clear that the loose and indefinite wording of the clause will create much litigation. In the face of previous legislation, the section in question ought to have defined more clearly how far it was intended to go, and what its operation was to be in the cases above mentioned. The clause does not extend to wine, but only to beer (which includes ale and porter) and to cider (which includes perry). Why this distinction is made it is impossible to comprehend, unless it be intended to create a distinction in favour of those who can afford to drink wine.

We shall conclude the consideration of this very extraordinary statute next week.

FORM OF NOTICE.

To the Overseers of the Poor of the parish of _____, in the borough of _____, in the county of _____, and to the Constables thereof and for the said borough, and to all whom it may concern.

I, _____, of _____, in the borough and county aforesaid, and being a seller of beer, ale, porter, cider, and perry [and wine if required], by retail to be consumed on the house and premises, by virtue of an excise licence, which was in force on and prior to the 1st May 1869, do hereby give notice that it is my intention to apply to the justices assembled at the next general annual licensing meeting for the said borough, to be holden in pursuance of the Act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter sixty-one, intituled "An Act to regulate the granting of Licences to keepers of Inns, Ale Houses, and Victualling Houses in England," or at some adjournment of such meeting, at _____, in the said borough, on the day of August next ensuing, at the hour of _____ of the clock _____ noon of the same day, or at or on such other place, day, and time as shall be appointed for that purpose on some day between the 20th day of August and the 14th day of September inclusive, next ensuing the date hereof, for a certificate or authority under "The Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869," for a licence to sell beer, ale, porter, cider, and perry [and wine if required] by retail to be consumed on the house and premises called the _____, and situate _____, in the parish of _____, in the borough and county aforesaid, and which said house and premises are duly rated for the relief of the poor as by law required, and which I rent of _____, and the same are the property of _____, and of which said house and premises I am now the _____.

Given under my hand the _____ day of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

[Signature of applicant.]

FORM OF MEMORIAL.

To the Worshipful the Justices of the Peace, acting in and for the borough of _____ in the county of _____

We the undersigned inhabitants of the borough of _____, do hereby certify that Mr. _____, of _____, in the borough and county aforesaid (beer retailer), is, to the best of our knowledge and belief, a person of good and respectable character, and that he _____ is a well-conducted and orderly house. [In case the house was not licensed prior to the 1st May 1869, add] And that in our opinion the situation, size, construction, and general character of the said house, will adapt and qualify it for a licence to sell beer [and wine, if so] by retail, to be consumed on the premises, and that a house with such a licence is required in the neighbourhood of the house, and would be a convenience to persons residing in the vicinity.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SPECIAL CONSTABLES.—PAYMENT OF.—Some disturbances having occurred during a contested election, the justices appointed special constables, whose expenses were subsequently directed to be paid. The orders for payment were not made at special sessions as required by 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 13, and in form, they were mere directions to the county treasurer to pay specified sums. Payment was made by him, and his account was afterwards allowed at the quarter sessions. Held, that the order not having been made at a "special sessions held for the purpose" was invalid; but, the court being of opinion that there was no objection to the order in point of form, and that the treasurer was therefore justified in paying it, and taking into consideration the fact that the money had been paid, and the account allowed, discharged a rule which had been obtained for a writ of certiorari to bring the order up to be quashed: (Reg. v. Justices of Carnarvonshire, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 818. Bail.)

CAMBRIDGE BOROUGH MAGISTRATES.

Friday, July 16.

(Before J. WENTWORTH, R. M. FAWCETT, DENNIS ADAMS, and MOSES BROWNE, Esqrs.)

HOWLETT v. LORD WM. OSBORNE.

Keeping a ferocious dog—Evidence of ferocity. Upon an information for allowing a ferocious dog to be at large in a public place unmuzzled, evidence that when chained up it was in the habit of biting people was admitted, to show the nature of the animal, although there was no evidence to prove that when at large it was in the habit of attacking people:

Held, also, that when in a public street in company with its master, but two hundred yards from him, although under his control, was sufficient to satisfy the meaning of the expression "at large."

This was an information laid by Thomas Howlett, inspector of nuisances of the borough of Cambridge, against Lord William Osborne, for that he on the 9th July, in a certain street within the borough, to wit Parker's-piece, did unlawfully permit a certain ferocious dog to go about unmuzzled, contrary to the bye-laws of the borough of Cambridge, whereby he rendered himself liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s.

Felch for the complainant.

Whitehead for the defence.

From the evidence of several witnesses it appeared that the dog, a black retriever, was usually kept chained up in the defendant's garden for the purpose of protecting the premises, and that upon various occasions, when so chained up, it had bitten numerous persons. One witness also proved that it had strayed in his master's garden, and had bitten him. Upon the day named in the information, it was shown that the dog was loose in Parker's-piece unmuzzled, in company with the defendant, but about two hundred yards from him. It was also shown that it was the habit of the defendant to let the dog loose in the evening to exercise it upon Parker's-piece, but there was no evidence that upon any of these occasions it had displayed its ferocity.

Whitehead, for the defendant, submitted, in the first place, that Parker's-piece was not a public street within the meaning of the bye-law.

Mr. Knowles, clerk to the magistrates, pointed out that by the interpretation clause of the Police Clauses Consolidation Act, Parker's-piece would be included.

Whitehead did not press the objection, but further contended that there was no evidence to show the ferocious nature of the animal, except of those witnesses who had spoken to injuries inflicted while chained up for the protection of his master's property, and that although a dog might, when so engaged, be termed ferocious, yet it was not evidence of his general disposition when let loose. Again, it was not shewn that it was "at large," for when in company and under control of his master, it could not be said to be "at large" within the meaning of the bye-law.

The Magistrates overruled all these objections, and, after evidence had been called to rebut the representations of the informant, convicted the defendant, and fined him 10s. and expenses.

NORWICH CITY JUSTICES, GUILDHALL.

REG. v. GRAY.

False declaration to obtain Superintendent-Registrar's licence of marriage—Party making same liable to the same penalties as perjury—19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, s. 18.

Quare, if justices do not consider evidence adduced sufficient for committal, can prosecutor require to enter into recognisances to prefer an indictment under sect. 2 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17?

Peter Gray, a labourer, was charged under mand with having on the 13th March last signed BOROUGH QUARTER SESSIONS.

Borough.	When holden.	Recorder.	What notice of appeal to be given.	Clerk of the Peace.
Ludlow	Tuesday, July 27	H. J. Hodgson, Esq. ...	10 days	H. Salwey.
Penzance	Saturday, July 31	H. T. Cole, Esq., Q.C. ...	8 days	W. Borlase.

a declaration, as required by the 22 & 23 Vict. to obtain a licence of marriage, containing statements as to length of residence of himself and the other person, and other particulars requisite, which were alleged to be untrue; and particularly having stated that he and his intended wife were cousins, whereas he was her uncle, and thereby by law unable to be married.

Lindsay (managing clerk to Sadd, Norwich) supported the information.

Atkinson, solicitor, appeared for the defendant. After hearing the evidence in support of the charge, and Atkinson having addressed the Bench on behalf of the defendant, the information was dismissed.

Lindsay then applied to the Bench to allow a person to be bound over to prefer an indictment against the accused at the next assizes under sect. 2 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, contending that, as by the 18th section of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, a person guilty of signing a false declaration was liable to the penalties of perjury, that sect. 2 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17 applied.

The BENCH allowed a prosecutor to enter into the requisite recognisances accordingly.

Friday, July 16.

GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY v. WILLIAMS.

Williams was charged with sending lucifer matches by railway, without distinctly marking the box as containing the same, contrary to sect. 105 of the 8 Vict. c. 20, subjecting him to a penalty of 20l.

Held, that the onus probandi that the offence had been committed was on the complainant.

A gentleman from the office of Mr. W. H. Shaw, of London, solicitor, represented the company.

Lindsay, of Norwich, appeared on behalf of the defendant.

Thomas Plow, a carman in the employ of the company, proved receiving a box from the defendant on the 17th June, which he delivered to Erasmus Walker, the scaleman at the company's goods station.

Walker, the scaleman, proved that he received the box of the last witness, and that it bore a direction, "Thurston, Cambridge," and in consequence of the smell of the same he opened it, and found the box contained a quantity of mixed grocery goods and also several dozen boxes of lucifer matches. Cross-examined by Lindsay—Did not observe anything else marked on the box except the address.

After the formal evidence as to publication of the list of offences at the company's stations,

Lindsay addressed the Bench on behalf of the defendant, and contended that it had not been positively shown that the box was not marked as required by the section of the Act of Parliament under which the information was laid, and the onus of proof that the offence had been committed rested on the complainants.

The JUSTICES, after a short deliberation, dismissed the summons.

CRIME IN FRANCE.—In spite of the far more careful supervision exercised over the dangerous classes of Paris than over their brothers in London, and notwithstanding the actual existence for some years of provisions in their French criminal code similar to those we have just introduced into our Habitual Criminals Bill, the registers of the Paris prefecture tell much the same tale as the gaolers of our own prisons. Here are a few cases which have been recently cited:—Joseph Guyot, between 1854 and 1868, was sentenced twenty-four times; Antonin Crozat, between 1833 and 1868, seventy-one times; Jean Hebrar, since Dec. 4, 1833, has been condemned to twenty-seven years and five months' imprisonment, twenty-five years of solitary confinement, and to 235 years of penal servitude—287 years in all. He was transported to Cayenne and escaped.

IRISH CONVICTS.—The directors of convict prisons in Ireland report that in the year 1868 246 convicts were sentenced to penal servitude, 50 less than in 1867; 172 were males, and 74 females; 245 convicts were discharged in the year—163 on orders of licence, and 82 unconditionally, on completion of sentence, &c. The number in custody on the 1st Jan. 1869, was 1325—viz. 922 males and 403 females, the total being 10 less than on the 1st Jan. 1868, 106 less than in 1867, 312 less than in 1866, 248 less than the average on the 1st Jan. of the ten years 1859-68. The total number of convict prisoners in 1868 was 1333; the deaths were 14, or rather over 1 per cent., and the average daily number of sick 42, or three times the deaths. The year's expenditure of these prisons—Mountjoy, Spike Island (public works), and Smithfield and Lusk (intermediate) was 38,090l., the estimated value of prisoners' work, 17,604l. It is proposed to close Smithfield Prison, as not needed. The report states that the Irish system of convict management continues to work satisfactorily. There were but sixteen revocations of licences in the year 1868. The Presbyterian chaplain at Spike Island gives a characteristic story of his flock; some of them "from the furthest north" waited upon him in the course of the year to state their objections to having hymns sung in Divine service, and to request that only the Psalms of David should be used, "hymns not being inspired." Mr. Organ lecturer at Lusk, one of the intermediate prisons to which well-conducted men are in due time transferred, reports that "immorality is completely and entirely absent from that colony, and a sound vigorous tone shows itself throughout." He describes the released convicts in the Dublin district as obtaining from 10s. to 30s. wages per week, and says that some are foremen, and many are employers themselves; the conduct of the great majority is most satisfactory, and the relapses into crime are very few. The slightest violation of the conditions of a licence is visited with punishment. It appears that there were in Mountjoy Prison in 1868 140 prisoners, received under the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act; 107 of them were discharged conditionally in the year, five unconditionally, and the rest were removed to county and city gaols. The account of this class of prisoners describes 148 as Roman Catholics and 37 as Protestants; 122 as single men, and 63 married.

CRIME IN IRELAND.—The judges, in their addresses to the grand juries, continue to comment in complimentary terms upon the general diminution of crime. In opening the commission in Wexford, Mr. Justice George "had nothing but unfeigned gratification to express." Mr. Justice Morris, who presided in the Crown Court at Belfast congratulated the grand jury upon the evidences of tranquillity and order which he had observed throughout the whole North-East Circuit. He expressed his gratification that, considering the immense population of the county of Antrim, there was perfect safety so far as humanly can be expected for life and property. He rejoiced in being able in the commercial capital of Ireland to use the same language of congratulation which he had used in the first term on the circuits. The satisfactory state of the calendar and the police reports proved that "there is under ordinary circumstances a feeling in favour of law and order in that part of the country, and that the people are what may be described as a law abiding people." His Lordship alluded to temporary and exceptional causes which might lead to breaches of the peace, and said he thought the effect of those causes had been very much exaggerated. He hoped these "small and trivial, temporary and exceptional causes" would cease, whether they arose from persons being too fond of giving offence to their neighbours, or from there being an over anxiety on the part of other persons to take offence. Baron Deasy made similar observations in his charge to the grand jury in the town of Carrickfergus. On all the circuits, so far as they have yet proceeded, there are favourable reports of the state of the country. In the county of Cork there are indications of a lawless spirit, which did not come under the observation of the Judges, in the number of incendiary fires, for which the grand jury passed presentments to the extent of 454l. This sum represents the value of a number of hayricks burnt and other injuries inflicted upon property.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WILL—CONSTRUCTION.—By a deed landed estates at Ealing were conveyed to trustees upon trust to sell, exchange, and make partition thereof, and in case of sale to pay one-half of the purchase money to L. and the other to B., for her separate use, and until the sale to hold the rent (as to B.'s moiety) for such person or persons as B. should by deed or will appoint, and in default for her absolutely. B. by her will devised all her "landed property" at Ealing to her husband (an alien) for life. B. died before a sale of the property had been effected: Held, that the property must be treated as personalty and sold, and the income arising from the proceeds of B.'s moiety paid to her husband for life: (Sharp v. De. St. Sauveur, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 799. V.C.S.)

POWERS OF ATTORNEY.

113. Power of attorney from owner as to sale and management of a merchant vessel.

Know all men by these presents, that I, A. B., of, &c., do hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint C. D., of, &c., to be my true and lawful attorney for me, and in my name, or in his own name or otherwise, to remove the present master Y. Z., of the ship [or barque] or vessel called the [] or any seaman or officer on board the said vessel; and from time to time to appoint any other master, seamen, or officers, to the same vessel upon such terms as to my said attorney shall seem fit. And also to demand and receive of and from the present or any future master of the said vessel, or from the officers thereof, or any other person or persons whom it may concern, the certificate of registry, log-books, and other papers and documents of or relating to the said vessel; and all papers, documents, goods, chattels, and effects which now are or hereafter may become due, owing, payable, or deliverable by or from the master, officers, or crew of the said vessel or any of them. And upon receiving the same to give proper receipts therefor. And to receive from any person or persons liable to pay the same, all freight and earnings of the said vessel, and to give proper discharges for the same, and for obtaining possession of the said vessel, or, on non-payment or non-delivery of any of the premises, to commence and prosecute all such suits, actions, or legal proceedings as he or they may think expedient. And also to appear to and defend any suits or actions against the said vessel or her owner, and also to receive from any person or persons to whom the same vessel may be sold, the purchase moneys for the same, and to give proper receipts for such moneys, and generally to do all such other acts, deeds, matters, and things in and about the premises as amply as I could do if personally present. I hereby binding myself to ratify and confirm whatsoever shall be lawfully done by virtue hereof. In witness, &c.

To all to whom these presents shall come, I, A. B., of, &c., send greeting. Whereas I am entitled, under the will of Y. Z., late of, &c., to a certain share and interest of and in the estate and effects of the said Y. Z., who died on or about, &c. And whereas, being about to leave England and to reside abroad for some time, I am desirous of appointing C. D. and E. F., of, &c., my attorneys, to act for me during my absence in respect of the said share and interest in manner hereinafter appearing. Now, know ye, that for divers good causes and considerations me hereunto moving, and for effectuating the said desire and purposes aforesaid, I do hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint the said C. D., and E. F., and each of them, my true and lawful attorneys and attorney from time to time, and at all times hereafter until the authority herein given shall be expressly revoked by writing under my hand indorsed on these presents for me, and in my name, place, and stead, to ask, demand, receive, and take possession of all moneys or property whatsoever which now are, or at any time or times hereafter shall or may be due, owing, payable, belonging, or coming to me from the trustees and executors, or other the representatives or representative for the time being of the said Y. Z. deceased, or from any other person or persons whomsoever, for or on account, or in respect of, my share and interest of and in the estate and effects of the said Y. Z. deceased, and whether testamentary, distributive, specific, residuary, or otherwise. And on receiving or obtaining payment, possession, or delivery thereof, or of any part thereof, to give effectual receipts, acquittances, releases, and discharges for the same. And also to commence, institute, and prosecute any actions, suits, or other proceedings, either at law or in equity, against the said trustees and executors representatives or representative, or any other person or persons, on account or in respect of the premises. And to defend any actions, suits, or other proceedings which may be commenced against me in respect of the premises, or to compromise the same, and to call for, and demand the production of, all proper accounts, statements, and inventories of the estate and effects of the said Y. Z., deceased, from the said trustees and executors, or other person or persons aforesaid, and, if necessary, to institute proceedings for compelling the production or delivery thereof. And to state, settle, adjust, and agree to all accounts and reckonings which are now, or which shall at any time or times hereafter be subsisting or unsettled between me and the said trustees and executors, or other person or persons aforesaid. And also for me, and in my name, place, and stead, and as my act and deed, to sign, seal, make, and execute any ordinary or special release in the law to the said trustees and executors, representatives or representative, or other person or persons aforesaid for, or in respect of the trust and executorship accounts relating to the estate of the said Y. Z., deceased, or for or in respect of the acts of the said trustees and executors, or other person or persons aforesaid in relation thereto, and generally to act in the premises as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as I the said A. B. could do if personally present and did the same. I hereby giving and granting to my said attorneys and to each of them my full and absolute power and authority in the premises, hereby ratifying, allowing, and confirming, and undertaking to ratify, allow, and confirm all and whatsoever my said attorneys or either of them shall lawfully do or cause to be done in or about the premises by virtue of these presents; and I hereby declare that the power and authority hereby given shall be and continue valid and effectual for all the purposes aforesaid, whosoever I shall happen to be, and notwithstanding that I may from time to time hereafter return to and depart from England before the said purposes and objects have been completely fulfilled. In witness, &c.

114. Power of attorney from partners to recover debt due from a foreign firm.

Know all men by these presents that we, A. B. and C. D., of, &c., trading under the style or firm of A. B. and Co., do for divers good causes and considerations us hereunto moving hereby make, constitute, and appoint Y. Z., of the firm of Y. I hereby acknowledge that I have received from Mr. A. B., of, &c. [mortgagor] the several deeds and writings mentioned at the foot hereof, and I undertake to keep the same whole and uncancelled

(a) Powers of attorney, such as the preceding, are liable to a stamp duty of 1l. 10s., but if for use abroad the stamp (if any) will be regulated by the revenue laws of the country wherein the power is to be exercised, on the general principle that no country takes cognisance of the revenue laws of a foreign state, and see James v. Catherwood, 3 D. & R. 190. In practice we believe powers are frequently sent out purposely unstamped. See, however, Bristol v. Sequeville, 19 L. J. 289, Ex., as to possible risk resulting from such a course.

(b) A mere acknowledgment of payment, however formal, if not under seal, is not conclusive; and this, even if the parties agree between themselves that it shall be so: (Foster v. Dauber, 20 L. J. 385, Ex.) So that where an estoppel is desired a deed inter partes should be used.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—SUIT BY LIQUIDATOR—LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.—Suit by official liquidator of a banking company against certain living directors, and the representatives of deceased directors of the company, seeking to make them liable for the following breaches of trust:—1. That the directors had, contrary to the provisions of the deed of settlement of the company (which was established in 1836 under the provisions of the Act 7 Geo. 4, c. 46), continued to carry on business after a certain fund called "the surplus fund," and one-fourth of the capital of the company had been lost. 2. That they had paid dividends out of capital. 3. That they had also, contrary to the provisions of the deed of settlement, allowed certain of the directors unduly to overdraw their accounts. 4. That they had issued false balance-sheets, and otherwise misrepresented the affairs of the company. As to the publication of false balance-sheets, and including in them debts which were hopelessly bad, it was difficult to say where a debt was hopeless; and, besides, if any shareholder was deceived into buying shares he might have his separate remedy, but each would have a different case, and the whole body could not sue. As to the dividends, the court could not order the directors to pay dividends over again to the shareholders. As to the not stopping of the bank, it appeared that much more than one-fourth of the capital was lost in 1842, when the shareholders resolved to go on, and the directors could not, therefore, be held liable for not calling a meeting and stopping the bank immediately after the shareholders had resolved to go on. As to the loan to one of the directors, no case was made on the bill, the only statement on that subject being that the directors had improperly included that debt among the assets. If the money had been improperly advanced the directors might be charged with it in the winding-up. Bill dismissed, but without costs: (Turgand v. Marshall, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 766. L. C.)

LANDS CLAUSES ACT, s. 92—PART OF PREMISES TAKEN.—Where a railway company has been decreed to take the whole of certain premises instead of part only, the court will compel the company to take the necessary steps for ascertaining the value of the part not taken: (Mason v. The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 773. V.C.J.)

WINDING-UP—SUB-AGENT—SALARY—CALLS.—An agent in a colony was appointed by a limited liability company for five years, at a salary of 750*l.* per annum, for business to be done in the colony, with commissions on remittances from thence. He was to pay up at once 2*l.* per share on fifty shares of 100*l.* each, and the company agreed to place 8*l.* per share to his debit on account of calls to be made on the shares. The agent arrived in the colony in Dec. 1865. The company was ordered to be wound-up under supervision in Jan. 1868, and the services of the agent were put an end to by a power of attorney of the company, and the liquidators upon certain terms of compromise. The liquidators having, in the course of their continued employment of the agent, become indebted to him, and having entered into the compromise, were not allowed to enforce against him the payment of a call made under the winding-up without bringing the debt due to him into account. Yelland's case, L. Rep. 4 Eq. 350, considered and followed: (Clarke's case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 774. V.C.J.)

POWER TO OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR TO COMPROMISE.—A company having been formed for the construction of a railway in Portugal, the government of that country seized the property of the company and the railway while it was in course of construction, alleging that it was entitled to do so in consequence of the company not having fulfilled its engagements. The Portuguese Government subsequently entered into negotiations for a compromise, and a liquidator having been appointed under a compulsory winding-up, power was given to him by the court, under sect. 96 of the Companies Act 1862, to act without the sanction of the court, on the ground that, under the special circumstances of the case, it was desirable that the liquidator should be armed with summary powers. It was subsequently moved on behalf of certain creditors that this order should be varied so far as it conferred upon the official liquidator power to compromise claims without the sanction of the court, on the ground that such a power was beyond the terms of the Act, and also that the compromise which the liquidator was about to effect was unsatisfactory: Motion refused with costs: (Re South-Eastern Railway, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 800. V.C.M.)

MARITIME LAW

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MASTER'S WAGES—MASTER OWNER OF HALF VESSEL AND CARGO.—F. and S., both residing at Halifax, N.S., were the owners each of a moiety of the cargo and ship Joseph Dexter. F. (as it was alleged) mortgaged his moiety to S. The ship sailed in Nov. 1868, from that port, F. being the master thereof. After so sailing, S. assigned his own moiety and the other moiety, of which he was, as he alleged, mortgagee, to B., of Liverpool, who, on the arrival of the ship at Cork, ordered F. to take her round to Liverpool. F. declined to obey that order, on the ground that he, F., was the owner of a moiety of cargo and ship, and he denied in strong language in a letter to B. that he had mortgaged his moiety to S. The ship and cargo were arrested by order of the Admiralty Court, and sold, at a price insufficient to cover the expenses. Held, that F. was entitled to his wages as master earned on board the ship, even though he were part owner thereof, and that the owner of the other moiety must pay him a moiety of such wages. Held, also, that the conduct of F., and the strong language used by him towards B., if even B. were the owner of the entire of the ship and cargo, were not such as to cause F. to forfeit his wages under the circumstances: (The Joseph Dexter, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 820, Adm. (Ireland).)

RECENT AMERICAN DECISIONS.

FREIGHT.—The abandonment of goods sunk in transitu to underwriters, and a receipt of the sum insured as for a total loss, followed by the underwriters taking possession of the goods, the carriers being ready and willing to complete the transportation, may be found by the jury to be an acceptance of the goods by the owner at the place of loss, entitling the carriers to freight pro rata: (McKibbin v. Peck, 39 N. Y. 262.)

GENERAL AVERAGE.—A vessel fell in with a ship in a sinking condition. To save the lives of the ship's passengers and crew, the master of the vessel consented to receive them; but as it was necessary to throw overboard part of his cargo to make room for them, he began to do so before any of them came on board, and continued it while they were coming on board until room enough was made. The owner of the vessel sued the insurers for a contribution to general average for the above jettison: Held, that he could not recover (Chapman and Foster, JJ., dissenting): (Dabney v. New England Mutual Ins. Co., 14 All. 300.)

INSURANCE.—Denial of all liability on a policy on the ground that the loss was not from a peril insured against, is a waiver of proof of loss required in the policy, as also of an allowance therein to the insurers of sixty days in which to pay. A steamer insured against loss by fire was run into by another vessel, which caused her to fill with water, which forced the fire from her furnaces and the fire burned so much of the wood-work that she sank, which she would not have done but for the fire. Held, that the insurers were liable for the loss, except the immediate results of the collision. (U. S. Circuit Court); (Norwich & N. Y. T. Co. v. Western Mass. Ins. Co., 34 Conn. 561.)

Furniture was insured "free of particular average" (which was taken to mean "against total loss only"). During the voyage the vessel was wrecked and condemned, and said goods were transhipped, parts of sets into one vessel, and parts into another. One of the said vessels was lost with its cargo, the other arrived safely. Held, that the insurers were liable for the goods lost: (Pierce v. Columbian Ins. Co. 14 All. 320.)

COUNTY COURTS.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

COSTS—ACTION OF TORT—SLANDER.—Sect. 5 of the County Court Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 142), which provides "that the plaintiff in an action of tort who recovers a sum not exceeding ten pounds shall not be entitled to any costs of suit, unless the judge certify on the record that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the Superior Court, or unless the court or a judge at chambers shall, by rule or order, allow such costs," applies to all actions of tort, whether they are such as can be commenced in a County Court or not: (Sampson v. Mackay, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 807. Q. B.)

TOWCESTER COUNTY COURT.

Monday July 5.

(Before FRANCIS McTAGGART, Esq., Judge.)

AYRES v. ARNOLD.

Executor—Liability for funeral expenses.

This was a case heard at the last court, on which His Honour reserved judgment.

His Honour now delivered judgment as follows:—In this case the plaintiff had been housekeeper to Joseph Arnold. He made his will, dated 7th May, 1869, appointing one Joseph Gaybell executor, and leaving all his property to the plaintiff. The will was not executed in the presence of witnesses, as required by 1 Vict., c. 26; but was sent, after execution, to two persons residing at a distance from the testator, who then attested the will. The result of this strange irregularity was, of course, that, in law, there was no will and no executor; so that any person intermeddling with the effects would be an executor de son tort, and not a mere trespasser. The plaintiff, upon the death of the testator, gave orders for the funeral, which orders were carried out. The testator's son afterwards, learning that the will was invalid, took possession of and intermeddled with the testator's effects, to an extent which I held made him an executor de son tort. The plaintiff then sued him for wages which she alleged were owing to her from the testator at the time of his death, and for the funeral expenses in question, for which the undertaker has recovered judgment against her in this court, although nothing has yet been paid under the judgment. I was of opinion, at the trial, that her claim for the wages failed; not (as was erroneously reported) on the ground that she would not have had a right of action against the defendant if she could have proved her claim, but on the ground that she had not succeeded in proving it. The funeral expenses were proved to have been incurred; and the liability of the defendant for them (which would be the same as that of a rightful executor) depends upon one or two points which it may be worth while to notice. The doctrine, which must now be held to be established, that an executor who gives no orders for the funeral of the testator, and who has assets sufficient for that purpose, is liable (personally—See Corner v. Sheu, 3 M. & W., 350) to anyone who, even without the executor's knowledge, furnishes the funeral, up to an amount suitable to the testator's degree and circumstances, is a doctrine which it is certainly difficult to reconcile with the principles of the common law. In fact, the earliest dictum upon the point—that of Lord Holt, Ashton v. Sherman (Holt 309) is directly the other way. "If A. employs B. to work for C., without warrant from C., A. is liable to pay for it; an executor is not liable to pay for funeral expenses unless he contracts for them." But in more recent cases the Courts of Common Law have held that an implied contract on the part of the executor to pay for funeral expenses incurred under these circumstances arises from the obligation imposed upon him by law with reference to his character and the estate of the deceased. In Rogers v. Price (3 Y. & J. 28), the judgment was put mainly on that ground; though it was also put by Vaughan B. (as by Lord Ellenborough in the previous Nisi Prius case of Tugwell v. Heyman, 3 Campb. 298) on the ground of necessity. It has been held, similarly, that a husband is liable for the expenses incurred in burying his wife, during his absence, by a third party; (Jenkins v. Tucker 1 H. Bl. 90; Ambrose v. Kerrison, 10 C. B. 776.) But these decisions, like the decision that a husband who wrongfully turns away his wife without giving her a sufficient allowance, is liable to a person who supplies her with necessaries, seem to be based rather on considerations of equity and necessity (notwithstanding Lord Mansfield's observations upon the last of these doctrines, in Ozard v. Darnford, 1 Selw. N.P.), than on any clear principle of law. It is difficult to see how any implied authority or promise to pay to a third party arises from the mere neglect of the obligation of the executor towards his testator, or of the husband towards his wife. The obligation of each is one for the non-performance of which he may be visited in some shape or other by the law; but, as was urged by the late Mr. Justice Maule (then at the bar), in his very able argument in Rogers v. Price, it does not follow that the neglect of even a legal duty makes the person neglecting it liable, on an implied promise, to reimburse a third party who gratuitously intervenes and performs that duty for him. Reliance was placed by the court, in giving judgment in Rogers v. Price, upon the case of Simmons v. Willmott, 3 Esp. 91, in which parish officers were held liable for the expenses incurred by a private person, not a parishioner, in taking care of a casual pauper for whom the officers were bound to provide. But, in the first place, it is doubtful whether the duty of an executor to bury the testator, though no doubt an urgent duty, is not rather in the nature of a trust than of a positive legal obligation like the obligation of parish officers, and, secondly, whether even the doctrine that a positive legal obligation renders the party bound liable, on an implied promise, to those who voluntarily, and not by compulsion of law, undertake that to which he is legally compellable, is not against the rules of law with respect to implied promises, which are fully laid down in the notes to Lampleigh v. Braithwaite, 1 Sm. L. C. 118. Take the case of a railway company, bound by statute to maintain sufficient fences along their railway. Could it be contended that their neglect to keep the fences in repair would raise an implied promise on their part to pay for the expenses voluntarily incurred by some one else, not even damaged by the neglect, in repairing them? However, the doctrine that an executor is liable under these circumstances is one which, though it has been much questioned (especially by the Court of Exchequer, in Corner v. Sheu), has never been expressly overruled, and must be held to be law; and my remarks have not been made with a view of questioning the equity and expediency of the doctrine, but only for the purpose of showing what is its nature and probable origin, and that, though it is now a rule of law, it cannot be said to rest upon a strictly legal foundation. An objection was made by the court in Brice v. Wilson, 3 Nev. & M. 512, which is material to the present case, namely, that "there is no case which goes the length of deciding that if the funeral be ordered by another person, to whom credit is given, the executor is liable." But in the subsequent case of Green v. Salmon, 8 A. and E. 348, Patterson J. says, "The judgment" in Brice v. Wilson "probably means that the executor, when credit has been given to another, is not liable to the undertaker. If it lays down more, the law stated is extrajudicial." And that is the view taken in Williams on Executors (part 4, book 2, chap. 2), namely, that if the person to whom credit is given pays the undertaker, such person may have an action against the executor for reasonable expenses. Now in the present case it was admitted that the funeral had been supplied on the credit of the plaintiff; and the question therefore is, whether she is in a position to sue the defendant for money paid to his use at his (implied) request. I consider that she is not entitled to do so until she has actually paid the money due from her under the judgment obtained against her in respect of the expenses in question. Her mere liability to pay them is not sufficient to give her a right to sue; she has, therefore, brought her action prematurely and I must direct a nonsuit, unless the parties come to some arrangement.

SWANSEA COUNTY COURT.—But few men have worked with greater assiduity in the discharge of their public official duties and given greater satisfaction to all with whom they have come in contact, than Mr. John Jones, the deputy-registrar of the Swansea County Court. Almost from the establishment of the court has Mr. Jones been in connection therewith in some form or other, whilst for the past thirteen years he has discharged with singular aptitude and ability the onerous duties of his present post. Under his personal superintendence the whole of the office-work of the large and rapidly increasing business of the court has been conducted in the most satisfactory manner. One would have thought that this efficient and zealous discharge of duty in so important a public office would have received some corresponding mark of recognition and appreciation. But it is not so. On the 1st of October next, Mr. Jones will be superseded in his office—removed after a servitude of thirteen years to make room for a son of the present chief registrar. Mr. Jones does not resign his office, as the Western Mail informs its readers. The fact is as we have stated. Mr. Jones has no option—the registrar exercising the legal right vested in him, uses that right in the displacement of Mr. Jones to make room for his own son. We have not one word to say in disparagement of the young gentleman about to be appointed in Mr. Jones's place—possibly he will discharge the onerous duties of the office with satisfaction; but we cannot help remarking that the manner in which Mr. Jones, an able and valuable official, is treated after so many years of hard and honest work is not that which will meet with public approval. We can only add that we feel confident that all who have any connection with the County Court will deeply regret the severance about to be made. —The Cambrian.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Tuesday, July 6.

Re WILLIAM ROE DUNSTAN.

Bankruptcy Act 1861, sect. 168.

Jurisdiction of court to reopen the question of the allowance of an order of discharge:

Held, where discharge is granted with certain conditions annexed, the court has no power to modify or vary the same.

An application involving the moot question of the power of the court to alter the conditions attached to an order of discharge was heard, and argued by Evans and Christopher Cheshire, solicitors, a few days since, and judgment reserved till this day.

HIS HONOUR now said: An order of discharge was granted by this court on March 7, 1864, to William Roe Dunstan, attorney-at-law, and coroner for the southern division of the county of Chester, subject to the condition that he should pay from his income as coroner an annual sum of 60*l.* towards the liquidation of all debts owing at the time of his adjudication, on the ground that at the time when he contracted certain debts he had no reasonable or probable ground of expectation of being able to pay the same. An application, supported by affidavit, had been made on behalf of Mr. Dunstan for an alteration in the terms of the order of discharge, inasmuch as the net income anticipated when the order was granted has not come up to the expected amount. The first question which arises in this case is, whether the court has power to rehear the order of discharge. That question depends on the construction of sect. 168 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, which enacts that "The order of discharge, whether suspended or not, shall not be revived by the court unless the court see good cause to believe that the order was obtained on false evidence, or by reason of the suppression of evidence or otherwise fraudulently." In the course of the argument I was referred by Mr. Evans to many decisions demonstrating the power which the Courts of Chancery and Bankruptcy possess to rehear their own orders, as well as to the following cases bearing more immediately on the 168th section, viz., Ex parte Whitaker, 1 De Gex, M. & G. 459; Ex parte Atherton, 3 C. B. 142; and Ex parte Green, 13 L. T. Rep. N.S. 414. It appears to me that the cases in the former class are inapplicable to the present question, as I am of opinion that the jurisdiction of this court is limited by sect. 168, Bankruptcy Act 1861. Ex parte Whitaker is an authority in favour of this contention on the construction of the analogous sect. 207 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, and the decision of Mr. Commissioner Holroyd in Ex parte Green, expressly determines the point, that the Court of Bankruptcy has no power to vary a condition once annexed to an order of discharge under Bankruptcy Act 1861. In Ex parte Atherton, Lord Cairns, L.J., decided that the Court of Bankruptcy had power to review an order refusing discharge of a bankrupt, because the provisions of sect. 168 were limited to a case where the order of discharge had been already obtained, and "it was material that the Legislature should provide that in the absence of fraud an order of discharge should not be open to revocation, so that innocent persons who had dealt on the faith of it should not be placed in peril." There is no pretence for an allegation of fraud or suppression here, and it is impossible to contend that the conditions which are statutorily attached to an order of discharge, are not a constituent part of such order, but, on the contrary, independent terms, to be connected, or disconnected, according to the exigencies of argument. If that be so, the words of this section, which are not confined to a reversal, but to a review of the order, strengthened as they are by authorities all confirming this construction, preclude me from entertaining the application to alter the conditions of this order of discharge. I regret that I am obliged to arrive at this conclusion, for in many cases, as in this, circumstances may incidentally arise before the performance of the conditions which may render the alteration of the terms advisable, not only as regards the bankrupt, but as respects the interests of the general body of creditors.

Re JOSEPH BEST.

The B.A. 1849—Application for release under sect. 112—Discretion of the court as to ordering release.

A bankrupt, who, being in pecuniary difficulties, leaves the town where he had carried on business, and proceeds to London, and there plays hide and seek with his creditors, cannot be considered a person likely to assist them if released: (Ex parte Stuart, re Waugh, 9 L. T. Rep. followed.)

This was an application for release.

The bankrupt, a prisoner for debt in Whitecross-street Prison, was not present, but the circumstances of his application are fully detailed in the judgment of the learned commissioner.

Etty appeared for the assignees and a detaining creditor.

Norden, for the bankrupt.

HIS HONOUR who had on the previous day heard the arguments, delivered judgment this morning as follows:—An application has been made to this court for the release of the bankrupt from Whitecross Prison. He was arrested on the 3rd May 1869, and adjudicated bankrupt on 7th May on his own petition. He then made an application for his release before the choice of assignees, but, being opposed, was remitted to custody, according to the ordinary practice in such cases. After the choice of assignees he renewed his application on the 14th June; affidavits were filed by several creditors in opposition, and an affidavit in reply was filed by the bankrupt; the case was fully heard by Mr. Commissioner Bacon, and the application for release dismissed. The circumstances which have led to the present position of the bankrupt are these:—In 1868 the bankrupt resided in a house at Oxtou, together with a Mr. Roderick Campbell, who, according to the statement of the bankrupt, assisted him in his practice at Liverpool, where he carried on a large business as an attorney, especially in the Court of Bankruptcy, and occupied offices at 55, South Castle-street, as tenant to Mr. Macfie, the creditors' assignee, who carried on business himself on the ground-floor of the same building. About the middle of January in the present year, the bankrupt, who was then considerably embarrassed and pressed by his creditors, as appears from the evidence before me, as well as his own admission, departed from his house at Oton for London, under circumstances to which I shall presently allude. About the same time Mr. Campbell packed up the bankrupt's books and papers at the office in Liverpool, and took his departure with them, and has not been seen since either at Oton or Liverpool. The house at Oton was closed, the furniture removed by the Great Western Railway, and subsequently discovered in a warehouse belonging to that company at Paddington, deposited in the name of Mr. Roderick Campbell. A boy was left in the office, who stated, in answer to inquiries, that he could not tell where Mr. Best was, but that letters would be forwarded through Mr. Martin Browne, an attorney, of this town. We next find Mr. Best in London, where he resided, according to his own account, in three different sets of lodgings, with the exception of a short time when he was at Southampton. Although some correspondence took place between two of his creditors and himself, yet he did not divulge his real address on any occasion, but either called at a hotel for his letters or received them through his London agents, Messrs. Doyle and Edwards. Mr. Macfie who was subsequently chosen creditors' assignee, went up to London for the purpose of discovering the bankrupt, but was unable to do so. So far he eluded his creditors, but at length his own agents, Messrs. Doyle and Edwards, arrested him. He came up before the court in London, where his application for release was dismissed, and the proceedings were, by order of Mr. Commissioner Bacon transferred to this court. Mr. Nordon, who has argued in support of his client with great energy and ability, has very properly drawn my attention to the authorities which show that the Court of Bankruptcy will, in the exercise of the discretion given to it by sect. 112, Bankruptcy Act 1849, ordinarily release a bankrupt, unless he be found to have done certain things which expressly disentitle him to his discharge. It is contended by Mr. Ely, on the other hand, not only that the conduct of the bankrupt has been such as to disentitle him to release, inasmuch as the evidence leads to the inevitable conclusion that he would, if released, elude his creditors, abscond, and not attend the sittings of the court, but Mr. Commissioner Bacon, has already determined the question, and that no new facts have arisen since which should induce this court to come to a different conclusion. It may well be that the removal of the proceedings to this court alone might render it desirable that the bankrupt should be released in the interest of his Liverpool creditors, besides which it is alleged by the bankrupt, in an affidavit filed since the dismissal of the former application, that it will be impossible for him to prepare the accounts ordered by the court whilst he is in custody. The primary object of a bankrupt's discharge from prison is to enable him to assist the assignees in discovering and getting in the estate, but I am at the same time not unmindful that the law of England is ever jealous of the liberty of the subject. I shall confine myself in considering this application as much as possible to those points which have not been brought under the notice of Mr. Commissioner Bacon, as I should not for a moment think of reviewing any decision of so experienced and distinguished a judge. The Lord Chancellor (Westbury) has most distinctly laid it down in Ex parte Stuart, re Waugh, 31 L.J. 6, Bank., that "The commissioner is authorised to exercise the power of ordering the release of the bankrupt only for the benefit of the creditors under the bankruptcy. If he is perfectly satisfied that it will conduce to the benefit of the creditors the power may be exercised." Now, let us look at the circumstances under which the bankrupt left Liverpool, and what he has since done to advance the interests of his creditors. The bankrupt alleges that he left this town solely with the intention of continuing practice either in London or the South of England, that this departure was no secret, that he was not pressed by his creditors, had ample means to pay his debts, bills of costs due to him to the amount of nearly 1000*l.*, and that at the time of his departure he deputed Messrs. Martin Browne and Roderick Campbell to make certain arrangements for him. On this it must be remarked that it is somewhat singular that a professional man should leave a large practice in Liverpool with the view of founding a new business without any connection elsewhere, and the allegations of the bankrupt are entirely unsupported by any affidavit from Messrs. Browne and Campbell, or any former clerk, or any other person whatever; whilst his release is opposed by the creditors' assignee, and several other creditors, to all of whom the bankrupt ascribes vindictive motives. But there are certain suggestive facts, apart from the statement of the bankrupt and the opinions of the creditors, from which the motives and intentions of the bankrupt may be strongly inferred. Early in January there were writs and judgments out against him, and within a fortnight of his departure he obtained silver plate from Messrs. Elkington to the amount of 105*l.*, and jewellery from a Mr. Wood to the amount of 48*l.*, on credit, as well as the very portmanteau to carry off his wearing apparel, which was sold for cash on delivery, yet the bankrupt denied himself to the shopwoman who called for the money, and when she went again to his house a few days afterwards he was gone. His furniture was at the same time removed and warehoused in the name of Mr. Roderick Campbell, at Paddington station. Has any of this property been given up? The hiding place of the furniture was detected by Mr. Macfie and sold under his execution. The bankrupt on his arrest declared that he had no papers or property of any kind, except his wearing apparel, though he subsequently stated that the plate obtained from Messrs. Elkington was temporarily deposited to enable him to obtain money to pay off an execution; yet he has given no name, or clue to the place of deposit. What was his course of conduct when he reached London? Why, he was lurking about without any fixed residence, playing hide-and-seek with his creditors, never allowing his real address to be known, and carrying on all communications through third parties, and this too for several months, until he is at last arrested in May. Does such a course afford any guarantee to the creditors that he will, if released, attend the sittings of the court and give them the benefit of his assistance? In his last affidavit the bankrupt insists that he cannot prepare his accounts in prison, because all his papers have been removed by Mr. Roderick Campbell, and are still in his custody and control, without the will and consent of the bankrupt; yet he believes that if released he could obtain these papers. Now, there is no presumption to be inferred more clearly from all the circumstances of the case independently of the admissions of the bankrupt, than that Mr. Roderick Campbell was his intimate friend and confidential agent, and has throughout acted in concert with him. Mr. Campbell assisted in his practice, Mr. Campbell was expressly instructed by the bankrupt to arrange all matters connected with his office, Mr. Campbell leaves Liverpool shortly after the bankrupt, the furniture is deposited in the name of Mr. Campbell; but Mr. Campbell is not forthcoming now, and, though the bankrupt knows that his papers are still in the custody or control of Mr. Campbell, yet he has never furnished the assignee with the address of Mr. Campbell, or given him the opportunity of endeavouring to recover the documents so necessary to the bankrupt that he states that it will be impossible for him to prepare his accounts or comply with the orders of the court without access to them. I have gone most carefully through the voluminous papers which have been filed in this case, in order to ascertain whether there were any new facts or change of circumstances sufficient to sanction a course different from that directed by Mr. Commissioner Bacon when the bankrupt was before him; but I am unable to find anything in the history of this bankruptcy, or in the conduct of the bankrupt throughout—when I look at his uniform practice of concealment, his enforced departure from Liverpool, and his fugitive life in London—which can lead me to the conclusion that he has, if released, any real intention to promote the interests of his creditors. He has not given up his books, though they are in the custody of his agent; he has not given up his plate, although it is deposited in some place known to him but undisclosed to his assignee. He has hitherto attempted to elude, never to meet, his creditors. Under these circumstances no material benefit can be expected by the creditors from his release. I must also bear in mind that many creditors have opposed whilst none have supported the prisoner's application, and I cannot but think that the creditors were fully justified in resolving at their first meeting to oppose the release of the bankrupt, unless he should find sufficient bail to ensure his due attendance at the sittings of the court. The application will therefore be refused. I have considered the question of bail in reference to the statements of the bankrupt's debts and liabilities, and shall be ready to grant his release on his entering into recognisances to the amount of £400 to attend all the sittings of the court in the bankruptcy, and finding two sufficient sureties, who shall each be bound over to the amount of £200 as security for such attendance as aforesaid.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY (IRELAND).

(Before MILLER, J.)

June 18, 1869.

Re THOMAS BYRNE (an insolvent). (a) Right of a surety to oppose the insolvent's discharge—Large interest charged on discounting bills.

(a) From the Irish Law Times.

Where 25 per cent is charged upon money advanced on bills, the court will not deal with the case as that of an ordinary trade creditor.

Where a person, with others, is joined as security with the insolvent to a third party, for the debt of that third party, such person is not a creditor and will not be allowed to oppose.

Byrne was a dairyman, and his discharge was opposed by Keatinge Clay, solicitor, on the part of a Mr. Sullivan and of a person named Phillips, on the ground of having made away with property, and of having entered into collusion with his father-in-law, M'Guirk, and the son of M'Guirk, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors.

Kernan, Q.C., appeared for the insolvent, and contended that Phillips was not a creditor at all, and of course had no right to oppose.

MILLER, J., in delivering judgment, said that Phillips, the person seeking to oppose the discharge of the insolvent, had joined in a bill of exchange along with the M'Guirks, the father-in-law and the brother-in-law of the insolvent, to a person named Sullivan, for the sole accommodation of M'Guirk, who received the entire proceeds of the bill. Shortly afterwards, and while that bill of exchange was current, M'Guirk assigned, or purported to assign, his cows and all his other property to his son-in-law the insolvent. But it appeared that a man named King, who was a relative of M'Guirk's, so far overreached that assignment as to recoup himself for a claim he had against M'Guirk the elder, by a seizure and sale of some of his cows, which had belonged to M'Guirk the elder; and it further appeared that the insolvent very soon afterwards not only sold the remainder of the cows that belonged to his father-in-law, but also converted his whole property into cash, and applied that cash in payment of the debts of his own, and some of those for which his father-in-law, with the insolvent, were liable; excluding, however, the bill upon which the insolvent and his father-in-law were liable to Sullivan. The insolvent had been arrested under a fiat at the suit of Sullivan, as the holder of the bill having on it the names of Phillips, of the insolvent, and of the two M'Guirks, and an opposition had been entered on the part of Sullivan and of Phillips in respect of that bill. Now, it is not to be lost sight of that I am sitting in a criminal court administering a very penal code. Sullivan, who is a pawnbroker, has very frankly admitted that the rate of interest which he charges is 25 per cent., but that in taking the bill in question, which was a renewal of other bills, he struck off several pounds which he would be entitled to charge on all the transactions. I do not mean to say one word in disparagement of those gentlemen who are authorised by law to make those charges (and the law now permits a man to take any interest he can get); but I am entitled to conclude that where a party charges interest at the rate of 25 per cent., and requires two or more names on his security, he is prepared for events such as have happened in the present case; therefore an opposition coming from such parties cannot meet with the same favour as ordinary creditors should receive. And when I see no reason to question the application of the property by the insolvent in discharge of his liabilities, as stated in his schedule, and that no debt was actually due to Sullivan at the time the insolvent disposed of his property, I see no ground for remanding him at the suit of Sullivan. As regards the opposition of Phillips, the impression produced on my mind by the evidence, and in particular by the evidence of M'Guirk, the younger, was that Phillips was entitled to protection against these dealings by the insolvent with his father-in-law and brother-in-law, if it were in the power of the court to extend it to him. But the difficulty which I felt was whether Phillips was, in respect of his liability jointly with the insolvent for the debt of M'Guirk to a third party, a creditor under the meaning of the Act of Parliament entitled to oppose. Under the 207th section of the Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act, the persons declared entitled to oppose the discharge of the insolvent are his creditors. Then, is Phillips a creditor of the insolvent at present? I think not. The 212th section gives the court power "to discharge the insolvent as to the several debts or sums of money due, or claimed to be due, at the time of filing the petition, from the insolvent to the several persons named in his schedule as creditors, or claiming to be creditors, for the sums respectively for which they are returned, or for which such persons shall have given credit to such insolvent before the time of filing his petition, and which were not then payable, and to future claims of every surety or bail for such insolvent named in his or her schedule as a contingent creditor, and as to the claims of all other persons not known to the insolvent at the time of such adjudication, and who may be indorsees and holders of any negotiable security set forth in his schedule." Phillips, who was joined with the insolvent to a third party for the debt of that third party, and who had not paid that debt, could not be said to be a creditor of the insolvent under the 212th section. The 253rd section provided that sureties and persons liable for the debts of the insolvent may prove after having paid such debts. Then, under that section, I think, Phillips is not a creditor, and, if he is not a creditor, he cannot be allowed to oppose. A case has been supplied to me by the Chief Clerk in Insolvency, Re Cann, reported in 1 Bankruptcy and Insolvency Reports, 217, in which, under the Protection Act in England, Mr. Commissioner Murphy held that where he found three or four persons returned as sureties on a bill of exchange, the creditor alone who was holder of the bill had the legal right of action in respect to the debt; he alone was entitled to oppose. Looking at that decision, his Lordship said, that although he felt that Phillips had not been fairly dealt with, he did not think that under the circumstances he could remand the insolvent at his suit.

The insolvent was discharged.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRIVATE CHAPEL, FORMING PART OF PARISH CHURCH.—REPAIRS.—The freehold of a lesser chapel or private chapel annexed to, and apparently forming part of, a parish church, may be in a private person. It is not necessarily annexed to the possession of a messuage or manor house, but may form the subject of conveyance separately from other property, like any other freehold land. In an action by a person claiming the freehold of inheritance in a private chapel, apparently forming part of the parish church, against the vicar for trespass in breaking the lock of such chapel: Held, that the facts that plaintiff's predecessors in title had always repaired the chapel, that their tenants had always occupied the sittings within it, and that they had always had a lock upon the door of it, were sufficient evidence to show that the freehold in the soil of the chapel belonged to the plaintiff, and that the action was, therefore, maintainable: Chapman v. Jones, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 811. Ex.)

COURT OF ARCHES.

(Before the Right Hon. Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

EDNEY AND ANOTHER v. SMALLBONES.

Novel church rate case.

This was a suit to enforce payment of a church rate to repair and enlarge the church of Whitechurch, Hampshire, in the diocese of Winchester. The promoters were the churchwardens, and the defendant one of the parishioners, who objected to pay the rate. The present application was on the part of the defendant for the production of documents in the possession of the churchwardens.

Dr. Stobey said the case was a peculiar one. The rate was for the repairs of the church, and the objection was that it had been applied to repair the chancel as well, and therefore could not be enforced, as the holder of the rentcharge had not been assessed. He asked for a monition to issue for the documents to be produced.

Dr. Tristram, for the churchwardens, opposed a monition. The documents would be produced for inspection.

His LORDSHIP made an order for the production and inspection of the documents, and expressed his intention to hear the case before the vacation. Order accordingly.

MR. LOCKE KING'S REAL ESTATE INTES- TACY ACT.—It has often struck me that the most benevolent legislators incur failure and disappointment from insufficient knowledge of remote consequences of their reforms—the power of things which, in Yorkshire phrase, belong to all things. As a constituent of Mr. Locke King may I, through your columns, point out one feature of the working of another piece of his legislation, with the policy of which I find no fault. The only moral I would point out is, that if small holdings are to wax fine by degrees and beautifully less, a small proprietor had better throw his all into the Treasury than incur the vexation, mortification, puzzlement, and madness which must attend the working out of his quota of succession duty. Note the real complication of the present case, which results from dispositions not inconsistent with primogeniture. Two devisees hold some houses and land in common; each creates a mortgage, and each subdivides his moiety, one moiety of the original moiety being divided among nine children, some of whom are private soldiers serving in the colonies. Three houses forming part of the estate, the tenants in common not unnaturally assumed that each held his own dwelling house in severalty; consequently, the will of each contemplated that state of things; and, indeed, in one case succession duty was paid accordingly. Now, inasmuch as the tenants in common were related, and had a common interest in their family, you may fancy what trouble attended the preparation and rendering of the succession-duty accounts, the rather as the only chance of effecting a sale of the scattered fractions arose during the continuance of two successive life interests; the duty on these had to be anticipated. Imagine, Mr. Editor, the future leader of the Conservative party replying to the taunt, "Where are the freeholders of Bucks?" by saying that "much learning had made them mad. Decimal fractions on the brain had proved too much for the Mercian franklins."

THE FINAL EXAMINATION.—Can you or any of your correspondents suggest any book to read for the final examination on Chancery practice? I am aware that Aylkbourne and Kimber's Suits in Equity are usually recommended, but I am under the impression that there is some better book published than either of the above. ARTICULUS. [Snell's Principles of Equity is a most useful work; Smith's Equity and Haynes's Outlines are also read for this examination.—ED.]

"THE WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACT 1869."—I shall be glad of the opinion of your correspondents (or that of counsel, if such is by and by taken by any of them) whether the 15th section of this Act makes the keeper of the house liable to the penalty of 40s. who suffers travellers or lodgers to drink beer or cider in the house at any time during which it ought by law to be closed. And whether the 16th section, which exempts servants or inmates of such a house, and the other houses referred to in the section, includes "travellers" under the term "inmates" or not.

After her decease unto each and every the lawful sons and daughters of B. for life, severally and successively in order and course as they should be in seniority of age and priority of birth; and from and after the decease of all and every the said children or issue of the said B., the testator devised the said estate unto his godchild C., the daughter of his nephew D., and her children or issue, severally and successively in like manner in every respect as is thereinbefore limited and expressed concerning the devise to the said B. and her children or issue as aforesaid; and from and after the decease of all and every the said children or issue of the said C., the testator devised the said estate unto the said D., his heirs and assigns for ever. The testator died in 1823, leaving his niece B., his godchild C., and his nephew D., him surviving. B. afterwards married, and died eight years ago without having had any children. The nephew D. died in 1830, leaving C., his only child and heiress-at-law him surviving. On the death of B. C. entered into possession, and has ever since received the rents of the estate, but has not yet been admitted; she is married, and has a large family. Now, as the testator does not devise the estate over to C. until after the decease of all and every the said children or issue of B., the first question that arises is whether he intended the estate to go to the issue of the child or children of B., which would be illegal; the giving estates for life to unborn children and the issue of such children tending to a perpetuity. The particular intention thus falling, the next question is, whether the rule will apply which gives such a construction to the will, as will nearest approach to the general intention of the testator, by enlarging the estate for life in the first taker to an estate tail, which would preserve it in the line of such first taker so long as there was issue. But the first taker, B., having died without children or issue, and without having barred the estate tail (if such it was), would it revert to the donor, the testator, and go under his will to the heir of the nephew D., who is C., who would thus become possessed of the fee? On the other hand, if the word "issue" is merely intended as a synonym for children, or sons or daughters, then the life estates would be legal, and C. will hold for life, and her children will take life estates in succession after her death. It should be stated that the testator gave the residue of his real estate to his nephew D. in fee, so that if there was any estate not specifically disposed of, it would now vest in his heiress, C. Will any of your correspondents say what estate C. now takes in the property devised to B. for life? (Stuart v. Cockerell, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 513.)

LAW SOCIETIES.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

Proceedings and Resolutions at the Annual General Meeting, held the 16th July, 1869.

At the annual meeting of the members of the society, held in the hall of the society on July 16, 1869, John Henry Bolton, Esq., President, in the chair.

1. Read the circular convening the meeting as follows:

21st June 1869.
Sir,—I am directed to inform you that, pursuant to the charter, the annual general meeting of the members of the society will be held in the hall of the society, in Chancery-lane, on Friday, the 16th July next, at two o'clock precisely in the afternoon, for the election of a president and vice-president of the society; of ten members of the council, in lieu of ten members who will go out of office in rotation; of two members of the council, in lieu of Ralph Barnes, deceased, and Edward Leigh Pemberton, resigned; of three auditors, and for other purposes of the society. The following are the names of the members who will go out of office in rotation, and are immediately re-eligible, viz.:—E. F. Burton, J. M. Clabon, J. Leman, P. Nelson, A. Ryland, R. E. Upton, A. W. White, W. Williams, B. Wilson, J. Young. The name of every person intended to be proposed as president or vice-president, or as a member of the council, or as an auditor, must be transmitted in writing to the secretary, seven days at least before the day of election.

A list containing the names of members whose subscriptions remain unpaid has been put up in the hall, under the 55th bye-law of the society. Such members are under that bye-law liable, by the order and resolution of a general meeting, to be excluded from the society, and they will cease to be members thereof.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant.

E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.

2. The minutes of the last annual general meeting special general meetings were approved and confirmed.

3. The President stated the vacancies in the offices of President, Vice-President, in the members of the council, who go out of office by rotation, and in the auditors; that James Leman, whose name appeared in the list of those members of the council who go out of office by rotation, did not offer himself for re-election; that the following gentlemen had been proposed to fill such vacancies, except that occasioned by the resignation of James Leman, that is to say:—President, Edward Lawrence; Vice-President, William Ford; Members of the Council, Edward Frederick Burton, John Moxon Clabon, Park Nelson, Arthur Ryland, Robert Brotherson Upton, Arnold William White, William Williams, Robert Wilson, and John Young—proposed by William Flower and William Gorham. That Charles Reynolds Williams had been proposed by James Birch Kelly and Frederick John Pagden to fill the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of James Leman.

It was thereupon unanimously resolved—That Edward Lawrence be, and he is hereby deemed and declared to be elected president.

That William Ford be, and he is hereby deemed and declared to be elected vice-president.

That Edward Frederick Burton, John Moxon Clabon, Park Nelson, Arthur Ryland, Robert Brotherson Upton, Arnold William White, Charles Reynolds Williams, William Williams, Robert Wilson, and John Young be, and they are hereby deemed and declared to be, elected members of the council in lieu of the ten members who go out of office in rotation.

That Samuel Steward, John Proctor Bird, and Henry Markby be, and they are hereby deemed and declared to be, elected auditors of the accounts of the society for the ensuing year.

The President stated the vacancies in the council occasioned by the death of Ralph Barnes, of Exeter; and the retirement of Edward Leigh Pemberton; that Charles Edward Ward, of Bristol, had been proposed by Charles Meredith and Henry Skrim Law Hussey to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Ralph Barnes; and that Nathaniel Tertius Lawrence had been proposed by Richard Mills and Theodore Waterhouse to fill the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of Edward Leigh Pemberton.

Resolved—That Charles Edward Ward be, and he is hereby deemed and declared to be, elected a member of the council, in lieu of Ralph Barnes, deceased.

That Nathaniel Tertius Lawrence be, and he is hereby deemed and declared to be, elected a member of the council, in lieu of Edward Leigh Pemberton, resigned.

4. The annual report of the council, which had already been printed and circulated amongst the members of the society, was submitted to the meeting.

On a motion that the report be received, approved, and entered on the minutes, a discussion took place on the various matters therein referred to, when it was proposed by Mr. J. C. Burgoyne, of 101, Oxford-street, seconded by Mr. N. C. Milne, of 2, Harcourt-buildings, Temple, and resolved unanimously—That this meeting hereby expresses its entire and cordial approval of the steps which have been taken by the council in opposition to the removal (as threatened by the Bill lately brought into Parliament) of the Site for the new Law Courts and Offices from Carey-street to the Thames Embankment, or elsewhere; and this meeting earnestly deprecates such removal as injurious to the interests equally of the suitors, the public, and the members of the Legal Profession.

It was moved by Mr. E. W. Field, seconded by Mr. J. L. Pulling, and resolved—That the council be congratulated on the completion of the new catalogue of the library; and that they be requested to consider whether any improvement can be made in the arrangement of the books on the shelves, and also whether any new system of reference to the new catalogue can be adopted whereby the position of books on the shelves can be readily ascertained.

It was then resolved—That the report be received, approved, and entered on the minutes.

Read the auditors' report of the receipts and disbursements of the society, as signed by the auditors, and submitted to the meeting for approval.

Resolved—That the auditors' report be approved, and signed by the president.

Resolved—That the sincere thanks of the meeting be presented to the president for the services he has rendered to the society during his year of office, which has been one of unceasing labour.

(Signed) J. H. BOLTON, President.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

The following report was read at the above meeting:—

The Concentration of the Law Courts and Offices.

The time of the council has been largely occupied during the past year with the difficulties which have unexpectedly been raised by the Government to a prosecution of the scheme sanctioned by Parliament in 1865.

The members will recollect that the last report of the council alluded to the revival of a proposition for the erection of the courts upon the Thames Embankment. Parliament having, after a full discussion, decided in favour of the Carey-street site, it was then confidently hoped that the question would not be reopened. It would involve further delay and a largely increased expenditure, and the site already chosen was the more convenient for the suitors and the Profession.

Those hopes, were, however, disappointed. During the recess, upon the accession of the new Government, orders were given to the architect to discontinue the preparation of the final plans. The site at first suggested on the Thames Embankment was one bounded by the Strand on the north, the Thames Embankment on the south, the Temple on the east, and Somerset House on the west. This site would, it is true, have afforded an area as large as the Parliamentary site already acquired, but the cost would have been enormous. To provide chambers for barristers and solicitors in the immediate neighbourhood, Sir Charles Trevelyan, the promoter of this scheme, proposed to remove the Government offices from Somerset House, and to convert the latter into a new Lincoln's-inn, while Gray's-inn was to be removed to the site already cleared in Carey-street. He also proposed that the site of Gray's-inn should be devoted to buildings for the working classes, and in fact suggested a complete bouleversement of these several districts of the metropolis. It may be said, without exaggeration, to have been one of the most chimerical and impracticable projects ever seriously propounded.

In April last Mr. Gregory, the member for Galway, brought this scheme before the House of Commons. It was strongly opposed by Sir Roundell Palmer, Mr. Denman, the Right Hon. Mr. Cowper, Lord John Manners, and others on both sides of the House. Before the close of the debate an entirely fresh aspect was given to the question by a statement, made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, as to the course which the Government was about to pursue, viz., to set aside both schemes; Sir Charles Trevelyan's as well as that of the Royal Commission, which last had received the sanction of all his predecessors in office, as well Liberals as Conservatives. Mr. Lowe then informed the House that on entering on his duties as Chancellor of the Exchequer he found the first estimate of 1,500,000*l.* for the Carey-street site, and the buildings to be erected thereon, increased to a sum of more than twice that amount through additions made to the original scheme (a new Bill for which had been prepared by the Treasury). Moreover, this increased estimate did not provide for approaches, which in his opinion would be necessary. He accordingly declared it to be the intention of the Government to abandon the Carey-street site, in favour of one of six acres between Howard-street and the Embankment, covering a portion only of the area proposed as a site by Sir Charles Trevelyan.

On the 10th May last, Mr. Layard, the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Board of Works, brought in a Bill for the purpose of carrying Mr. Lowe's proposal into effect. He argued the question mainly on the ground of economy, stating that the new site could be purchased for 600,000*l.*; that the approaches to that site were all ready made, and that the Carey-street site could be re-sold without loss, and perhaps to advantage, if time were taken. Believing that these assertions would not be justified by experience, and that the contemplated change would be as injurious to the public as to the Profession, the council felt it their duty to offer to the proposal all the opposition in their power.

With this view they have from time to time waited on the Lord Chancellor, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and other influential members of both Houses of Parliament, and urged the superiority of the Carey-street site, carefully avoiding the treatment of the matter as a party question. They have also circulated repeated statements of the grounds of this superiority, and a plan showing the relative positions of the two sites, with reference to the offices and chambers of barristers and solicitors, north and south of the Strand. They have also placed themselves in communication with the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and the various provincial Law Societies throughout the country, urging the immense importance of the question to the public and the Profession generally, and suggesting the desirability of petitions to Parliament. These appeals from the council have been promptly and cordially responded to.

Putting out of sight the question of convenience, it is perfectly clear that a building of six acres need cost no more on the site already cleared than on the new one now proposed. It follows, therefore, that the question of expense is one which turns very much on the probable cost of the new site, and the loss to be apprehended on a re-sale of the old one. The council felt it right to obtain an opinion from Mr. Pownall on these points. In Mr. Pownall's judgment the Government have underestimated the cost of the Howard-street site by upwards of 200,000*l.*; while there will, he believes, be a loss of nearly 400,000*l.* on the re-sale of the Carey-street site.

The opposition with which Mr. Layard's scheme has been met has induced the Government to have the question of the two respective sites referred to a select committee.

The council will take care that adequate and impartial evidence is laid before it; and they confidently expect that the investigation will lead finally to the adoption of the original scheme, on the site so long decided on, superior, as it undoubtedly is to all others, for the speedy and convenient transaction of the law business of the whole country.

The council feel it right to allude to a deputation of certain City and West-end solicitors, who waited on Mr. Lowe on Friday the 18th June last, for the purpose of urging the view opposed to that which this society has always taken, and by whom it was alleged that the council did not represent, and had no authority to speak in the name of, this society. It is hardly necessary to remind the members that the concentration of the new law courts on the Carey-street site has been the end for which the society has worked for upwards of nine years. The object has been dwelt upon again and again in the annual reports of its council, while it has been discussed and approved of time after time at its annual meetings, and no single voice was ever raised amongst its members in favour of any other scheme, either before or after the rival project was broached, until within the last three months. It is to be expected that a few individuals may take a view opposed to that of the bulk of the Profession, but this does not justify the assertion that the council does not faithfully represent the society by which it is elected, and to which it is responsible. The council have satisfaction in referring on this point to the petition from solicitors of the metropolis in favour of the Carey-street site just presented to the House of Commons, to which 1281 signatures have been obtained. These signatures, which include firms, represent 1661 individual solicitors.

The following is an analysis of the signatures:—

	No. of Signatures.

Eastern District, including all London east of Farringdon-street	472
Central District, including all London between the lines of Wellington-street and Farringdon-street	635
Total	1281

It was thought desirable not to postpone the presentation of the petition, but another is in circulation, which will be presented at a future time.

The Judicature Commission.

The course taken by the council, on the appointment of the commission in the autumn of 1867, is very fully stated in their last report; and the members were then informed that a series of resolutions passed by an associated committee of this society, and of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, as the result of their deliberations up to that time, had been forwarded to the royal commissioners.

These resolutions were set out in the same report.

With a view of assisting the royal commissioners in framing recommendations to secure uniformity in the procedure and practice of the several courts, the associated committee instructed Mr. E. C. Dunn, of the Equity Bar, one of the editors of Daniell's Chancery Practice, to prepare a statement of the various systems of procedure in the English courts of Chancery, Common Law, Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty; and, in addition, a summary of some of the important points of contrast in the procedure of the above courts, and also the English County Courts, and the Indian High Court. In the preparation of these papers, some valuable assistance was obtained from Mr. John Pitt Taylor, Judge of the County Courts of Lambeth, Greenwich, and Woolwich; Mr. J. Marshall, of Edinburgh, Advocate, of the Scotch Bar; Dr. Ferguson, of Dublin, of the Irish Bar; Mr. R. T. Lattey, lately practising as a solicitor at Calcutta; and Mr. J. W. Hawkins, one of the chief clerks of the Master of the Rolls.

In the preparation of these documents the leading idea was that, while the abstract laws respecting the rights of property might differ in many respects, the methods to be adopted to enforce those rights ought to be nearly the same, and that, therefore, the procedure of the several courts ought to be assimilated as much as possible.

Assimilation of procedure is not merely a question of form; in many cases it is essential for the purposes of justice; for instance, if the ends of

do not require the evidence in chief to be before the hearing of the cause, the practice of the Court of Chancery requiring disclosure unjust. The same remark also applies to her instances in which the procedures of the courts conflict.

In the course of their deliberations, it also appears to the associated committee, that any system of jurisdiction enabling each court to administer justice completely in all cases, without reference to any other court, could not be justly without great assimilation of procedure. Illustration of the inconvenience arising from the present system of divided jurisdiction, as mentioned, the expense and vexation caused by the present practice of resorting to one court for the purpose of making a restraining order upon another court; or for the purposes of the proceedings in another court; as, for instance, to obtain discovery, or a receiver of the life.

respect to the means to be adopted to carry above principles of assimilation of procedure to completeness of jurisdiction, the associated committee considered that any plan proposed be based upon experience, and that, to ascertain the best system available, it is necessary to consider, in detail, the different of procedure now followed in various Courts throughout the empire.

On this principle, the associated committee examined some of the most important of systems and their variations; from which it is found that through them might be traced the general principles prevailing in all courts, and it would be useful to classify and compare points of contrast.

A statement and summary referred to exclusively to those proceedings which are available, they were necessarily imperfect, and refer to many other important proceedings often incidental to a cause; such as in applications (whether by petition, summons, or motion, and whether, in the latter case, motion should be immediately for a rule absolute), orders of assessment for damages, discovery and production of documents, paying in and out of costs, &c.; to enter into a full discussion of the associated committee did not consider it necessary. The statement and summary are considered only as specimens of the work which, in the opinion of the committee, should be exhaustively performed before the issue of one general system of procedure is decided.

It is also to the associated committee that the report proposed by them might be valuable, in preparing the way for a general system of procedure throughout the country, comprising the British Empire.

The committee also thought it useful to add to the report several suggestions as to the points without pledging themselves to an expression of opinion in their favour.

The statement and summary were forwarded to the commissioners, and the council find from the report of that body (a) that a great many of the amendments of the associated committee are adopted by the commissioners.

Land Transfer Commission.—In the last year a royal commission was issued, inquiring into the condition of the registry of deeds for the County of Middlesex, and with regard to the operation of the system of registration established by Lord Westbury's Act; (b) also, as to whether that system required to be altered or improved, so as to facilitate the transfer of title to and the conveyance of real estate with an indefeasible title, to purchasers; and whether any alteration or improvement ought to be made in the constitution of the tribunal established by Lord Westbury's Act.

The commission was also directed to make certain inquiries with respect to the registry of deeds for the County of Middlesex.

In 1868, the commissioners issued a series of questions, copies of which were forwarded to the council with a request that they would assist the commissioners in forming a judgment as to the mode of promoting the efficiency of the land registry.

Questions seemed to the council to be of the greatest importance, inasmuch as they involved the whole principle of the system; one upon which this society publicly expressed their opinion during the progress of the Bill in Parliament of Lord Westbury's Act of 1862, upon which the present system of registration is founded. When this measure was in the House of Commons, the society expressed great pains in the preparation of a memorial, with a view to procure the insertion of amendments in the Bill, of such amendments as would give effect to the recommendations of this report has been forwarded by the society to each member of the society.

& 26 Vict. c. 53.

of the registration commissioners in their report of 1857, by establishing a registration of titles to land.

The society pointed out, in their petition, certain defects in the system then proposed; which defects the council understand, from the individual experience of several of their members, have since been found to exist in working that system, and have contributed to render the registration established by the Act of 1862 practically useless.

The principal objections to the Bill urged by the society in their petition were:

The litigation and expense in which it would probably involve landowners.

The impossibility of complying with some of its most important requirements.

Its contravention of some of the well-known and long-established rules of law relating to landed property.

The probability that, if passed into a law, it would, as regards the registration of at least nine-tenths of the land of England, be a mere dead letter.

The probability that, as regards the other tenth part, it would utterly fail to fulfil the promise of its preamble, in giving certainty to a title, facilitating the proof thereof, and rendering the dealing with land more simple and economical.

The society also referred, in their petition, to the expense which the present system was likely to create, and they believe, from inquiries they have made, that their forebodings upon this subject have been realised. The requirements of the Act of 1862, with regard to the establishment of the boundaries of the land proposed to be dealt with, are found to open questions involving the rights of adjoining owners which have been allowed to rest, and litigation is the inevitable consequence. The registrar has the right, and perhaps feels himself bound, to ask questions which give rise to expensive searches and inquiries upon matters which, in the case of ordinary sales, would probably be left untouched, or arranged between the parties. In a complicated title some insurmountable difficulty is very likely to be raised to the completion of the registration, even after great expense and delay has already been incurred.

No doubt the expense, delay, and difficulty of registration, to a great extent, may be accounted for by the absence of conditions of sale. In the great majority of ordinary sales the title is guarded by the conditions.

It cannot be said that the difference in expense involved in registration is compensated, in the majority of cases, by the acquisition of an indefeasible title, but where the estate is to be divided into building lots, the acquisition of such a title, even at the expense of delay and increased cost, may be found advantageous.

It is also very doubtful whether land transferred by registered title commands a better price than that transferred by the ordinary process.

After registration is once effected with an indefeasible title, and before the title has become encumbered by the registration of any subsequent dealing with the land by way of charges on it, or otherwise, a transfer would doubtless be less expensive.

The sale of a building estate, in lots, is perhaps the only case in which the costs would be materially lessened; but the registration of dealings subsequent to the first registration might operate to prevent any material diminution.

As a rule, solicitors would hardly recommend their clients to register, unless the land was required for building purposes. Of course, the advice to be given must depend on the nature of the land, and circumstances of the title; for instance, in a large estate extending over some ten or twelve miles, registry would be almost impracticable, from the number of notices to be given, and imprudent from the danger of questions as to boundary or otherwise. The question of boundary must be raised, and if any of the parties interested object, extensive litigation is opened and vast expense incurred upon small points, most of which are of no material benefit to anybody.

On the other hand, in the case of advowsons where the title is short and clear, and no expense for surveying is required, registration may be beneficial.

Several cases have occurred in which the perambulation has brought to light dormant claims as to rights of way and boundaries, and it cannot therefore be desirable to notice rights which are seldom specifically described in title-deeds.

Whether registration should be recommended if the title required were what is commonly understood by a good title, and not a strictly marketable one, would very much depend on the state of the title, as the defects, it is assumed, would appear on the register. If the defects were of such a nature as could be removed in course of time, a solicitor might be disposed to advise registration, but even then the probability of involving the owner in expense and delay has a deterrent effect to his offering such advice.

In ordinary dealings with land, where the exact boundaries cannot be ascertained from the title-deeds, the purchaser is usually satisfied if he can be furnished with evidence which raises a strong presumption that the lands, the subject of the purchase, and of which the vendor, or his tenant, is in possession, are the lands in respect of which a title has been shown.

There is no doubt that solicitors are deterred from registering by the prospect of having to register all the subsequent dealings with the land.

There is no doubt also that purchasers are usually content with less than a sixty years' title.

In the majority of dealings with land the title is guarded by special conditions, and it is not found that, in small matters, purchasers hesitate to bid at sales on account of stringent conditions. In cases of greater magnitude, purchasers are usually advised beforehand; and where the solicitors and auctioneers employed are men of high character, the public relies on them, and pays less attention to the conditions, which are seldom read or understood.

There is a wide difference in the case of mortgagees. The title is submitted to the mortgagee and investigated by him without the imposition of any conditions of a restrictive character, and the nature of the transaction is such as to require a stringent inquiry into the state of the title before the mortgagee can be advised to accept it. This observation has greater force in those cases in which the lenders are trustees; a circumstance which applies to a very large proportion of mortgage transactions of any magnitude in this country.

It is believed that the cases in which a purchaser loses his property, or suffers any loss from a concealed incumbrance or liability on account only of the shortness of title which he had taken, are very rare.

In numerous cases short titles are accepted where it is known that they have been subjected to the investigation of conveyancers, or solicitors of undoubted repute.

The council are satisfied that the working of Lord Westbury's Act has not been impeded by solicitors, as a system opposed to their interests. The sole cause of the failure of the system must be sought in the various objections, both in principle and detail, by which it is surrounded, and the feeling that it is not to the interest of the client to adopt a system involving certain expense, and possibly leading, by the disclosure of defects of title, or damaging circumstances, to litigation between neighbouring owners which, once commenced, might be interminable.

The council embodied these observations in a paper which they submitted to the commissioners.

It should also be mentioned that prints of the questions issued by the royal commissioners were sent by the council to upwards of ninety firms in London and the country, largely engaged in conveyancing practice, in compliance with what was understood to be the wish of the royal commissioners, to have the advantage of the individual experience of members of the Profession.

LEGAL NEWS.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The will, or Scotch confirmation of the late Right Hon. James Carr-Boyle, Earl of Glasgow, was sealed in the principal registry of Her Majesty's Court of Probate in London on June 12, the personal estate being sworn under 170,000l. The real estates pass to the late earl's only sister, Lady Augusta Fitzclarence. The late earl was the oldest member of the Jockey Club, and has bequeathed to Mr. George Payne 25,000l., in addition to one-half of the horses in training, leaving the other portion to General Peel. He bequeaths to the Hon. James Macdonald 8000l.; to the Hon. Colonel H. Forester, 5000l.; to Mr. Cunningham, who had charge of his stud paddocks at Doncaster, 500l., and he also leaves him the stallion Tom Bowline; and to Mr. Aldcroft, he leaves by codicil, made only two days before his Lordship's death, a legacy of 500l.—The will of the Hon. Caroline Elizabeth St. John was proved in London under 12,000l.; that of the Hon. Matilda Sophia Austen, eldest daughter of the late Hon. W. Cockayne, niece of the last Viscount Cullen, and relict of the late Rev. R. Caister, D.D., was proved in Ireland under 3000l.; and that of Dame Harriet Nicholls, of London, under 6000l.—The will of Mr. Adam Spielmann, late of Hereford House, West Brompton, was proved in London, on June 4th, under 100,000l. personalty in England.—

MARAVILLA COCOA FOR BREAKFAST.—The cocoa (or cacao) of Maravilla is the true Theobroma of Linnaeus.—The Globe says: "Taylor Brothers' Maravilla Cocoa has achieved a thorough success, and supersedes every other cocoa in the market. For homeopaths and invalids we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage." Sold, in packets only, by all grocers.

any right on the common which would prevent the lord from enclosing would be absurd. The rights of freeholders are doubtful and limited, whilst commoners are few. However, we shall be pleased to see the case fought out, but we trust that the parties will be better advised than to go into a court of equity, from which the Hampstead commoners have been so recently relegated to a court of common law.

PROSECUTION FEES.

THE effect of the Treasury Circular was not quite correctly described. It stated that some difficulty had arisen in framing the accounts consequent upon the fees to counsel being returned in a lump sum, and its instructions were, that when the amount exceeded a guinea, particulars of the excess and the reasons for it should be stated, mainly that it might be known if more than one counsel had been engaged, though it is probable that this precaution contemplated also some check upon the amount of each fee. We understand that the Clerks of Assize have put a liberal interpretation upon it, and have made no alteration in their usual allowances to counsel. This is as it should be.

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

THE Lords Committee has made very few alterations in the Bill as sent from the Commons, and those amendments have been accepted, so the Bill will be law in a few days. Some objections were made to the power of imprisonment by the County Courts, but no formal motion was mentioned; and the Imprisonment for Debt Bill is also secured. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL carries off the honours of the Session next after his leader. He has done what so many of his predecessors had attempted, but failed to do. Experience alone can prove if the novel system now to be introduced will suffice to secure better dividends and deter debtors from cheating their creditors. All bankruptcy law having failed hitherto, it is impossible to feel confident as to the working of this one. A law that has so long baffled lawyers and statesmen, and which no change appears to mend, almost points to the conclusion that it is fundamentally wrong, and that the subject-matter of it is not within the proper province of jurisprudence. We shall watch with much interest the operations of this latest phase of bankruptcy legislation, and keep our readers informed upon the practice under the new law.

THE PLACE OF THE PEERS.

THE settlement of the Irish Church Bill has done one very important service; it has distinctly defined the position which the House of Lords actually occupies in the Constitution. Theoretically the Peers hold co-equal Legislative power and authority with the Commons and the Crown. But, in practice, equality of powers in a State is impossible, for its sole result must be a dead-lock. A dogma with politicians, it has never existed in fact; in the pre-Reform era the Lords really ruled through the Commons, whom they commanded, and as for the Crown, its veto being never used, its strength has been never proved, and if it were now to be exerted by any improbable contingency, it is not difficult to prophesy what would come of it. The recent struggle between the Lords and the Commons has ended as all reflecting men knew from the beginning that it must; the Lords have eloquently and ably stated their objections to the bill, alike to its principles and to its details; but it has submitted gracefully to the will of the country, as constitutionally declared, conceding the principles it detested and somewhat modifying the details. The precedent is as complete and effective for future legislation as if an Act for defining the powers of the House of Lords had been formally passed by both Houses and received the Royal assent. Henceforth the province of the Peers cannot be disputed, even by themselves. The Lords will be ruled by the distinctly expressed will of the country. Their privilege of veto will be distinctly limited to cases in which that opinion is not clear and decided, or where sufficient time has not been given for consideration. Even then it will be merely a suspensive veto—to afford reasonable time and opportunity for ascertaining the public mind. But it is fairly within their province to deliberate upon and modify the details of measures; with the single proviso that they do not thereby indirectly disturb the principles on which they are constructed.

It is much to have this not merely asserted, by political philosophers, but solemnly acknowledged by the peers themselves. It will secure them in their place for many years to come, and relieve them from the imminent danger to which conflict with the Commons would have exposed them.

The entire history of the Irish Church Bill has been of the utmost interest to constitutional lawyers, who have watched its progress with a curious anxiety to witness the practical working of our legislative machinery under the new conditions that have so entirely shifted the balance of power. It was impossible not to feel much alarm lest a reluctance not to recognise those new conditions might bring about a collision in which more than one institution would have been wrecked. That danger has been avoided by the good sense of the Peers. Only they who are accustomed to reflection and who had fully realised to themselves how much was in issue, will fully appreciate the patriotism and the courage that induced Lord GRANVILLE and Lord CAIRNS to meet on that evening which will be ever memorable in the history of England, and to agree upon an arrangement by which the future place of the Peers was practically determined, and probably a revolution averted.

REGISTRATION.

THE Commons Committee has just made a fresh report, recommending divers improvements in the machinery for registration of electors. It is proposed to be entrusted to a union officer, whose business it shall be to make out the lists for every parish, for which purpose he is not to consult the rate-book only, but to make personal inquiries, especially into the claims of lodgers and persons not on the rate-book. Notices of claim and objection are to be sent to him in the first instance, and he is to be allowed a month to investigate them, and then to publish a list of them, stating whether each is approved or disapproved by himself. His decision is not to be binding upon the parties; but it is probable that in the great majority of cases it will be accepted, and thus the hearing at the revision court will be practically limited to cases in which the registering officer is doubtful, or his opinion is disputed. It is further proposed that the revising barristers should be appointed at the spring circuit, and that they should instruct the registrar on any questions of law that may arise. There is, however, an obvious objection to this. The revising barrister will be required to adjudicate on his own "opinions." The cases stated to him by the registrar will be of necessity more or less ex parte. At the hearing there will be new facts and arguments, and he may be required to decide against his former views, a process that might subject him to unpleasant comments, and possibly even bias his judgment. The difficulty might be avoided by the barrister being appointed to advise in a neighbouring division, and not in his own.

Upon the whole the propositions are practical, and a decided improvement upon the present system.

ARREST AND DETENTION OF BANKRUPTS.

WE have recently had occasion to notice the various cases which have been decided upon the question relating to the effect of a certificate of the registration of a creditor's deed in cases of arrest or possession on behalf of a creditor. But in those cases no question arose as to the penalties to be inflicted on the officer who should wrongfully detain a bankrupt. This matter, however, has been investigated in the recent case of Myers v. Veitch, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 848, Q. B., which was decided on the 113th section of the Consolidation Act of 1849, taken with the 198th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. The section of the former Act relates to the detention of a bankrupt after protection by order of the Court of Bankruptcy, and that of the latter Act makes a certificate of the filing and registration of a deed "available to the debtor for all purposes as a protection in bankruptcy."

The facts of the case were these: The plaintiff had executed and duly registered a deed of composition, and received a certificate of the filing and registration of the deed, under the hand of the chief registrar and seal of the court. Afterwards the plaintiff was arrested by a sheriff's officer at the suit of a creditor, and was lodged in Walton gaol. Thereupon he produced to the defendant the certificate of the registration of the deed of composition, and gave him a copy of the same. The defendant did not, however, release him from custody, and the plaintiff consequently sought, under the 113th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, to enforce against him the penalty of 5*l.* for each day that he was detained after he had shown the defendant his certificate. At the trial for this wrongful detention, a verdict was entered for the plaintiff, subject to leave to move to enter a verdict for the defendant or a nonsuit, on the ground that the 113th section imposed a penalty only on the officer who arrested, and not on the gaoler who detained, a bankrupt.

The words of the Consolidation Act say that if a bankrupt after he is arrested shall show his order of protection to the official who arrested him, &c., he shall be discharged, and goes on to make this penal enactment, that "if any officer shall detain any such bankrupt after he shall have shown such protection to him, except for so long as shall be necessary for obtaining a copy of the same, such officer shall forfeit to such bankrupt, for his own use, the sum of five pounds for every day he shall detain such bankrupt, to be recovered by action of debt in any court of record at Westminster, in the name of such bankrupt with full costs of suit."

The decision upon this is important, namely, that the words "any officer" refer only to the arresting officer, and not to a gaoler who carries out his duty in detaining a person committed to his custody. That there was a doubt upon the point is of course clear, because the argument is forcible that the words "any officer" should have a more extended signification than as referring only to the one officer arresting. Mr. Justice Blackburn said, in giving judgment: "It is sought to bring in a double intendment, viz., first that power is given the gaoler to discharge summarily the bankrupt on production of his certificate, and secondly that because he has that power to discharge, the penal portion of the enactment is to be construed as applying to him. This would, I think, be putting a wrong construction on the section. I think the penalty is imposed only on the sheriff's officer who arrests the bankrupt and refuses to discharge him after being shown his certificate; but I do not think that when the bankrupt is once lodged in the gaol the enactment applies any further." The rest of the court agreed, and we have therefore a decision which will prove very useful until imprisonment for debt is abolished.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

V.—RECORDERS' DEPUTIES.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 23.)

RECORDERS are empowered by the Municipal Act to appoint deputies in case of unavoidable absence; but this power does not extend to their presidency in local courts by virtue of their office.

This statute is designed to remove that defect, and it provides that in every borough in which, by charter or otherwise, there is a Court of Record for the trial of civil actions, of which the Recorder is the Judge, he may, in case of sickness or unavoidable absence, appoint a barrister of not less than five years' standing to be his deputy at the court then next to be held; and the Recorder is forthwith to send to the Secretary of State a statement of the reason why such appointment has become necessary.

VI.—NEWSPAPERS, PRINTERS, AND READING ROOMS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 24.)

The purpose of this Act is to repeal a large number of the regulations that were supposed to affect inconveniently the publishers of newspapers, printers, and the keepers of reading rooms. It came into operation on July 12.

It effects its object in a perfectly novel fashion. It repeals divers Acts named in the first schedule except as to certain parts of them set out in the second schedule. This is a very convenient arrangement, for thus we have all the existing law practically re-enacted, and so are enabled at once to see what remains of the original statutes without the trouble of comparing them with the existing Act, and cutting out the repealed portions.

We gather from the sections here set out that newspapers and printing offices are no longer required to be registered. But printers must keep a copy of every paper they print, and write thereon the name and abode of their employer. Discovery of the proprietors, printers, and publishers of newspapers may be enforced by bill for the purpose of any action for libel. The penalty is continued upon printers for not printing their name and residence on every paper or book, and on persons publishing the same.

THE POLICE AND THE PUBLIC.

IN the Haymarket, at twelve o'clock at night three young men were arrested by the police for making a disturbance in the street. Three policemen swore positively that the youths were very disorderly. They protested that they were quite sober; that they had stopped merely to call a cab, and that they were perfectly quiet and orderly; and they called witnesses to prove that they had just left a bank in which they were clerks, and where they had been detained at work. Mr. KNOX dismissed the case, said he did not believe the policemen, and added that the youths left the court without reproach.

Questioned upon it in the House of Commons, Mr. BRUCE said that the Chief Commissioner has inquired into the circumstances; that the policemen implicated had been long in the service, were held in high esteem, and had been placed at the troublesome post of the Haymarket as being specially fitted by temper and experience for the peculiar duties of such a district. He added, that the proper course would be for the defendants to indict them for perjury, and then the question whether they or the defendants had told the truth would be tried by a competent authority.

Undoubtedly the probabilities are in favour of the policemen's story. It is, to say the least of it, extremely improbable that policemen of good character and long experience should wantonly accuse three young men quietly calling a cab of creating a disturbance. What possible motive could have induced such a causeless complaint? And even if they had been mistaken, peaceable young men would not have made a row with them. On the other hand, the defendants had the strongest motives for contradiction, their situations being at stake, and each being naturally eager to exculpate the other. It may be that the police do sometimes support each other's evidence by hard swearing, and this might have been the motive for their agreement in the narrative of the transaction; but when there are equal motives for error on both sides, the judge and the public must, in the absence of independent witnesses, look at the probabilities of the case, and here, we must say, they are all in favour of credit being given to the policemen, whose previously good character is, to a large extent, not merely a guarantee that they were telling the truth, but making it extremely improbable that such officers, wholly without provocation or cause of offence, should have attacked three well-conducted young gentlemen walking quietly down the Haymarket, and taken them into custody for no offence whatever.

GUARANTEES.

NOTWITHSTANDING all the litigation which has taken place with reference to guarantees, they are probably just in as unsatisfactory a condition as ever they were. As remarked by Chief Justice Bovill, in Chalmers v. Victors, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 481, C. P.: "It is extremely difficult to reconcile the cases which have been decided concerning continuing guarantees." But although there is no principle to guide us, it may be useful to examine the facts of a few of the more recent cases.

The above case of Chalmers v. Victors was one in which the question of continuing guarantees was very much discussed. There the guarantee was as follows: "Isaac Victors hereby engages to be responsible for liabilities incurred by Messrs. Mendoza and Vogel to the extent of 50*l.* to Messrs. Andrew Chalmers and Co." It bore date the 29th Jan. 1867. For the plaintiff it was argued that this was a continuing guarantee, Wood v. Priestner, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 317, being cited in support. We will compare the two cases. In Wood v. Priestner, the guarantee was as follows: "In consideration of the credit given by Messrs. The Hindley Green Coal Company to my son, Mr. James Priestner, for coal supplied by them to him, I hereby hold myself as a guarantee to them for the sum of 100*l.*, and in default of his non-payment of any accounts due, I bind myself by this note to pay to the Hindley Green Coal Company whatever may be owing to an amount not exceeding the sum of 100*l.*" This was considered by Mr. Baron Martin by no means a clear case in favour of the continuing nature of the guarantee, but his Lordship concurred in so holding, and this judgment was affirmed by a full court of appeal. Much turned in both courts on the expression used "credit given." In the court below Chief Baron Kelly said, "If this had been a guarantee the consideration for which was to be the credit which had been already actually given, or if it had been intended to be confined to the amount for which the credit had been given, and it had been the real consideration that the plaintiffs should forbear to sue for that amount one would suppose that instead of expressing it 'in consideration of the credit given,' it would have been 'in consideration of time given to my son for payment of the amount which is due from him' (and the time being specified), 'I undertake to guarantee the amount so due.'" So in the Exchequer Chamber Mr. Justice Willes said (L. Rep. 2 Ex. 283), "This guarantee was given in favour of the defendant's son, a person who had previously had a monthly credit given to him by the plaintiffs. He was desirous of having that credit given again, and accordingly obtained this guarantee. It commences with the words, 'In consideration of the credit given by Messrs. the Hindley Green Coal Company to my son,' and these words appear applicable to the same credit already given, continued. At the outset, then, the guarantee refers to a credit given and continued."

The further question arises on the statement of the account. As noticed by Chief Baron Kelly, the guarantee in Wood v. Priestner used these words, "I hereby hold myself responsible as a guarantee to them for the sum of 100*l.*, and in default of his non-payment of any account due I bind myself to pay . . . whatever may be owing, to an amount not exceeding the sum of 100*l.*" His Lordship held the natural meaning of these words to be, "I guarantee payment to the extent of 100*l.*" Mr. Justice Willes, in the court of error, refers to the expression, "in default of non-payment of any accounts due"—an expression, he observed, which might be limited to any accounts then due, but which seemed rather to refer to anything which might be due on the current account between the parties. And he followed these remarks by referring to the passage dealt with by Chief Baron Kelly. "The guarantee," said his Lordship, "then binds the defendant to pay whatever may be owing; words which again might possibly be applied to whatever might be owing upon accounts between the parties being struck. They seem to us, however, to apply rather to a future state of things. Under these circumstances, the natural construction appears to be that the surety should be answerable for whatever might become due on the accounts to the extent of 100*l.*"

Turning back to Chalmers v. Victors, we find the very greatest weight given to surrounding circumstances, so much so indeed that they were taken as overriding the more natural construction of the instrument. Chief Justice Bovill said, that "reading the document in its ordinary sense, it seems to apply to a past consideration." Subsequently he says, "We find that Messrs. Mendoza and Vogel were indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of 41*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*; now the guarantee was for 50*l.*; that is, therefore, a circumstance calculated to raise a probability of the defendant's intention to cover something beyond the then existing liability." And Mr. Justice Byles said, that although it had been justly remarked in the argument that there was nothing to show that the defendant knew the state of the accounts between the plaintiffs and their debtors, yet upon the facts and the ambiguous terms of the undertaking, it was open to either party to show what were the surrounding circumstances.

Another illustration of the difficulties attaching to this question is afforded by the case of Lewis, P. O. of the Union Bank v. Scholefield, at p. 585 of the current volume of our reports. There the guarantee ran thus:—"In con-agreeing to advance, and advancing to the firm of Russell and Co., any sum or sums of money they may require during the next eighteen months, not exceeding in the whole the sum of 1000*l.*, we hereby jointly and severally guarantee the payment of any such sum that may be owing to the said bank at the expiration of the said period of eighteen months, and undertake to pay the same on demand in the event of the said firm of Messrs. Russell and Co. making default in the payment of the same."

It was argued for the defendant that there was no case in which a construction had been put upon a document worded in this way, and that in the strict grammatical sense it was a guarantee for the amount due at the end of eighteen months, provided that the bank advanced no more than 1000*l.* in that time. But Mr. Justice Byles said that it was necessary to look at the relative positions of the parties, and this he did in the following way:—"It is plain," he said, "that the party guaranteed contemplated the opening of a bank account for eighteen months, and comparing the terms of this document with those of others which have been decided by the authorities, I think this is clearly a continuing guarantee for each successive balance during the lapse of the time mentioned. There is, however, this difficulty; in reading the first part in the strict grammatical sense the intention of Messrs. Russell and Co. is entirely nullified; for a person purposing to pay into and draw out of a bank would not be likely to limit the amount of his transactions on either side to the amount of the balance guaranteed. And reading the first part in conjunction with the latter part, the sum of 1000*l.* seems to be mentioned in the wrong place if the purpose intended be to limit the amount of the guarantors' liability to that sum. This, however, must be the purpose intended, and the true construction of the document is that the persons signing the guarantee made themselves liable for 1000*l.* of Messrs. Russell's debt to the bank, whatever it might be at the end of the eighteen months." This may be important as a precedent in cases of guarantees to bankers.

In all cases of this nature the ruling of Baron Bayley in Nicholson v. Paget, 1 C. & M. 48, has been approvingly recognised. "Now this," he said, "is a contract of guarantee, which is a contract of a peculiar description; for it is not a contract which a party is entering into for the payment of his own debt, or on his own behalf, but it is a contract which he is entering into for a third person; and we think it is the duty of the party who takes such a security to see that it is couched in such words that the party so giving it may distinctly understand to what extent he is binding himself." This is a sound doctrine beyond a doubt, but then we come to the question what is to be considered a binding security, and the cases we have cited show that it is not a question which can be easily answered by persons untrained to weighing the meaning of words. Consequently we assume that where guarantees are drawn without the aid of lawyers, they will continue to be a source of litigation.

OBSCENE PUBLICATIONS.

A SINGULAR application has been made to Mr. FLOWERS, at Bow-street, by the Society for the Suppression of Vice.

The following report sufficiently explains the facts:

Mr. Collette, solicitor to the Society for the Suppression of Vice, attended before Mr. Flowers to apply for an order for the destruction of two obscene paintings, and Mr. George Lewis, of the firm of Lewis and Lewis, of Ely-place, appeared on the part of the owner of the pictures to resist the application. Mr. Collette said that on the 10th May a warrant was granted under Lord Campbell's Act against Sydney Powell, occupying a shop in Chandos-street, Covent-garden, upon whose premises were seized a quantity of indecent photographs, prints, &c., and the two obscene pictures now in question. Before the seizure the police had an interview with Powell, and an offer was made of 100 guineas for the two pictures, which he refused. The next day the police went again, and Powell said the price was 150 guineas, but this time the warrant was produced, and they and the other articles already referred to were seized. The case was sent for trial, and again taken up by the Society for the Suppression of Vice. It came before the Assistant Judge, and upon being opened by Mr. Bland, for the prosecution, the prisoner Powell pleaded "Guilty" to having sold or offered for sale the small pictures, but not to having exposed for sale the large paintings. Upon that the case as to the large paintings was not gone into, but with reference to the others he was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment. Mr. Poland then applied for leave to destroy these paintings, but the Judge said that as the case with reference to them did not come before him, he had no legal knowledge of them, and could not give any order. He now contended that as the man Powell had not actually been tried upon any charge arising out of these two paintings, and as the Judge had declared that he had no power to deal with them, the case stood with reference to them in the same position as when the case was first before the court. By Lord Campbell's Act the magistrate had power to order pictures of an obscene nature to be destroyed. A gentleman, who was alleged to be the owner, was now present; but it appeared to him that the magistrate could have no difficulty in deciding that the paintings were obscene, and he should therefore apply for the order for their destruction. Mr. Lewis said the two pictures in question were painted by Bouchet, a French artist of the highest eminence. They were not more indecent than many other magnificent works of art preserved in our national collections. They were old paintings, valued at 200 guineas, and he trusted the magistrate would pause before ordering them to be destroyed. The owner was a gentleman of high social position, who would not have allowed them to be used for any improper purpose. He was present, but there was no necessity to mention his name, which, he believed, Mr. Collette did not desire to force into publicity. Mr. Collette said he had no proof before him as to that gentleman being the owner of the paintings. Mr. Lewis said that when Powell was apprehended he did not pretend that he had any authority to sell these paintings; but said they were entrusted to him to clean and re-frame, which, indeed was the truth. Upon hearing that the defendant had been making a bad use of these pictures the owner had instructed him to attend at this court and give every facility to the prosecutor. Mr. Lewis said he had never made any secret as to who was the owner of the painting. He remarked that all the charges were included in one indictment, and all to which the defendant did not plead guilty fell to the ground, which was tantamount to an acquittal on those counts. Mr. Flowers said that however old the paintings might be, and however excellent they might to some persons appear as works of art, it seemed to him that the details which most offended against decency formed no part of the original paintings, but had been recently added. However, he could not see that he had any power in the case, and he must decline to make any order either for the destruction or surrender of the paintings.

Two questions are involved in this. Does Lord CAMPBELL'S Act extend to works of art? Does it apply to works not publicly sold or exhibited?

It does not appear to have been denied that the pictures in question were the production of a famous French artist, and valued and valuable as works of art, and they were proved to be the property of a private gentleman, who had sent them to be cleaned, and not that of a vendor of obscene publications. The law empowers the court to order the destruction of any obscene works brought under its cognisance. Here one point was, whether the pictures in question were within the cognisance of the court, they not being the subject-matter of the particular charge. It can scarcely be doubted that they were not before the court in the manner designed by the statute. But, however this may be, the second question is far more important. Does the Act extend to works of art designed as art, and not produced for obscene purposes? If every erotic picture is within the statute, no place and no person would be safe. The police should make a raid on the National Gallery; nor should the Royal Academy be spared, for certainly the naked Hero hailing Leander from the watchtower would be in execution be within the statute, and could only plead in defence that it was a work of art, and that art sanctions the nude. The boundary line between obscenity and erotic art is very difficult to draw, and perhaps the safest rule would be to look at the intention. This may be gathered from the character of the artist and the style of the work. The same subject in different hands might be perfectly pure or offensively obscene, and from the manner of the artist a fair judgment might be formed of his intent. We are glad Mr. FLOWERS refused the order in this case, for the precedent would be fraught with danger. There are few magistrates to whom such a power could be safely entrusted.

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES FROM 1860 TO 1864.

Edited by F. O. CAUMER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ABANDONING SHIP (CREW).

1. Dissolution of agreement with crew—Abandoning ship at sea—Dismissal by master—Duty to stay by and assist at salvage.—A contract with seamen may be dissolved either by abandonment of the vessel or by the master dismissing the crew from his employment if he thinks fit, and there are in his judgment reasons for so doing. Where it is improbable that the ship can ever be rescued it is still the duty of the crew to stay by her when ashore, and assist in saving as much as possible of the ship and cargo, and the dissolution of a contract in such a case will be viewed with suspicion by the court: (The Florence, 16 Jur. 576; and The Neptune, 1 Hagg. 236 followed.) Reward for salvage services rendered by crew in saving cargo, the master having given them their discharge: (The Warrior, A. C. March 11, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 204; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 133; 4 Law Dig. N. S. 813. See Digest of Maritime Law Cases 1837 to 1860, No. 1.)

1. Damage by foreign ship—Arrest—Release.—If defendants give an absolute appearance to an action, they cannot afterwards be allowed to take a mere formal objection to the jurisdiction. The plaintiffs, relying upon the absolute appearance, had allowed the ship to be released on bail.

Damage was done by a foreign ship to a barge in the river Thames. The court held that it had jurisdiction in such a case by virtue of the 527th and following sections of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854: (The Bilbao, A. C. Nov. 3, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 5; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 338.)

2. Prize proceedings—Capture after cessation of war—Delay of six years in bringing action—Monition—Case relative to damages for improper detention of cargo during war.—The court has jurisdiction to entertain prize proceedings, though the suit be instituted after the war has ceased. The court has sometimes had to adjudicate upon cases where the capture itself took place after the cessation of war. The form of monition in such a case should be a monition to proceed to adjudication. Application to proceed to adjudication after the lapse of six years refused: (The Katharina, A. C. Nov. 8, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 9; 30 L. J. 21; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 597.)

3. Wages of seamen—Special agreement—Claim of master for wages, board, and pilotage, by customary right—Costs.—The court has not jurisdiction to decree payment of a claim for wages of seamen, &c., founded on customary right or special agreement. A claim was made by the late master of a ship under a special agreement with the owners for wages, board, and pilotage. The claim for wages was entertained, but not that for pilotage and board. No costs given. The Tecumseh, 3 W. Rob. 109, followed by the court: (The Enterprise, A. C. (Ireland), 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 153; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 29.)

4. Special contract with seamen—Wages—Claim of mate for wages and allowance for managing ship's accounts—Merchant Shipping Act, s. 189—24 Vict. c. 10.—Prior to 24 Vict. c. 10 the Admiralty Court had not jurisdiction over a contract differing from the ordinary seamen's contract for wages. Where, therefore, the mate of a ship proceeded for recovery of wages, and also for an allowance for managing the ship's accounts, and superintending disbursements, the case was dismissed, but without costs. Suit opposed by a mortgagee. The wages not amounting to 50l. could not, under the 189th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, be pronounced for. Act 24 Vict. c. 10 about to be passed to remedy this defect in the court's jurisdiction: (The Harriet, A. C. March 21, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 152; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 210.)

5. Admiralty Court Act—Collision—Loss of life—Citation in rem against foreign ship—Bennett v. Moita.—The court has jurisdiction under the Admiralty Court Act 1861, s. 7, in case of collision between foreign and British vessels within three miles of the coast, attended by loss of life or personal injury. Citation in rem issued against an American vessel for compensation in respect of loss of life: (The Borodino, A. C. Nov. 12, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155.)

6. Collision—Damage to barge within the body of a county—15 Rich. 2, c. 3 (Admiralty Court Act) s. 7.—The court has jurisdiction under the Admiralty Court Act 1861, s. 7, in case of damage by sea-going vessel to a barge "within the body of a county." These objectionable words used in the stat. Rich. 2, and which have given rise to continual difficulties do not occur in the Admiralty Court Act, which gives the court the utmost jurisdiction in collision cases: (The Malvina, A. C. April 29, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 218; J. C. P. C., April 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 341; 31 L. J. 113, Adm.; 9 Jur. N. S. 527, P. C.; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 403.)

7. Collision—Damage to vessel towed by steam tug through misconduct of steam tug—The Admiralty Court Act, sect. 7.—A vessel towed by a steam tug was, by the misconduct of the tug, brought into collision with another vessel, and thereby received damage. Having regard to the decision in The Julia, 1 Lush. 224, the court held that the action by the vessel against the tug would lie, irrespective of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, sect. 7: (The Night Watch, A. C. Nov. 4, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 260; 32 L. J. 47; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396.)

8. Collision between English and foreign ships abroad—Admiralty Court Act, s. 7—American law—De Lovio v. Boit.—The court has jurisdiction in case of a collision between English and Irish vessels in the Great North Holland Canal. Construction of 7th section of Admiralty Court Act (24 Vict. c. 10). It is no objection to the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction that there is a remedy at common law. The American courts, which have taken their practice and leading principles from us, have considered the English decisions restricting the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court not binding upon them: (see American case of De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gallison, 470; The Diana, A. C. Nov. 4, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 261; 32 L. J. 57; 9 Jur. N. S. 26; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 397.)

9. Salvage—Agreement—Costs—Sum claimed—Disputes as to amount of salvage—Construction of Merchant Shipping Act, s. 460, and Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, s. 49.—The court has no jurisdiction where the sum claimed does not exceed 200l., and the services were rendered within three miles of the shore of the United Kingdom, or where the property saved does not exceed the value of 1000l. By the words "the sum claimed" is meant the amount asked for before any legal proceedings have been commenced. The jurisdiction of justices under the Act of 1862, where the amount does not exceed 1000l., excludes the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty: (The William and John, A. C. Feb. 17 and 24, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 311; 9 Jur. N. S. 284; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 56.)

10. Disbursements—Claim of master in respect of his liability for wages of crew and necessities—Admiralty Court Act, s. 10.—The court has not jurisdiction to entertain a claim by a master in respect of his liability for wages due to the crew and for necessities, such matters not being within the meaning of the term "disbursements" in sect. 10 of the Admiralty Court Act 1861. The master has his remedy by personal action against the shipowner: (The Chieftain, A. C. March 3, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 327; 32 L. J. 106; 9 Jur. N. S. 398; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 120.)

11. Necessaries supplied to foreign ship at foreign port—Question between bottomry bondholders and claimants for necessities.—The court has not jurisdiction under the 4th and 5th sections of the Admiralty Court Act 1861 over a claim for necessities supplied or repairs done to a foreign ship in a foreign port. Advance by Lloyds' Association to defray expenses of repairs and supplies at a foreign port not considered necessities within the meaning of the Act 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. The ship had been sold at the instance of a bottomry bondholder, and the proceeds brought into the registry: (The India, A. C. March 28, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 390; 32 L. J. 185; 9 Jur. N. S. 417.)

11a. Ship grounding through misconduct of steam tug towing her.—Neither by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, nor by the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7), has the court jurisdiction in suit by owners of ship against a steam-tug which towed her for damage done to the ship by getting aground through the misconduct of the steam-tug. The expressions in the respective Acts, "damage received by any ship," and "damage done by a ship," refer to damage which is the result of collision with another vessel: (The Robert Peck, A. C. July 14 and 21, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 36; 32 L. J. 164; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237.)

12. Salvage—Valuation of ship—Costs—Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1862, s. 50. Damages—Mala fides or gross negligence on part of salvors.—Salvors having proceeded against a ship before the Admiralty Court, and arrested the ship without having previously had a valuation of her made in accordance with the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1862, sect. 50, and subsequently on affidavits that her value was not 1000l., having released the ship, costs were given by the court. But in accordance with the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of the Evangelismos, 12 Moore, P. C. C. 352, the court held that it ought not to give damages at instance of the salvors unless there had been mala fides or gross negligence. Cases decided by counsel or commented on by the court: Tenniscooke v. Pattison, 3 C. B. 245; and Lewford Partridge, 1 H. & N. 622: (The Kate, A. C. Jan. 26 and Feb. 2, 1864; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 9; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 782.)

1. Bottomry—Agency commission, and action on advance—Scrutiny of accounts.—It is practice of the court in making a decree in favor of a bottomry bond, not to scrutinize too closely the accounts, but to take care to exclude anything which cannot be sustained by evidence either reasonable custom or agreement. A check of 90l. for agency commission, at 4 per cent. value of ship and cargo of linseed, and for commission on advance at Elaineore, was reduced the court to 50l.: (The Fortuna, A. C. Ireland, 1861, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 123; 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 840.)

2. Wages of master—Set-off—Owner's share salvage received by master.—All objections should be stated in schedule of deductions claimed by registrar and merchants. In an action by a master to recover his wages, a part of his claim was ten days' double pay. This was objected to as illegal, but did not appear in the schedule of deductions, nor was the point taken before Registrar. It was held that it was irregular bringing the matter before the court, but having regard to the fact that the question was one likely to arise constantly, the court considered, determined it. See the 10th edit. of Abbott referred to. The Baltimore, 2 Dods. 136, cited by the court: (The Princess Helena, A. C. Jan. 1861, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 108; 30 L. J. 137, Adm.; 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 869.)

3. Pleading—Conflicting decisions of Privy Council and Court of Chancery—Master not communicating with owners before granting bottomry bond.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council being the court of last resort and the court of appeal from the Court of Admiralty, the decisions of the court, when conflicting with the decisions of the Court of Chancery, will be accepted by the Court of Admiralty as authority. This court, therefore followed the rule laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of the Bonaparte, that a master before conditioning to give a bottomry bond should, if possible, correspond with the owners of the cargo, as well as with the owners of the ship and receive instructions from them; and that the lender of money on bottomry, before he enters into any engagement to advance, should be cognizant that such communications have taken place the observations of Lord Cottenham, in Glascott v. Lamy, to the contrary notwithstanding. An objection that the master has not, in accordance with this rule, communicated with the owners of cargo before executing a bond affecting their interests, ought to be put prominently forward in the answer to the petition: (The Olivier, A. C. March 12 & 18, 1862, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 214.)

Salvage—Costs—Tender—Motion after dismissal of defendants.—It is the practice of the court in salvage cases where the tender does not include an offer to pay costs, not to pronounce in favour of the tender. After the dismissal of defendants and their bail, the court refused to grant a motion for the plaintiffs' costs up to the time of the tender: (The Countess of Levin, v. Wille, A. C. June 20, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 34.)

Security for Costs—Wages of foreign master—Consent of consul.—When a foreign seaman sues in the Admiralty Court for his wages, and the consul in this country objects to the proceedings, the court should have immediate notice of that fact, as usually it would not be disposed any longer to entertain the suit. In a suit by a foreign master against the owners of the vessel, upon the application of the defendants he was ordered to give security for costs: (Nyander v. Barnes, 6 Hurl. & N. 509, followed. A. C. Oct. 10, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155.)

Salvage—Derelict—Moiety—English and American custom—Forfeiture or diminution of reward through misconduct or want of skill of salvors.—It is the practice of the Admiralty Court in awarding remuneration for salvage of derelict to give only such proportion of the value as under the circumstances it deems just and right. Rule giving a moiety of the value now abandoned. Custom in United States to give one-third. In performing salvage services, bad faith, an intention not to do the whole duty, or to protract from improper motives the duration of the service, are acts of wilful misconduct, which forfeit all right to salvage. Salvors, moreover, must possess skill and knowledge sufficient to enable them duly to perform the duties which they undertake in order to entitle them to remuneration: (The Magdalen, A. C. Nov. 30, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 189; 31 L. J. 22 Adm.; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 897; see Digest of Mar. Law Cas., 1837 to 1860, No. 1026, 1878, and title hereof; Salvage 49.)

Bottomry—General maritime law—Law of the flag, or lex loci contractus—Duty to communicate with owners of cargo.—In questions of Bottomry the court is guided by the principles of general maritime law, unless the law of the country to which the ship belongs, or the lex loci contractus, be distinctly pleaded and proved as the governing law, in which case the court will be ready to consider the question. It is the duty of the master to communicate, if practicable, with owners of cargo before hypothecating it: (The Hamburg, A. C. March 24 and 31, 1863, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 52; 32 L. J. 161 Adm.; 9 Jur. N. S. 445; 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 175—see supra 3.)

Pleading—Evidence to be elicited before examination.—Pleading, whether the original petition or the answer to it, ought to be so framed as to enable an examiner to elicit in evidence all the facts of the case. An answer which did not comply with this rule was ordered to be amended accordingly: (The Claus Thomesen, A. C. March 24, 1863, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 327; 32 L. J. 106, Adm.; 9 Jur. N. S. 388; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 121.)

Collision—Action—Judgment of Admiralty Court in rem no bar to suit at common law for damages done.—A judgment in rem in the Admiralty Court and execution by sale of vessel is no bar to an action at common law where the damage done is more than the sum realised by such sale. The plaintiff having recovered in the Admiralty Court for damage done by collision to the extent of the value of the ship, sued for the residue of the damage. Ancient authorities collected in Com. Dig. tit. "Action." K. 1; cases of the Fortitudo and the John and Mary, Swabey Ad. 471; 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 494, referred to by the court to show that an action in personam would bar further proceedings: (Nelson and others v. Couch and others, C. B. June 24, 1863, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 348; 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 577; 15 C. B., N. S., 99; 32 L. J. 46, C. P.)

Wages of foreign seamen—Intervention of foreign consul.—Where a foreign consul intervenes, and asks payment of wages to be made to him in a suit at the instance of mariners belonging to the country which he represents, the consul undertaking to do justice between the parties, the suit will be discontinued if the consul objects to its being entertained: (The Timor, A. C., Nov. 17, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 400; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 307.)

Or where in such a case the foreign consul objects to continuance of suit. But there is a great distinction between proceeding against a ship and against the proceeds of a ship sold. In the latter case, if the master had been engaged on voyages to distant parts of the world, he would be allowed to obtain payment of his wages in this country.

Observations in the case of The Golubchick, 1 W. Rob. 143, explained: (The Octavie, A. C. Dec. 8, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 420; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 695.)

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

ROLLS COURT.

Since our last notice this court has been chiefly occupied with adjourned summonses, several of which are worthy of notice. We may in the first place mention two cases in Re Joint-Stock Discount Company. The first of these was Butcher's case, which was an application by a Mr. Bravo, that the name of Mr. Thomas Butcher might be placed on the list of contributories to the above company instead of his own name. On the 3rd Jan. 1866 Bravo, who was then a director of the company, sold 100 shares, which he held, to Butcher. The transfer was duly executed and lodged at the office, but was not registered, in consequence of the clerk having received instructions not to register transfers from any of the directors. On the same day on which he sold his shares, Bravo sent in his resignation as a director, but it was not accepted, and he continued to sit at the board for several weeks after that date. His Lordship said that he could not grant Mr. Bravo's application, though he was of opinion that Mr. Butcher was bound to indemnify him.

The next was Solliue's case, which was an application that the name of Mr. John Solliue might be placed on the list instead of the names of Messrs. Adamson and Ronaldson. In this case the transfer was duly executed and lodged for registration on the 20th Feb. 1866. It ought to have been examined on the 27th Feb. by one of the directors prior to registration, but it was not examined on that day, and before the next day for examining transfers came round, the directors had passed a resolution to register no more transfers. The transfer was consequently unregistered, when the winding-up commenced on the 3rd March. It appeared that the transfer was informal, the day of the month being left in blank, and no seal being placed opposite to the transferee's signature, as was required by the articles of association. His Lordship refused the application, and said that he could not hold that the transfer was valid, because the requirements of the articles as to sealing had not been complied with. The transferee was, however, clearly liable to indemnify the transferors.

Re Agriculturist's Cattle Insurance Company, Dixon's case, was an application by the official liquidator of the above company to settle the name of Mr. Thomas Dixon on the list of contributories under the following circumstances: In 1846 Mr. Dixon agreed to take shares in the company on being assured by Mr. Wilkie, the managing director, that an Act of Parliament would shortly be obtained to limit the liability of the shareholders. He was accordingly registered as a shareholder in May 1846, and he received dividends, but did not execute the deed of settlement. As he found in 1848 that there was no prospect of the Act being obtained, he applied to be relieved of his shares, and an arrangement was made in the following year by which he paid the calls then owing on his shares, and his name was cancelled on the register and did not afterwards appear in the returns to the registrar of joint-stock companies. His Lordship was of opinion that the directors had power to enter into such an arrangement where there was a real question at issue, and, considering the assurance under which Mr. Dixon had become a shareholder, there was, in his opinion, a real question at issue in his case. The arrangement had been acquiesced in for twenty years; it may have been voidable, but it was not void, and after such a lapse of time his Lordship would not open the matter. He was of opinion that Mr. Dixon was not properly a member of the company, and that his name must be removed from the list.

Re Lundy Granite Company was an application to determine whether a sale of the property of this company to a Mr. Bentall, for 4000*l.*, should be confirmed. A shareholder appeared in person and asked that the sale might be deferred. His Lordship said that he was desirous of putting an end to the expenses of the company which were over 20*l.* per week. This should not continue during the vacation. If no offer better than Mr. Bentall's were made in a week, the sale must be confirmed.

MARAVILLA COCOA FOR BREAKFAST.—The cocoa (or cacao) of Maravilla is the true Theobroma of Linnaeus.—The Globe says: "Taylor Brothers' Maravilla Cocoa has achieved a thorough success, and superseded every other cocoa in the market. For homeopaths and invalids we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage." Sold, in packets only, by all grocers.

ELECTION LAW.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON ELECTION PRACTICES.

THE Select Committee appointed to inquire into the present modes of conducting Parliamentary and municipal elections, in order to provide further guarantees for their tranquillity, purity, and freedom, have agreed to report the evidence taken before them to the House of Commons. From the resolutions drawn up by various members of the committee we gather the different views which were taken of the subject. The resolutions of the chairman set forth that there was extensive corruption both in municipal and Parliamentary elections for boroughs; that, though there was no corruption there was intimidation in counties (as there was also in boroughs) by landlords, employers, mobs, and clergymen. He then proceeds to enumerate the remedies recommended—vote by ballot, multiplication of polling places, and abolition of public nominations. Mr. Bright's resolutions were much to the same effect, with the addition of a suggestion for a simple and speedy mode of trial of petitions in the case of municipal elections, and the prohibition of rooms in public-houses being hired as committee-rooms. In the draft report which the chairman afterwards submitted, but which was not adopted, the County Court is proposed for the trial of municipal election petitions, and the abolition of public nominations, closing of public-houses on the nomination and polling days, the multiplication of polling places, and the ballot are recommended. Voting papers are condemned, and the prohibition of paid canvassers is said to be impracticable.

Among other recommendations laid before the committee were the following:—Mr. Hardy—"That there is no sufficient remedy at present for the recovery of compensation for damage inflicted by mobs upon property; and it is desirable to improve the law on that subject." Mr. Fawcett—"That it will tend to the purity of Parliamentary elections, and to the economical conducting of them, if the necessary expenses of them be borne by local rates, due precaution being taken to discourage fictitious candidature. That the employment of paid canvassers and agents should be prohibited." Mr. James—"That every candidate should previous to the election make a declaration on oath that he has not been and will not be a party to any corrupt practice in relation to such election. That the time for presenting election petitions should be extended." It is recommended that the committee be reappointed next year to consider their report, "with a view to early legislation." The draft report adds that "the ballot possesses many great advantages, that it would put an end to some evils in our electoral system, and mitigate the rest."

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Friday, July 23.
(Before Mr. Baron BRAMWELL.)
GARDNER v. SAMUELSON, M.P.

Costs on election petitions—The late Cheltenham petition.

This case came before his Lordship on an application on the part of the sitting member, Mr. Samuelson, for payment of 73*l.* out of court as his taxed costs, and that the remainder of the 1000*l.* deposited for costs should be retained until further order. Master Gordon had taxed the costs at the sum mentioned, and it was intended next term to bring the subject before the court, as on election petitions a material question was whether the costs were to be taxed as between attorney and client, or as between party and party.

Burr applied for the payment out of court, and complained of the amount allowed. The question of costs would be considered next term—whether Master Gordon should not review his taxation.

Buck (Baxter, Rose, and Norton) objected to the payment. There was no such thing as payment out of court, as this money was in the bank, and the requirements of the Act had not been complied with. He said too much had been allowed.

BRAMWELL, B. perused the Parliamentary Elections Act, and was at a loss to know how he could grant the order. According to the new rules, application should be made to the Chief Justice.

Burr said he was clearly entitled to the sum allowed, whether his Lordship ordered payment or not, but he had to ask him that the balance of the 1000*l.* should be retained until an application had been made to the court next term. It was an important question whether costs as between attorney and client were not to be allowed on election petitions.

BRAMWELL, B., was of opinion that he could not make the order as asked, but Baron Martin would be in town next week. His own impression was that application should be made to the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas. He should decline to interfere, and should simply indorse the summons, "No order."

and others v. Seely, jun., came before Baron Bramwell, at Chambers, in reference to an application by Mr. Hoskins, on the part of the sitting member, for "particulars" of the allegations in the petition. The case was appointed to be heard on the 29th inst. before Baron Martin at Nottingham. Mr. Hoskins said there was some difficulty in the matter, as all the election judges were absent, and he had to ask his Lordship that he would hear a summons for "particulars," as the hearing of the petition was approaching. Baron Bramwell considered that he had power to hear such an application in the absence of the election judges, and that one of the new rules applied to the case. Notice of an application was given to the other side. The rule is the 44th, stating that interlocutory matters were to be heard at Chambers by one of the judges on the rota, "if practicable, and if not, then by any judge at Chambers."

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH FRANCE.

LORD CHELMSFORD.—My Lords, I rise to put a question to the noble earl the Secretary for Foreign Affairs. In 1843 an extradition treaty was entered into between this country and France, and in the same year an Act of Parliament was passed giving effect to that treaty. The offences named in the treaty were not numerous. They consisted of murder, attempt to murder, forgery, and fraudulent bankruptcy. The treaty was in existence from 1843 till 1865; but so far as any action on our side was concerned, it remained a dead letter during the whole of that period, because not a single criminal was delivered up by us to France. That arose from the view the chief magistrate took as to the course which he ought to pursue when persons were brought before him for extradition. He thought it his bounden duty not to give up an accused person unless he were satisfied on the evidence before him that there would be a conviction if that person were put upon his trial. I think that view of the matter was hardly in accordance with the terms of the treaty. I believe that what was intended by the treaty was this—that an accused person should be given up supposing the evidence brought before the magistrate were such that if the offence were committed in this country the accused should be committed for trial. There was also a misapprehension as to the effect of a judgment par contumace, the chief magistrate being of opinion that such a judgment put a person out of the category of an accused person. Therefore, when it was found that a person had been condemned par contumace in his absence, the chief magistrate said, "This is a convicted and not an accused person, and, therefore, I must discharge him." Now the magistrate was entirely in error in this respect, because, in point of fact, a person who has been convicted par contumace is on being delivered up tried in exactly the same way as any other accused person, the previous judgment par contumace having no effect whatever upon the proceedings. Then, the French Government had another ground of dissatisfaction with regard to the proof required of the documents which were transmitted from France, and the depositions which were certified by the juge d'instruction and authenticated by the signature and official seal of the Minister of Justice. Our Act of Parliament required, however, in addition to all this, that the party who produced the depositions should prove that they were true copies. These various sources of dissatisfaction induced the Government of France to give notice in 1865 that under the terms of the treaty they would put an end to it within six months. The noble earl who was then, as he is now, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, sent Sir Thomas Henry, the chief magistrate at Bow-street, over to France to negotiate on the subject with the French Government. I must admit that the noble earl could not have selected a person better fitted to conduct the negotiations. The noble earl stated on a former occasion that it was mainly owing to his ability and to the zeal with which he conducted the negotiations that we were extricated from a position of some embarrassment. On Sir Thomas Henry's return the noble earl had a Bill prepared, which applied generally to the proof required in all cases under extradition treaties, and I am much surprised that there should have been the least disposition in any quarter to prevent that Bill passing into law. On the change of Government I was charged with the introduction into your Lordships' House of that measure, which I entirely approved. That measure, of course, received the cordial support of the noble earl, and the simple object of it was to enact that when the documents and depositions transmitted from France in reference to the extradition of offenders were certified by the judge or the magistrate to be true copies, and when that fact was further authenticated by signature and seal of the department of the Minister of Justice, they should be taken without further proof to be evidence in all our courts of justice. Of course, the Bill was easily passed through this House with the concurrence of the noble earl and sent down to the House of Commons, where to my infinite surprise great jealousy existed in certain quarters as to the objects which the French Government had in view in desiring the continuance of a treaty, because they thought the design of the French Government was to lay hold of political offenders under the pretence of preferring some criminal charge against them. There was not, however, the slightest ground for any such imputation. Under the law of France it is made a point of honour never to deliver up or to demand any political offender, and if a person who is a political offender is given up under an extradition treaty, for another offence, he is, if acquitted, or in the event of his conviction after the expiration of his sentence, warned that he must leave the country within a certain period, and it is only when he neglects to do so that he can be apprehended and tried for the political offence. So strict, indeed, were the French on this point that when a person had committed several criminal offences, and was delivered up under an extradition treaty for one of them, he could not be tried for the other offences without a fresh application being made for the extradition of the offender. The feeling, however, which prevailed in the House of Commons induced them to determine that the Bill should not be in force for a longer period than twelve months. Accordingly the Bill passed, its duration being limited to that term. In 1867 it was found necessary to continue that Bill for another year, and in 1868 the same course was pursued, but on each occasion it was necessary for the Government to apply to the French Government to continue the treaty, and I must say that the French Government, though somewhat dissatisfied, had acted with the greatest courtesy and forbearance and yielded to the application. In 1868 a select committee of the House of Commons was appointed to inquire into the whole law and practice of extradition. I should, however, state that the French Government were so desirous of removing any jealousy which might exist with regard to their supposed anxiety to get hold of political offenders that they expressed their willingness to have a clause introduced into the Bill to the effect that the magistrate should himself decide whether the offence with which a person might be charged was of a political character, and if he came to the conclusion that it was, he might at once discharge the accused. Well, the select committee to which I just referred drew up a report on which was founded a Bill. That Bill, which is now in all probability in the Foreign-office, was prepared in 1868. We have now nearly arrived at the end of the Session of 1869, but still that Bill has not been introduced into Parliament. There is undoubtedly a very strong feeling in France of annoyance and dissatisfaction at the delay which has occurred, and a minister has said publicly that it seemed rather surprising that the Government of England had taken three years to decide whether they would agree to an extradition treaty precisely similar to the fifty-six treaties which France has entered into with other countries. In conclusion, the noble and learned lord asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether it was his intention to bring in a Bill this Session to enable Her Majesty to conclude an extradition treaty with the Emperor of the French.—The Earl of CLARENDON: I understand perfectly the feeling which has induced my noble and learned friend to bring forward this subject, and I am much obliged to him for having dealt with it in so conciliatory a manner. It is not my intention, nor have I, indeed, the power, to bring forward a Bill of Extradition this year. The noble and learned lord has, I think, himself indicated the extreme difficulties which stand in the way of dealing with this question. As he remarked, there was considerable opposition to the very simple Bill which was brought forward by himself, so great was the jealousy and fear entertained by the House of Commons lest political offenders should be delivered up. I think, however, it is of very great importance that we should have an extradition treaty not only with France, but also with other countries, for it is a great disgrace, particularly now that the means of intercommunication between different countries have been so much improved, that this kingdom should be a harbour and asylum for all the rogues in the world. The Bill which had been prepared laid down the principles on which extradition treaties were to be concluded not with France only, but with all the countries of Europe. The Foreign-office and the Home-office have been in communication on the subject, and the Bill has been ready for upwards of two months; but it has fallen, like many others, a victim to the exigencies of measures of greater magnitude and importance, as, for example, the Irish Church Bill and the Bankruptcy Bill, by which so much of the time of the session has been occupied. It was really found impossible to bring it forward; and I am quite sure that the noble and learned lord, with his great Parliamentary experience, must feel that it would be extremely inconvenient to introduce Bills of this character, on which great difference of opinion exists, and protracted discussions are likely to arise, unless there is a reasonable prospect of passing them. As far, however, as the Foreign-office is concerned, I engage that this shall be one of the first Bills which shall be brought in by that department next year. I hope that no injury will result from the delay thus occasioned, because we have already received the assent of the French Government to a satisfactory arrangement on this matter.

EVIDENCE AMENDMENT BILL.

LORD PENZANCE rose to move the second reading of this Bill. Alluding to the enactment which for the first time allowed parties to certain suits to give their own accounts of the transactions out of which the suit arose, he observed that no one who had practised in the courts of law since that change was made doubted its expediency, or hesitated to pronounce it a most successful measure. But suits on account of breach of promise of marriage and adultery were excepted by this enactment, and it was with these exceptions the Bill proposed to deal. As regards suits for breach of promise, it was proposed simply to do away with the exception; and it was the opinion of most lawyers that the Bill in this respect would be an unquestionable improvement. The exception in cases of adultery had wrought much evil altogether independent of the object aimed at by the framers of the law. It was thought by many, himself included, that it was undesirable any one should be put in a witness-box and be asked whether he or she had been guilty of the crime of adultery; and the sympathy for a person placed in that position, especially a man whose admission involved the public dishonour of a woman, dictated the exception on this head. But, instead of providing simply that the question as to whether he or she had committed adultery should not be put, it was provided that parties to suits instituted on account of adultery should not be examined as witnesses. It happened that in the court over which he presided many suits were instituted on account of adultery which involved other questions, and the exception had had the effect of shutting the mouths of the parties to the suit as regards questions, say, of desertion and cruelty, when in many cases they alone could speak directly to the facts; and the result had been to cause very great expense in bringing witnesses from all parts of the country to prove facts within the knowledge of the parties to the suit. As the Act was passed before the Divorce Court was established, the result was plainly fortuitous, and there seemed to be no reason on earth why a man or woman should not be asked any questions touching the adultery of either husband or wife, and yet a suit instituted on account of adultery made it impracticable. It was even possible under the present law for a man to go into a room and find his wife in the act of adultery without being able to state the fact in evidence. Had it not been that some amendment had been made in the original law the business of the Divorce Court could not have been carried on at all, and, as it was, the Act making that amendment, the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, led to fresh inequalities by limiting the repeal of the exception to only a few cases, in order to allow a woman to prove the cruelty of her husband. The amendment permitted the husband and wife to give evidence in cases where the suit was instituted by the wife on the ground of cruelty and desertion. But, unfortunately, if the husband brought a charge of adultery, and the wife answered it by a charge of cruelty and adultery, she could not be a witness upon the subject of cruelty, because the suit was instituted on the ground of adultery. Then, other evils arose connected with costs. The husband brought a charge of adultery against his wife, who knowing she could not be a witness in that case, brought a cross-suit on the ground of cruelty, in order that she might speak. Thus the husband had to pay the costs of two suits when one would serve the purpose. The law, as it stood now, excluded evidence not intended to be excluded, and it admitted that intended to be shut out; it did not exclude evidence where adultery came up by way of recrimination, but it did exclude it where adultery was charged in the petition. Again, the law did not cover the case of an action brought by a third person, say by a tradesman, against a husband for necessities supplied to the wife; in that case, if adultery were alleged, there was nothing to prevent the parties getting into the witness-box. He would add a word on the question whether there was any objection to the parties being examined on the direct charge of adultery. Was there really any reason why a petitioner or a respondent should not be allowed to get into the witness-box, and by his or her explanation get rid of the suspicion which circumstances had raised against them? For want of this power great injustice was often done. Appearances were very often strong against a man and woman; admissions made, or said to have been made, were given in evidence against them; yet they were not permitted to get into the witness-box and give their own account; and in many cases this was a great hardship. The Bill as it stood said that the parties should be "compellable" to give evidence; but such a provision respecting the parties to the suit must be a dead letter, for the plaintiff would not call the defendant, nor the defendant the plaintiff; and the Bill would be just as valuable if the word were struck out, and if it simply said that the parties should be competent to give evidence. In ten years the Court of Divorce had been harassed and hampered by the action upon each other of two Acts of Parliament without any common design between them; and he therefore rejoiced that this Bill had been passed by the Commons to correct a gross anomaly which could not be well defended. The House of Commons had added a provision to protect witnesses against criminating themselves, and he was satisfied that it would be sufficient for the purpose.—Lord CHELMSFORD had the greatest confidence in the judgment of the noble and learned lord who had charge of the Bill, and it was, therefore, with hesitation and doubt that he ventured to make some remarks against it. He could not help entertaining a very serious apprehension as to the danger that would be incurred from the admission of the evidence of parties in cases of this description. This was not only a legal question, but it was also a moral and a social one, upon which those who were not members of the Bar were competent to form an opinion. When a Bill on this subject was brought forward by Lord Brougham he said that the exceptions in reference to proceedings in adultery and actions for breach of promise were forced upon him against his will: and it was quite clear that the opinion of the majority of persons then was that the exceptions should be introduced. In 1865 the present Lord Chief Baron introduced into the House of Commons a Bill in which there were two clauses for admitting the evidence of parties in these two cases; the Bill was read a second time, but in committee the two clauses were struck out, and the Bill was therefore dropped. In 1866 the then Lord Chancellor (Lord Cairns) introduced a Bill containing similar clauses, which said that the parties should be competent, but not compellable, to give evidence. Personally, he thought there was no serious practical distinction between the two forms of expression, for it was clear that if persons were competent to give evidence, even though they were not compellable, if they failed to present themselves the fact would be fatal to their case. On that occasion the only speakers were the Lord Chancellor and himself, and the late Lord Taunton, who also took the view he did as to the danger of admitting evidence of this kind. On a division, the House was equally divided, and the Bill, therefore, fell to the ground. These facts indicated great difference of opinion upon the propriety of admitting evidence of this kind; and, as he said at that time, he certainly felt that the proposed change would open the floodgates of perjury. Take the case of proceedings by a husband against a wife for adultery. It was quite clear that, her character and position for life being involved, the temptation to commit perjury was so great as in many cases to be utterly irresistible. A woman who had broken one commandment would not scruple to break another in order to protect herself. Again, a co-respondent might feel it was a point of honour to protect the woman with whom he had committed adultery. Shortly before he left the Bar there occurred a case of crim. con. in which the verdict went against the co-respondent. The husband applied to the Ecclesiastical Court for a divorce a mensa et thoro, but the co-respondent appeared and swore positively no adultery had been committed. The co-respondent was then indicted for perjury, and as counsel for the defence, he felt it was essential that the woman should be called. She swore that no adultery was committed, and the defendant was acquitted. In the mean time Parliament had established the Divorce Court, in which the husband proceeded for a divorce, and the adultery being clearly proved he obtained it; and one of the first acts of his official life as Lord Chancellor was, on the application of the Lord Lieutenant, to strike the name of the defendant out of the commission of the peace. This case showed how difficult it was for persons to resist the temptation—a woman to defend herself from the consequences of adultery being established against her, and a man, from a feeling of honour, to protect the woman with whom he had committed adultery. It was that feeling that induced him to apprehend considerable danger from the admission of evidence of that kind. He should have been very glad if his noble and learned friend had introduced a clause permitting the parties to be witnesses in certain cases, but excluding altogether cases of adultery. He would now turn for a moment to the question of breaches of promise of marriage. His noble and learned friend behind him (Lord Cairns) had informed him that in Ireland they had a curious way of getting over the difficulty which at present existed in the way of procuring the admission of evidence. In the charge against the defendant a count for assault and battery was inserted, and in this way the lady herself was called to prove the letters, and the friends and the relatives to prove the promises. (A laugh.) But he had known cases of this kind where letters in support of the case had been forged, and if both the parties were permitted to give evidence, and if the woman swore to the promise, the man's denial would stand no chance, for they all knew which way the sympathies of the jury leaned. In cases of seduction, again, if a count for breach of promise were introduced, the man's denial would weigh little against the sympathies of the jury, when the woman swore that she had been seduced under promise of marriage. In cases of ordinary affiliation the evidence of the woman was not received without corroboration. Now the law was in this curious position. There was an Act of Parliament passed in the time of Charles II., which provided that no action should be brought upon any promise alleged to have been made in consideration of marriage, unless the promise had been made in writing, and yet it had been held that mutual promises might be established by parol. He did not intend to divide the House against the Bill, but he trusted that the points to which he had referred would receive attention. (Hear.)—After a few words from Lord DENMAN, Lord CAIRNS said he would willingly have resigned his own opinions with respect to the advisability of altering the law relating to the position of persons charged with adultery to those of his noble and learned friend who presided over the Divorce Court with so much ability, had he entertained any doubt on the subject. But there were two other portions of the Bill which stood upon a different footing. One of them was the question relating to breach of promise of marriage, which frequently entered into allegations supported by mere passing words. If power were given to examine the parties, it would be found that men and women would be swearing as to the use of words which after a lapse of time might be made to wear a very different colour from that which they wore when originally spoken, and seeing that the sympathies of juries were with the woman and against the man, it would be a great anomaly, he thought, to allow a proceeding such as that to which he was referring to be supported by merely verbal testimony which could not be met by verbal testimony on the other side. The third part of the Bill seemed to him, he might add, to be of great importance, inasmuch as it proposed to abolish, for the first time, oaths altogether in civil proceedings, not out of regard to any religious scruple, or for any of those other reasons which had hitherto prevailed, but simply on the ground of sic volo. That was a proposal, which, in his opinion, was open to very great objection, and he hoped it would be well considered before it received their Lordships' assent.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that when the alteration was first made in the law of evidence by which the parties to a suit were allowed to be witnesses in their own case, leaving it to the jury to estimate the value of their testimony, he was entirely in favour of the change. He had, however, felt a strong objection at the time, which was not now, perhaps, entirely removed, as to the extension of that particular benefit to the suits of husbands and wives inter se. He thought it might lead to a disturbance of the peace of families; but as it had pleased the Legislature to take a different view, he did not, he must confess, see why the exceptions with which the Bill proposed to deal should remain, especially as the peace and harmony of families would in those particular cases have already been destroyed. With reference to the third part of the Bill, he must say that he heartily concurred with his noble and learned friend who brought it forward, because all, he thought, that was necessary in giving evidence in a court of justice was that instead of taking an oath, a witness should know that he had a solemn duty to perform, for any breach of which he would be liable to a legal penalty.—Lord PENZANCE expressed his readiness, if it should be deemed desirable, to omit the provision with respect to the taking of oaths in committee.—The Bill was then read a second time.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

The House then went into committee on this Bill, which had come back after undergoing revision at the hands of a select committee. On the clauses relating to compensation,—Lord CAIRNS expressed an earnest hope that the Government would consent to increase the salary of Mr. Commissioner Bacon, who was to be appointed the chief judge of the new court. He also pointed out that some of the details in these compensation clauses were of an entirely novel kind.

—The LORD CHANCELLOR explained the circumstances under which the Government had modified their original proposal to appoint as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy one of the judges of the Superior Courts. At the suggestion of Sir Roundell Palmer, they had offered to the acceptance of Mr. Commissioner Bacon the position of Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, that arrangement having been recommended to them in the other House as one that would avoid additional charge to the country, and prevent a waste of money in compensation. With respect to the question of the salaries of officers, there were two classes of officers. The first consisted of the commissioners, who held for life or during good behaviour. The second class consisted of registrars and official assignees, who did not stand in the same position as the first class, being subject to removal for cause shown by the Lord Chancellor. They were remunerated by fees; the clause provided that their fees should be ascertained on a proper and fair average, and then that those officers should receive a sum amounting to not less than two-thirds of their average fees. His noble and learned friend was not correct in saying that this was introduced at the last moment. So far from that being the case, there was a good deal of discussion on the matter in another place, and those who did not hold by good behaviour addressed him very fully, and so did their friends. There was, therefore, no surprise. Great blame had been thrown on the Government for bringing in matters in that way, but on that occasion the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the late Government (Mr. Hunt) and Mr. Selater-Booth very honourably said that they had known exactly the same difficulty to arise at another time when a certain clause was brought in without consultation with the Treasury, and they had taken it upon themselves to alter it. He had the full approbation of the Treasury for this, that those who held during good behaviour should have their full salaries, and those who did not should never receive less than two-thirds. With regard to clause 133, the case was this—if a person was compensated with full salary his whole time was paid for, and they ought to be entitled to say to him, "Here is an office under the Act. You give up one office; take another." There were precedents for that. When the Court of Chancery was reformed they threw on the Vice-Chancellors one day's work more per week than they had before. They gave them exactly six hours' additional work. Again, under a former Bankruptcy Bill, Sir George Rose, who was one of the three judges, had his office abolished; but he was afterwards offered the post of Master in Chancery, and he very honourably took it. He could not see that there was any breach of faith in asking gentlemen who should receive the full amount of their salaries to accept a new office. If anyone retired on less than his full salary the case would be different, for he would not be paid for all his time. He should be willing, however, to amend the clause, so that it might run thus—"any office or employment of equal or greater salary under this Act." In that way no gentleman could feel aggrieved on being asked to accept a new office.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT BILL.

The House went into committee on this Bill.—Lord ROMILLY deprecated continuing the power of imprisonment for debt in the hands of County Courts. Credit was given for goods sold in the ordinary way only because the vendor believed the purchaser would pay, and the fear of imprisonment benefited no one but the tallyman, who forced his credit on the unwary poor. He did not approve the distinction made in the Bill between debts for 30*l.* and 50*l.* with respect to imprisonment. In some respects the abolition of imprisonment for debt seemed to be perfect, but in others it was not. He had given notice of some amendments based upon these views, but, having placed them on record, he did not wish to press them.—The amendments were accordingly negatived without a division.—On the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR the Bill was amended by substituting for the words "commencement of the bankruptcy" from clause 10 throughout the Bill the words "after the presentation of the petition of bankruptcy or before the commencement of liquidation."—The Bill was then passed through committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

The greater part of Wednesday was consumed by a debate on the Capital Punishment Abolition Bill.—Mr. GILPIN, in moving the second reading, made the usual punishment of death speech, which differed only from former speeches by its extreme length.—He was seconded by Mr. R. N. FOWLER.—Mr. J. D. LEWIS, who moved the rejection of the Bill, cited against it the experience of foreign countries where the punishment had been abolished.—Mr. TIPPING, who supported him, argued that the punishment was the strongest possible deterrent, but was for reserving it for cases of cold-blooded murder.—Mr. Serjt. SIMON treated the question as one of juridical science, and maintained that the gallows did not answer the two principal purposes of punishment—to correct crime, and to deter others; but Mr. SCOTFIELD, on the other hand, held that it did answer what he thought the chief aim of punishment—the safety of society. And he quoted against the Bill the saying of the Frenchman who did not object to the sanctity of human life being respected—"mais que messieurs les assassins commencent."—Mr. HIBBERT was unable to see his way to the abolition of the punishment of death consistently with the public safety; but he suggested that the Government should carry out the recommendations of the Royal Commission by dividing the crime of murder into two categories, and reserving death for murders committed with malice prepense.—Mr. BRUCE, however, pointed out that both the late Government and its predecessors had found it impossible to do this, nor did he think that if there was to be legislation, it could follow very closely the recommendations of the Commission. But though not prepared to consent to the Bill, and holding the punishment to be just and powerfully deterrent, he admitted that the law was in a very unsatisfactory state. The action of the Home-office, which he explained and justified at length, he believed to be in harmony with public opinion, and the law ought to be made to correspond with it.—Mr. HENLEY avowed himself a convert to the abolition of this punishment by the experience of the good effects which had followed on previous relaxations of the law; but after some remarks from Mr. McCULLAGH TORRENS and Mr. HADFIELD, the Bill was thrown out by 118 to 58.

TRADES UNIONS BILL.

On the order of the day for the third reading of this Bill, Mr. ADDERLEY asked on what ground these Trades Unions were to be placed on the same footing as friendly societies.—Mr. GOSCHEN said that the Bill was merely a temporary measure to prevent the funds of the Trades Unions from being embezzled until a general measure could be introduced.—After a short conversation the Bill was read a third time and passed.

EQUITY PRACTICE—INTERLOCUTORY MOTION.
The plaintiff, previously to his interrogatories being answered, served the defendant with notice of an interlocutory motion for an injunction, and filed an affidavit in support of the motion. The defendant summoned the plaintiff before the examiner to be cross-examined on his affidavit, and in the course of his cross-examination the plaintiff refused to produce a document, not referred to in his affidavit, but which he admitted to be in his possession. Thereupon the defendant applied to the court for an order for its production. Held, that the document must be produced, and the plaintiff pay the costs of the application: (Cliff v. Bull, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 841. V.C.S.)

AGREEMENT FOR JUDICIAL SEPARATION—CONVIVANCE.—The parties had agreed to live separate, but there was no provision in the deed as to the future mode of life of the husband; and it was alleged that the wife was cognisant of the fact that the husband was living in adultery, and tacitly consented that he should continue to lead the same life. The court investigated the circumstances of the case, and being satisfied that the wife had not consented that the husband should continue to live in adultery, held that she had not connived. Held, also, that if the wife had consented that her husband should continue the adulterous intercourse as a condition of obtaining an allowance, though it was an unwilling consent, it would have amounted to connivance: (Ross v. Ross, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 853. D. & M.)

It is stated that the damages in the action by Mr. Murphy against the Mayor of Birmingham are laid at 1000*l*. The prosecution is understood to be supported by several prominent members of the Protestant party in the House of Commons.

The late Mr. Thomas Lott, whose death, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, occurred on Sunday last, was for many years a man of mark in the City of London. He was an active member of the Court of Common Council, deputy alderman of Cordwainers Ward, and a member of several civic committees. Deputy Lott was well known for his antiquarian researches, and was a prominent member of several archaeological societies.

On the retirement of Mr. Charles Freshfield from the post of one of the solicitors to the Bank of England, his nephews, Messrs. William and Edwin Freshfield, were associated with Mr. Henry Freshfield in the solicitorship to that establishment. At the same time the court of directors caused to be conveyed to Mr. Charles Freshfield their high sense of the services he had rendered during the many years of his official connection with them.

Mr. Grenville Murray has been made the defendant in a civil action, which will be tried in the course of a few days, as it has been set down for hearing at the forthcoming Croydon assizes. The plaintiff is Mr. John Hughes, who was the publisher of the Queen's Messenger, his claim being for liabilities alleged to have been incurred by Mr. Grenville Murray, as the responsible, although not the registered proprietor of the paper.

THE LAWYERS IN DANGER.—There is some prospect of our not only cutting short the tediousness of the "law's delay," but also of our getting rid of the Profession generally. If this could be done without causing much physical suffering, few objections would be raised; but we confess to a weak feeling of hesitation at the proposed means by which the blessing is to be accomplished. Mr. J. Fowler, the engineer to the Metropolitan District Railway Company, in his evidence before the select committee on the Hungerford-bridge and Wellington-street Viaduct, being questioned with regard to the incorporation of a great public building with one of the stations of the company, and in answer to an inquiry "if he could have in the station a colossal lift which could take up any number of suitors and lawyers, wigs and all, to any floor they chose to go, without inconvenience," replies, "Certainly, and I think that would be a matter worth consideration in the arrangement of the law courts." He is then asked, "And it could take them down again if they are weak in the knees?" To which question his answer is simply, "Yes." No further question was put to him, but we all know what it means. Anyone who has doubts as to the possibility of the lift taking the lawyers down with even greater facility than it takes them up, has only to read the account of the inquest held on the body of the unfortunate man killed the other day in the lift at the Charing-cross Hotel. Between the railway and the lift the lawyers are doomed: if they escape Scylla, they will fall into Charybdis. It is a curious thing to watch the retributive forces of nature. Engineers and lawyers have taken all our money, and now the former are going to take the lives of the latter, who will, no doubt, revenge themselves in some way.—Pall-Mall Gazette.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

Dorchester, July 22.—There were 8 civil causes. The calendar of prisoners is small in point of numbers, but the offences are of a heinous nature. There are 2 charges of murder—one against a convict under sentence of penal servitude, for the murder of one of the warders of the prison; the other is that of a young woman who had been schoolmistress of a national school, for the murder of her illegitimate child. It appeared that the child, when found in a drawer, was warm; the tongue was missing, but was found wrapped up in a cloth, having been cut out.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Bedford, July 23.—The commission for the county of Beds was opened yesterday afternoon by Mr. Justice Byles. The business is extremely light. There are no causes, and only 13 prisoners. The offences are manslaughter, shooting with intent to do bodily harm, assault and robbery, rape, and larceny. The cases tried have been generally of little interest.

Huntingdon, July 27.—The commission for this county was opened yesterday afternoon by Mr. Justice Byles. There no causes, and only 12 prisoners.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

Carlisle, July 22.—The calendar contains an entry of the names of 14 prisoners, none of the cases being of a very serious character. The cause list contains an entry of 4 special jury causes only. One or two of these are cases of some importance, but it is a very poor assize.

Lancaster, July 27.—The cause list contained the name of one only. Such a list has never before been known at Lancaster. The calendar has the names of 15 prisoners, 1 of these charged with wounding with intent to murder, 2 with manslaughter, 1 with rape, 2 with perjury, and several coming cases.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

Lincoln, July 24.—The commission was opened yesterday. The cause list contains 14 cases, of which 2 are marked for special juries. The calendar for the county contains 19 cases. There is one serious charge of murder, arising out of a poaching affray at Wold Newton. There is 1 case of child murder, 3 of shooting with intent to commit murder, and for stabbing with the same intent. The rest are of a more ordinary character. There are two cases in the city, in one of which Edward Willows is charged with uttering a forged bond, and with being accessory to the forging of the bond by Thomas Scholey, who was tried for that offence at the last Spring Assizes and convicted.

READINGS OF NEW STATUTES.

WINE AND BEERHOUSE ACT, 1869.

Mr. Cousins writes to us:—I have altered my views a little since writing, and sending you the 2nd article on this statute yesterday, kindly substitute the inclosed for the paragraph on the 15th section.

Section 15 enacts that, "If any person shall suffer beer or cider to be drunk in his house at any time during which the house ought by law to be closed, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding 40*s*. for each offence." This a very important section, and is somewhat novel. The marginal note in the statute is, "penalty for selling beer or cider to be drunk at illegal times." This is clearly incorrect, and calculated to mislead. The section does not relate to selling, but to "suffering beer or cider to be drunk." Before the present Act a beer retailer had a right to entertain his friends gratuitously during the prohibited hours, provided he did not keep his house open and did not sell: (Overton v. Hunter 23 J.P. 808, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 366.) He had also a right to supply beer, &c. in exchange for other goods to be delivered to him subsequently (Petherick v. Sargent, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 68). The section under consideration renders it an offence to suffer beer to be drunk during prohibited hours, and the words used would literally extend to a case where the beer retailer was entertaining his friends gratuitously. It would also in strictness of language extend to his own family and the inmates of his house, but it is confidently submitted that these constructions could not be supported. It would also literally extend to drinking by lodgers and travellers during the various times at which beer retailers might supply such parties respectively under former Acts of Parliament. But the section will probably be held not to affect these parties. If it had been intended to extend to them surely it would have done so in express terms, having regard to the prior state of the law. Moreover, if reference be made to the second schedule to the Act, it will be observed that the enactments now in existence in favour of lodgers and travellers are unrevoked. In the midst of these various doubtful matters one thing is clear, namely, that the loose and indefinite wording of the clause will create much litigation. In the face of previous legislation the Legislature ought to have defined more clearly how far it was intended the clause should go. It does not extend to wine, but only to beer (which includes ale and porter) and to cider (which includes perry). Why this distinction is made it is impossible to comprehend, unless it be contended to create a distinction in favour of those who can afford to drink wine.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES ACT—TRADES UNION—RESTRAINT OF TRADE.—A mutual society which, in addition to rules for the bond fide relief of sick members, and for other ordinary purposes of a friendly society, includes also rules for the encouragement, relief or maintenance of men on strike, is not a friendly society within the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63 (The Friendly Societies Act 1855.) By one of the rules of "The Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners," it was provided that "any free member or members leaving his or their employment under circumstances satisfactory to the branch or executive council, shall be entitled to the sum of 15s. per week." Held, per Cockburn, C.J., and Mellor, J., that this rule being ambiguous, and being, in their opinion, according to the evidence in the case, construed and applied by the society so as to render the funds of the society available for the purpose of supporting "strikes," the society was not within the protection of the above-mentioned enactment. Held, per Hannen and Hayes, JJ., that the rule was not ambiguous but perfectly plain and lawful, and that as in their opinion the evidence in the case does not show any illegal action under it, the society was within the protection of the said enactment. Per Hannen, J.—Strikes are not necessarily illegal. The legality or illegality of a strike must depend on the means by which it is enforced, and its objects. It may be criminal, as if it be a part of a combination for the purpose of injuring or molesting either masters or men; or it may be simply illegal, as if it be the result of an agreement, depriving those engaged in it of their liberty of action; or it may be perfectly innocent, as if it be the result of the voluntary combination of the men for the purpose only of benefiting themselves by raising their wages, or for the purpose of compelling fulfilment of an engagement entered into between employers and employed, or any other lawful purpose. (Farrer v. Close, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 802. Q. B.)

LANCASHIRE COUNTY SESSIONS, BOLTON.

Thursday, July 22.

Important application under the Beer and Wine Licensing Act.

An application was made under the new Act for regulating the granting of beer and wine licences, which involves a question of considerable importance to beer-sellers.

Hall, on behalf of Mr. Charles Isherwood, applied for the transfer of the certificate for a beer licence to a house in Halliwell, recently occupied by a person named Smith, but now in the occupation of Mr. Isherwood. He called attention to the 5th section of the new Beer Act, which enacts that "certificates under the Act shall be granted by the justices assembled at the general annual licensing meeting," and to the 9th section, which provides that the "certificates may be transferred to the new tenant or occupant of any house or premises in respect of which a licence under any of the said recited Acts, or in which a certificate shall have been granted under this Act of the justices." The Act, he must say, was not at all free from ambiguity. The clause referred to certificates which shall have been granted before the passing of this Act, which he argued meant the over-seers' certificate, or the licence held by the outgoing tenant. If this were not so, the premises would have to be closed until the next annual licensing day, and he submitted it could never be intended that the business should be suspended in order that the justices should exercise some control.

Mr. C. Briggs, Clerk, said the magistrates had no power to grant a licence. All that they could do was to grant a certificate under the Act, or transfer a certificate where one existed. This was not an application for a certificate, and the justices were called upon to transfer that which did not exist, there being really no certificate at present. It might be hard and productive of some inconvenience, but having given the Act great consideration, he did not see how the application of Mr. Hall could be granted. At the next annual meeting certificates would be granted, and after that they might be transferred, but there were no certificates yet in existence.

Hall said if the premises had to be closed until the licensing meeting, an incalculable loss would be inflicted.

The MAGISTRATES declined to take action in the matter, under the circumstances, but it is understood that the point will again be argued at an early period.

LOCAL TAXATION.—The Local Taxation Committee, Sir Massey Lopes, M.P., chairman, have offered a sum of 50*l.* for the best essay on the injustice, inequalities, and anomalies of the present poor-rate assessment, and of the incidence of other local burdens in England and Wales.

APPOINTMENT OF DIVISIONAL DETECTIVES.—The Commissioners of Police have appointed twenty sergeants and 160 constables to form a divisional detective police. One of the duties of the divisional detectives will be to make themselves well acquainted with all the criminals in their districts, and their associates, habits, and residences. They will also be employed, under the orders of the superintendents, in tracing crimes committed in the division, and generally in the detection of offences which the police have been unable to prevent. The sergeants are to receive a weekly allowance of 35*s.* each, and the constables 28*s.*, there being an allowance of 5*l.* to each man in lieu of uniform.

COLDBATH FIELDS PRISON.—Capt. Sutton Kirkpatrick, late 3rd Dragoon Guards, has been elected by the magistrates of Middlesex to fill the post of deputy governor of Coldbath-fields Prison after a most exciting contest. Capt. Kirkpatrick served in the 28th Regiment in the Crimea in 1854-5—medal and clasp, and Turkish medal. Served also in the Indian mutiny in 1858, at the assault and capture of Fort Beyer, on which occasion he volunteered for and commanded the storming party, for which he was mentioned in despatches. He subsequently acted as a provost marshal to the Okamundel field force at the siege and occupation of Dwarika—Indian medal. He also served in India for five years in the 3rd Dragoon Guards.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD ACT.—A Parliamentary return gives the number of persons convicted in the metropolis within the three years ending the 31st Dec. last of adulterating food and drink under the provisions of the revenue Acts. The convictions in 1866 were twenty-two; in 1867, seven; and in 1868, five. Twenty of these convictions were for selling or being in possession of materials for adulterating beer; eleven were for selling adulterated coffee; and one was for adulterating chicory with mustard husks. The largest penalty inflicted by the magistrates was 500*l.* for supplying materials for adulterating beer, this being a second offence; but the penalty was mitigated by the board to 100*l.* The next highest was a penalty of 125*l.* for a like offence, and this was mitigated to 25*l.*; another of 100*l.* was mitigated to 25*l.* The other penalties were 50*l.* and 25*l.*, and were mitigated by the board to various sums of from 25*l.* to 2*l.*

LUNACY.—The report of the Commissioners in Lunacy shows a total increase in the number of insane persons in England and Wales on Jan. 1, 1869, as compared with the 1st Jan. 1868, of 2177. The number of private patients appears, during that interval, to have increased, in county and borough asylums, by 6; in registered hospitals by 70; in metropolitan licensed houses by 107; in naval and military hospitals by 27; and in private charge as single patients by 50. On the other hand, the patients in provincial licensed houses have decreased by 138, the result being a net increase of 122 in the class of private patients. The number of the pauper class has been increased by 2020, distributed thus:—County and borough asylums, 1181; registered hospitals and licensed houses, 184; workhouses, 497; out-door paupers, 158. There appears besides an increase during the year of 35 in the total number of criminal patients in the Broadmoor Asylum.

DEBTS OF BOROUGHES.—The debts of some of the municipal boroughs of England are of considerable amount. The annual accounts made up the 31st Aug. 1868, show the debt of Manchester to be 838,204*l.*; of Halifax, 737,869*l.*; of Birmingham, 627,373*l.*; of Oldham, 534,849*l.*; of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 274,506*l.*; of Preston, 198,975*l.* The total of secured debts is 4,900,743*l.*, and thirteen boroughs sent in no account. The amount borrowed on security in the year was 581,666*l.* The expenditure on public works in the year ending the 31st Aug. 1868 was 1,103,066*l.*; at Manchester, 414,812*l.*; Liverpool, 127,802*l.*; Newcastle, 95,960*l.*; Halifax, 93,293*l.*; Oldham, 73,660*l.*; Birmingham, 70,807*l.* The debt (principal) paid off in the year was 348,332*l.*

CLERKS OF ASSIZE.—The bill to amend the law relating to the office of clerk of assize and offices united thereto, and to certain fees upon orders for payment of witnesses in criminal proceedings, enacts that a person shall not be appointed to be clerk of assize unless he has during a period of not less than three years been either (1) a barrister-at-law in actual practice, or (2) a special pleader or conveyancer in actual practice, or (3) an attorney of one of the Superior Courts of law at Westminster in actual practice, or (4) a subordinate officer of a clerk of assize on circuit; and the appointment of any person to be clerk of assize who is not qualified as provided by this section shall be void, and another duly qualified person may be appointed in his place as if he were naturally dead. Whenever any vacancy takes place in the office of clerk of assize the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may revise the salary attached to such office and fix another salary, having regard to the nature of the duties and responsibility of such office. A clerk of assize who is paid by salary shall not take any fee for his own use; and if he is authorized by an Act passed or hereafter to be passed to take any fee, he is to account for and pay over such fee as may be directed by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury. Every person appointed after the passing of this Act to be clerk of assize shall hold his office subject to such provisions and regulations as may thereafter be enacted by Parliament, and shall not be entitled to any compensation in respect of the emoluments of his office in case any alteration is made in the duties, or in case it is abolished by Parliament.

THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT.—The report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the working of the Contagious Diseases Act 1866 and to consider whether, and now far and under what conditions, it may be expedient to extend its operations, have agreed upon their report, which has been published. The question of whether it would or would not be advisable to extend the operation of the Contagious Diseases Act (1866) to the whole population is one (the committee say) which involves considerations of such magnitude both social and economic, and would necessitate an inquiry so lengthened and so elaborate, that they have thought they should best perform their duty by not entering on so large a field at a late period of the present session. They understand that, in moving for the committee Her Majesty's Government were not prepared and had no intention, to enter into the consideration of this question in the present year. The committee have therefore confined their investigation for the present: first, to the operation of the Act in those districts to which it has been already applied; secondly, to the alterations which may be necessary to secure more satisfactory results; thirdly, to its further extension for military and naval purposes to districts not included within its schedules. Although the Act has only been in operation two years and a half and at some stations only seven months, strong testimony is borne to the benefits, both in moral and sanitary point of view, which have already resulted from it. Prostitution appears to have diminished, its worst features to have been softened, and its physical evils abated.

CRIME IN THE ARMY.—The Royal Commission on Courts-Martial have obtained returns for the years 1865, 1866, and 1867, showing the amount of crime in the army. The number of soldiers tried by courts-martial on charges of habitual drunkenness or drunkenness on duty was 8656 in 1865, 10,857 in 1866, and 10,833 in 1867; but it must be remembered that since 1866 the charge for habitual drunkenness has been made imperative on the commission of the fourth offence. The trials for insubordination were 6·4 per 1000 of strength in 1865, 6·1 in 1866, 6·0 in 1867, but 7·4 in 1868: some of our military prisons the punishment now inflicted is quite inadequate to the repression of the crime of insubordination, and some central military prison is needed in which stricter discipline can be exercised than is possible in some of the present places of confinement. The returns, far as they are complete, show that in 1865 198,048 men were imprisoned by sentence of court-martial for an aggregate of 1,144,745 days; in 1866, 190,919 men for 1,121,757 days; in 1867, 189,781 men for 1,134,058 days. It is to be hoped this serious loss of service may be lessened by stricter prison discipline and the new system fines for drunkenness. 601 soldiers were flogged in 1865, 510 in 1866, 150 in 1867. In 1865, 11 soldiers were marked with the letter D, 74 w B.C., and 106 were discharged with ignominy; in 1866, the numbers were 1464, 120, and 123 respectively; in 1868, 1615, 190, 184. It is supposed many that branding is done in some painful and cruel manner. This mode of marking is attended with so little pain that both in the military and naval service it is a common occurrence for men to mark themselves in a similar manner for the purpose of recording events in their lives, attachments which they have formed, or the ships and regiments to which they belong. The object of marking is not punishment, but the protection of the public against the re-enlistment of men.

BETTING HOUSES.—The magistrates of Windsor division of Berkshire had a batch of betting cases before them on Saturday last. Offences alleged were committed on Ascot Heath at the late meeting there, and the information were laid by one Bacchus, who was said to be a betting man himself. The first case taken was that of Mr. Valentine, of the firm of Valentine and Wright. Mr. Montagu Williams, on Mr. Valentine's behalf, at once pleaded guilty, as he said it was impossible to deny that the case came under the Act. But it was equally impossible, he contended, to deny that the Act was meant to apply to totally different cases from that of his client. He urged, therefore, that a nominal fine only should be inflicted. In the course of the learned counsel's speech he mentioned that half the penalty imposed by the bench goes to the informer, but that in several cases which would otherwise have been heard by the magistrates, the persons who had been summoned had paid the informer sums of 5*l.* and 10*l.*, and so the summonses had been withdrawn. Mr. P. H. Crutchley, delivering the unanimous judgment of a full bench said, "We are unanimous in our opinion that this is a class of case that never was intended to be punished by the Legislature; but we have the statute before us, and we must follow the letter of the law. We at the same time wish our opinion to be made public, and we also wish to say that if proceedings are to be taken of this description it is the province of the police, and not of a private individual. We therefore inflict a fine of 1*l.*" A like fine was inflicted in all the other cases. Mr. Long, the magistrates' clerk, pointed out that the magistrates had power to compel persons who took out summonses to proceed with them—a course which, if it had been taken in this case, would have been very disastrous to Mr. Bacchus.

CRIMINAL LUNATICS.—The acquittal of criminals on account of supposed insanity causes persons to be confined in lunatic asylums who are no lunatics, unless that term is to include persons who yield to their passions, instead of governing them. This year's report on Irish lunatic asylums states that three men escaped from the central lunatic asylum in 1868, all of them believed to be sane. One of them, named Langfrey, the leader of the party, a man tried for an assault upon a woman, is described as a clever man, who had been in the British army, the French army, and in the French navy, and in the British, German, and Russian prisons. He has a fair grammatical knowledge of French, and knows something of German. He is completely self-taught. He is a good shoemaker, tailor, and weaver. His age, notwithstanding such varied experiences, is but twenty-seven. While in the Irish asylum he made from a scrap of iron a key by which he could open the door of his division. He put together a wooden sewing machine of his own contrivance, with which he made clothes for himself, and his mind seemed so intent on improving this machine that there was little apprehension of his attempting to escape. He and his two companions were the first to leave the supper room, the attendant holding the door open for them. They went upstairs directly, and got through a window the fastenings of which they had previously loosened: the night being dark they could not be captured, though missed at once. It is assumed that insane people have very little power of combining together to carry any design into effect; but this escape was the result of a plan cleverly laid by the three. One of his companions was confined for killing his child, but he always maintained that as he was drunk at the time he ought not to be punished. The other was an American Irishman, who was certainly once insane, but for many months had shown no symptoms of a perverted mind; his offence was a very violent assault on a policeman. Langfrey's mental failing seemed to be fickleness of purpose.

COUNTY ADMINISTRATION.—After some pressing from county members the Government has laid upon the table of the House of Commons a statement of the number of elected members whom they think it is "probable" will be upon the County Financial Boards of each shire, as well as the actual number of magistrates upon the county rolls. It is imperfect—we were about to say "of course;" the genius of slip-slop must have watched over its production, for at a time when so many members of the Legislature are anxious to know what would be the numerical force thrown upon the bench of quarter sessions by the Home Office scheme of county financial reform, the paper is published without a single total or summary, though a statesman would probably look first to the general bearing of the statistics before he investigated their local relations. How easily such a summary could have been given we will show by placing one here. The statistics for the first schedule of the Bill represents thirty-nine English counties, excepting from Cambridge, Herts, and Northampton respectively the liberties of Ely, St. Albans, and Peterborough, which come under the second schedule. We have reckoned Lincolnshire only as one county; but each of its three parts for the purposes of the Bill is a county in itself, and in that view the English shires may be called forty-one. The second schedule consists of the three English counties of Monmouth, Rutland, and Westmoreland, the three liberties just named, and the twelve counties of the principality. The epitome of the return might, we submit, have been appended in some such shape as this:

	No. of Quarter Sessions Jurisdictions	Gross estimated Rental thereof in 1868.	Financial Boards.
			Probable number of Elected Members.	Actual number of Magistrates on the Roll.
First Schedule...	41	85,143,000	1,571	10,133
Second Schedule	18	7,122,000	236	1,830
Total ...	59	92,265,000	1,087	11,963

The first thing we learn from this—it is information long buried in the recesses of the Home Office—is that the army of the "great unpaid" on duty in the counties and liberties of England and Wales is nearly 12,000 strong. The municipal area over which they have no authority had, in 1865, about 18,000,000*l.* rental, or say one-sixth of the aggregate valuation of the kingdom; that, on the average 51,000*l.* of yearly rental is to have one elected representative at the county board; but, taking the schedules separately, the counties in the first have one representative to 54,000*l.*, and those in the second one to 30,000*l.* The grand total of members magisterial and representative on the fifty-nine financial boards will, in the event of the Bill in its present form becoming law, be 13,770, in the proportion of eighty-seven magistrates to thirteen elected representatives per 100 members. The great diversity of representative power, whatever may be the worth of the privilege anywhere, is under this Bill inevitable, because the scheme gives representatives, not according to the number of magistrates at each board, but according to rental. Thus, for example, Cambridgeshire (part of) with 1,090,000*l.* rental is to have only fourteen elected members to 197 magistrates, while that part of the county which is within the liberty of Ely for half the rental (543,000*l.*) is to have seventeen representatives to fifty-three magistrates. Thus the richer section of the county will send one representative to sway the counsels of fourteen magistrates, while the poorer section will have far greater chances of influence at quarter sessions if provided, as intended, with one elected member to balance the votes of every third magistrate. The contiguous county of Hunts, with less than half the rental of Cambridgeshire (schedule 1), is to have twelve elected members against forty-three magistrates. If wisdom is to be found in the multitude of counsel on local finance, Lancashire will be truly blest when 800 persons (99 representative and 719 magisterial members) meet at Preston to determine whether the "general purposes rate" shall be 1*d.* or 1½*d.* in the pound. Other anomalies of a like kind are discernible in detail.—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MORTGAGE — MARSHALLING SECURITIES — PRIORITY.—B. having a reversionary interest in C. and D., mortgaged them three times. The first mortgage comprised both C. and D.; the second comprised C. only; the third comprised both C. and D., and was subject to the prior mortgages. C. was completely absorbed in satisfying the first mortgage. The proceeds of the sale of D. were paid into court. It was held that the second mortgage must be satisfied in full before payment to the third mortgagee: (Re Mower's Trusts, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 838. M. R.)

SALE OF LAND—AUTHORITY TO TREAT.—B. and C., joint owners of an estate, issued advertisements for the sale of it, by the terms of which intending purchasers were to apply to any one of them "to treat or view the premises." This was held not to authorise any one of the defendants singly to enter into a contract on behalf of the others for sale of the land: (Goodwin v. Brind, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 849. C. P.)

TRUSTEE AND MORTGAGEE—TRUST FOR LIFE — SALE OR FORECLOSURE.—By a deed of settlement certain property was vested in trustees with extensive powers of management, the trustees being also beneficially interested, and it was provided that if either of the trustees paid off any of the charges, he was to be entitled to a charge by way of mortgage. C. T., the managing trustee, paid off a charge and filed his bill in this suit for a foreclosure. The Vice-Chancellor made a decree for a sale in one lot, with a certain reserved price, if the defendants, who asked for the sale, deposited a sum of money for the costs, and in default, for a foreclosure: Held overruling the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, that under the terms of the deed, the direction as to the mortgage did not give any trustee the rights of a mortgagee so as to enable him to foreclose, and so destroy the trust. Independently of this, it is a well-established doctrine that when, as in this case, the duties of a trustee conflict with his personal interest as a mortgagee, the court will control him and not allow him to foreclose, especially when the estate is under his control, and the cestui que trust has no other means of raising money to pay off the mortgage. Decree of the court below altered, and only a decree for sale made: (Tennant v. Trenchard, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 856. L. C.)

RECITALS. (b)

121. Recital of a lease.

Whereas, by an indenture of lease dated on or about, &c., and made between A. B., of the one part, and the said C. D., of the other part, the said A. B. did demise and lease unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, all that, &c. [parcels] to hold the same, with the appurtenances, unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns from the day of 18, for the term of years thence next ensuing, subject to the payment of the yearly rent of £ , by the instalments therein mentioned, and to the observance and performance of the covenants and conditions therein contained, and on the part of the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns to be observed and performed.

122. Recital of a mortgage of lease.

Whereas, by an indenture dated, &c., and made between A. B. of the one part and C. D. of the other part, in consideration of £ paid to the said A. B. by the said C. D., the piece of land described in and demised by the hereinbefore-recited indenture of lease, together with the buildings erected thereon, was assigned unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns for the residue of the said term of years, subject to redemption on payment by the said A. B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, to the said C. D., his executors, administrators, or assigns, of the said sum of £ , with interest for the same after the rate at the time and in the manner therein mentioned.

123. Recital of a second mortgage of lease.

Whereas, by an indenture dated, &c., and made between A. B. of the one part, and C. D. of the other part, the said piece or parcel of land, buildings, and premises, were assigned unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, to hold the same unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for the then residue of the said term of years, subject to the said hereinbefore-recited indenture of, &c. [first mortgage], and to the payment of the said principal sum of £ and interest thereby secured, and subject also to redemption on payment by the said A. B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, to the said C. D., his executors, administrators, or assigns, of the said sum of £ and interest after the rate at the time and in manner therein mentioned.

124. Recital of a transfer of second mortgage of lease.

Whereas, by an indenture, dated, &c., and made between A. B. of the first part, C. D. of the second part, and E. F. of the third part, the said A. B., with the concurrence of the said C. D., did assign unto the said E. F., his executors, administrators, and assigns, the said principal sum of £ owing to the said A. B. on the security of the said indenture of, &c., and the interest then due for the same, and the benefit of all securities in respect thereof, to hold the same unto the said E. F., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own benefit. And by the said indenture now in recital, it was further witnessed that the said A. B., at the request of the said C. D., did assign, and the said C. D. did assign and confirm unto the said E. F., his executors, administrators, and assigns, all the said piece of land, buildings, and premises comprised in the said hereinbefore recited indenture of, &c., to hold the same unto the said E. F., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for the residue of the said term of years, created by the said hereinbefore recited indenture of lease, but subject to the said indenture of, &c. [first mortgage], and to the payment of the principal moneys and interest intended to be thereby secured upon trust, to sell and receive the purchase-moneys, and apply the same (after satisfying the costs and expenses of the now-recited indenture and the costs of sale) in payment of the sum therein mentioned and interest thereon, and also such other moneys (if any) as might be advanced by the said E. F. to or on account of or might become due to him from or by the said C. D., his executors or administrators, with interest, and to pay any surplus of the said moneys unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, or assigns.

(b) As to the object, shape, and advantage of recitals generally, see Barry's Conveyancing, pp. 185-7, where the subject is ably discussed; also 1 David Conv. pp. 41, et seq., 49, 50; and pp. 557, 558.

125. Recital of no sale having taken place under power contained in mortgage.

Whereas no sale has taken place under or by virtue of the trust for sale contained in the lastly recited indenture.

126. Recital of bankruptcy of lessee.

Whereas the said A. B., being then a prisoner for debt in Her Majesty's prison at , was, on the day of 18 , adjudicated a bankrupt by a registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy at , attending the said prison, who directed that the said bankruptcy should be prosecuted in the Court of Bankruptcy for the district.

127. Recital of appointment of creditors' assignee.

Whereas the said A. B. was, on the day of 18 , duly elected by the creditors, and appointed by the Court of Bankruptcy for the district creditors' assignee of the estate and effects of the said C. D.

128. Recital of a contract and subcontract for sale.

Whereas the said A. B. has agreed with the said C. D. for the sale to him of the said piece of land, buildings, and premises for the residue now unexpired of the said term of years, with the appurtenances free from incumbrances at the price of £ , and the said C. D., without having taken any assignment to himself, has agreed with the concurrence of the said A. B. to assign all his right and interest in the premises unto the said E. F.

129. Recital of amounts due on mortgages and agreement to pay off same out of purchase-money.

Whereas the said respective sums of £ and £ are now due and owing to the said A. B. and C. D. respectively, but all interest for the same has been paid up to the date of these presents, and it has been agreed that such sums respectively shall be paid off out of the said purchase-money or sum of £ , and that the said A. B. and C. D. shall join in these presents in manner hereinafter appearing.

130. Recital of a contract with party deceased.

Whereas the said A. B. some time since agreed with C. D., now deceased, for the absolute sale to him of the said hereditaments subject as hereinafter mentioned for the sum of £ , which sum was paid by the said C. D. in his lifetime to the said A. B. as he doth hereby admit, but no conveyance of the said hereditaments was made to the said C. D.

131. Recital of a will and devise of residue.

Whereas the said A. B. duly made and executed his last will in manner then by law required for passing freehold estates by devise (a), dated, &c., whereby, after making certain specific devises and bequests as therein contained, he gave, devised, and bequeathed all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, real and personal, unto the said C. D., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns upon certain trusts thereafter mentioned concerning the same.

132. Recital of codicils not affecting general devise.

Whereas the said testator made two codicils to his said will dated respectively, &c., but neither of such codicils affected the general devise of the residuary real and personal estate made by the said will.

133. Recital of death and probate of will and codicils.

Whereas the said testator died on the day of 18 without having altered or revoked his said will, except so far as the same was altered or revoked by the said codicils thereto, and without altering or revoking the said codicils, and the said will and codicils were duly proved in the Registry of Her Majesty's Court of Probate on the day of 18 by the said A. B.

(a) This is unnecessary in the recital of a will made on or since Jan. 1, 1838.

134. Recital of request to convey.

Whereas the said A. B. has requested the said C. D. to convey and assure to him the fee simple and inheritance of the hereditaments so contracted to be sold to the said E. F., deceased, which the said C. D. has agreed to do subject as hereinafter mentioned.

135. Recital of a judgment obtained against mortgagor.

Whereas the said A. B. is indebted to the said C. D. in the sum of £ , for which sum the said A. B. has obtained a judgment against the said C. D. in Her Majesty's Court of , and the said C. D. has applied to the said A. B. to forbear issuing an execution thereon which he has agreed to do upon having the payment of the said debt with interest secured in manner hereinafter appearing.

136. Recital of an action having been commenced against mortgagor.

Whereas the said A. B. is indebted to the said C. D. in the sum of £ , and the said C. D. having applied to him for payment of the same sum, but without effect, the said C. D., on the day of 18 , commenced an action against the said A. B. in Her Majesty's Court of , which action the said C. D. has consented to stay on the said A. B. giving security for the payment of the said sum of £ and interest for the same in manner hereinafter appearing.

137. Recital of liability on promissory notes.

Whereas the said A. B. has become liable to Y. Z., on a promissory note for £ and interest payable on demand, at the request of and as surety for and jointly with the said C. D., and is also liable on another promissory note to the said Y. Z. for the sum of £ and interest payable and made in like manner, and the said A. B. having required security for the payment of any moneys which he may at any time be required or called upon to pay to the said Y. Z., or to any other person or persons for or on account of the said C. D., in respect of the said promissory notes respectively or otherwise, the said C. D. has agreed to give such security in manner hereinafter appearing.

138. Recital of a policy of life assurance.

Whereas by a policy of assurance, dated, &c., the Assurance Company assured to the said A. B. the sum of £ , to be paid to his executors, administrators, or assigns, within calendar months next after satisfactory proof of the death of him, the said A. B., at or under the annual premium of £ .

138*. Recital of a mortgage of policy of life assurance.

Whereas by an indenture dated, &c., and made between the said A. B. of the one part, and C. D. of the other part, in consideration of the sum of £ then due by the said A. B. to the said C. D., the said A. B. did assign and transfer unto the said C. D., his executors, administrators, and assigns the said policy and all sums of money which should or might at any time become payable under or by virtue thereof, subject to redemption on payment by the said A. B., his executors, administrators, or assigns to the said C. D., his executors, administrators, or assigns of the said sum of £ with interest after the rate of £ per cent. per annum, without deduction.

139. Recital of a contract for purchase of policy of life assurance.

Whereas the said A. B. hath contracted and agreed with the said C. D. for the absolute sale to him of the said policy of assurance, and the moneys and advantages thereby secured free from incumbrances at the price of £ .

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—COMPANY TAKING OVER A BUSINESS—CREDITORS OF THE OLD FIRM.—Where a new partner is introduced into an established firm, or a new firm is constituted in place of it, and a creditor, with knowledge of all the facts, continues his dealings with the firm, his assent to a substitution of the liability of the new firm for that of the old will be inferred upon slight circumstances; but slight circumstances will not lead to any such inference in a case where the creditor has, four months after the substitution of the new firm, distinctly asserted that his dealings were with the old firm exclusively, and that he has no knowledge of the new firm in the transaction. And where advances were agreed to be made by G. to S. and K., whose business was, after the payment of the first advance, taken over by a limited company, in which G. was an original shareholder, and the bills were drawn on G. by S. and K., and the advances carried to S. and K.'s account with G. and Co. their bankers, it was not enough, in the face of such a declaration as is mentioned above, to substitute the company for S. and K., that G. applied to the company for payment of interest due, and received it from the company, and that the banking balance of S. and K. in G. and Co.'s books was carried over to the credit of the limited company: (Re Smith, Knight and Co., 20 L. T. Rep. N.S. 835. L. J.J.)

COMPROMISE BETWEEN CREDITORS AND CONTRIBUTORIES.—In prospect of litigation, a scheme for a compromise between the company and the contributories was proposed and assented to by the majority, but there were a few dissentients—the terms were that the creditors should accept 17s. in the pound. The court held that it had power to sanction such a compromise: (Re Commercial Bank of India, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 839. M.R.)

ULTRA VIRES—MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS—REPAYMENT.—The objects of a joint-stock company (limited) were declared by the articles of association to be "for carrying on the business of a bill broker and scrivener, the drawing, accepting, endorsing, discounting and rediscounting bills of exchange and promissory notes; the making advances and procuring loans on, and the investing in, securities; the borrowing and lending of money, the guaranteeing payment of bills of exchange, promissory notes, and advances, and the doing all such things as the directors should consider incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects. The company, by a resolution of the board of directors, agreed to assist a joint-stock banking company by taking 3000 shares in such banking company, and as a consideration for a transfer and registration of those shares to nominees of the directors of the discount company, they drew cheques amounting to 30,000l. on the bankers of the company, which were duly paid. This transaction the directors alleged was duly entered into with a view of promoting and increasing the business of their company, but the true character of the transaction was not entered in their cash book, but was described as "loans" to the banking company: Held, that such a transaction was ultra vires of the directors of the Discount Company: Held also that it was a breach of trust, and the 30,000l. paid into court by the defendants, the directors, forthwith: (London Joint-Stock Discount Company v. Brown, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 844. V.C.J.)

LIABILITY OF RAILWAYS—NEGLIGENCE.—B., a passenger, while trying to fasten the door while the train was in motion, fell out and was injured. The fastening was in an improper state. But it was held not to have been negligence so directly the cause of the accident as to make the company responsible, or to be a case for the consideration of the jury: (Adams v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 850. C.P.)

LIABILITY OF SUBSCRIBERS OF A MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION.—The Master of the Rolls has just decided in Pell's case, re Heyford Iron Works Company, a point as to the liability of subscribers to a memorandum of association. Mr. Pell, who was the owner of the Heyford Works, subscribed the memorandum for 1500 shares of 20l. each; but inasmuch as by the articles of association, part of the price of the works was to be received in 1350 paid-up shares, he contended that he was only liable as a contributory on 150 shares—the 1350 being part of the 1500 for which he subscribed the memorandum. The Master of the Rolls took a different view, holding in effect that the signature to the memorandum made him liable, and that the mention of the 1350 shares in the subsequent articles of association must be taken as a subsequent matter. The idea of promoters, we fear, has hitherto been with Mr. Pell; but more care will in future be taken of what is done in memorandums, with the effect of diminishing perhaps the worst class of such undertakings.

WHAT IS LACHES IN A COMPANY.—According to a decision of Vice-Chancellor James—Re the European Central Railway Company (Parsons' case)—a company may suffer by laches in rectifying the register as well as the individual shareholders. In this case Mr. Parsons had executed a transfer of twenty shares to one Spong—a lad of 16, employed as a messenger in a bank at 12s. per week—to whose acceptance as a shareholder, in Nov. 1864, two months after the transfer, the directors of the company intimated their objections. In May 1865, however, they sued Spong for calls unsuccessfully, the plea of infancy being taken; and no further steps were taken till in Jan. 1868, the company was ordered to be wound-up. The attempt was now made to make Parsons liable, but it was held that the proof of laches was conclusive, and the summons against Parsons was dismissed. The decision of Vice-Chancellor Stuart, in Re the Ottoman Financial Association (Limited) (Cheetham's case), is apparently in a contrary direction to this on the very same point, what is laches in a company? The plaintiff, Mr. Cheetham had in June 1865 sold fifty shares through his broker to Mr. White, who paid a call of 5l. per share in November following. On 6th March 1866 a resolution for winding-up was agreed to, and on the 3rd Nov. following Mr. White paid a call of 5l. by the official liquidator. The present case arose out of a third call in April 1868, which Mr. White was unable to pay. The official liquidator discovering, according to his own account in November, according to Cheetham's in July, that White was an infant at the time of the transfer, obtained an order in April 1869, for restoring Cheetham's name to the register. It was urged on behalf of Mr. Cheetham "that the sale of the shares had been open and bona fide; that the constitution of the company provided for an infant being a shareholder; and that, after having treated Mr. White, who did not, now that he was of age, repudiate his liability as a shareholder for two years and upwards, the company were too late in the steps they had taken against himself." But, notwithstanding, the Vice-Chancellor did not consider there had been such laches on the part of the company as to constitute acquiescence. The case is undoubtedly weaker than the one we have just noticed, but the difference of the judgment may show the difficulty of drawing the line between circumstances which imply laches and those which do not.—Economist.

MERCANTILE LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE—PRIVITY.—The plaintiffs were the drawers of a bill of exchange for 738l. 17s. 6d., at four months, which was accepted by K. The defendants were K's bankers, carrying on business at Rochdale, and the plaintiffs alleged that it was K's custom, whenever moneys or drafts were paid by him to his current account, to direct that such moneys should be placed to the credit of that account, but that whenever he paid moneys for the specific purpose of meeting bills of exchange, it was customary for him to pay such moneys with an understanding to that effect. When the bill became due, K, requiring funds to meet it, applied to the plaintiffs, who advanced him 150l., and this sum, together with the balance of the amount due, was paid into the defendants' bank at Rochdale, by K's clerk, the day before the bill became due at the London agents of the defendants' bank, with an advice note of the bill, and with a request to the defendants to order payment thereof, and the defendants so advised their London agents. On the following day, however, the defendants heard of the sudden death of K., who was at the time indebted to them upon his general account in about 5000l., and they immediately telegraphed to London to stop payment of the bill, which was returned to the plaintiffs dishonoured, and was afterwards paid by them. They instituted this suit for a declaration that the defendants received the amount of the bill upon trust, that it was their duty to have applied the same in payment of the bill, and that they were liable to make good the amount, and indemnify the plaintiffs against all damages and costs occasioned by the dishonour of the bill. Bill dismissed, the court holding, in accordance with Moore v. Bushell, 27 L. J. 3, Ex., that there was no privity between the drawers of the bill and the bankers, but expressing its opinion that on the merits of the case it was wholly against the conduct of the defendants in causing the dishonour of the bill: (Hill v. Royds, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 842. V.C. M.)

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.—Post-nuptial settlements, if the Bankruptcy Bill becomes law, will be subject to more stringent regulations than before; but the case of Hammonds v. Barrett, just decided by Vice-Chancellor Stuart under the old law, may nevertheless be of interest. It shows at least the strength of the anxiety which people in trade have to avoid paying their creditors, and to secure the profits of trade without extreme risk to themselves or their families. The settlement in this case was of 4000l. by a brother of Mrs. Barrett, and of 990l. brought in by Mr. Barrett—part of what had been a legacy to Mrs. Barrett. The settlement was to Mrs. Barrett for life and to

Mr. Barrett for life or until he became bankrupt; and it was contended in the bankruptcy that as to the 990l. at least he could not so settle it as to retain an interest defeasible on the bankruptcy. The Vice-Chancellor, however, held that he could do so as the money had been his wife's, and the brother of Mrs. Barrett was fairly entitled to ask in settling 4000l. that that money also should go to the children in the event of Barrett's bankruptcy. In this way the creditors are made to lose for the benefit of a bankrupt's wife and children. The law may be erroneous which gives a husband all his wife's property, but we do not like its being got rid of by a side-wind, and a settlement allowed where a settlement of the husband's own property would be prevented. If equities are to be regarded the creditors have quite as good a claim for consideration as the wife and children, and we are inclined to think a better claim. On general principles the law should discourage as much as possible the ingenious processes by which a man's family is separated from his risks, and by which it is contrived that he shall himself avoid suffering.—Economist.

MARITIME LAW

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

COLLISION—PERSON IN CHARGE—COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.—Two steam vessels came into collision, and one proceeded on her voyage without offering to render assistance to the other; the former had a pilot by compulsion of law on board, but the collision was not caused solely through his misconduct: Held, that the exemption of the owners of the former vessel by reason of having on board a pilot by compulsion of law was not affected by the above section. Semble, that the master is the "person in charge" for the purpose of rendering assistance after a collision: (The Queen, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 855. Adm. Ct.)

SALVAGE.—In the case of the Ganges, where there was a question of the distribution of salvage, the Admiralty Court have supported the custom of the Great Yarmouth Standard Steam Tug Company to divide salvage among the entire fleet. The fleet is specially maintained to save vessels. The question arose through the temporary employment of the plaintiff as master of the ship when the services were rendered; but it was proved that he was cognisant of the custom, and it was applied to him, the court, after some hesitation, affirming that the practice was permissible under the Merchant Shipping Acts.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

GENERAL EXAMINATION.

MICHAELMAS TERM 1869.

The Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the general examination of students of the Inns of Court.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, and twenty-five guineas per annum each respectively, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each general examination, and one such exhibition shall be conferred on the student who obtains the second position; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations; and the Inns of Court to which such students as aforesaid belong, may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship, exhibition, or certificate, unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a general examination, and either obtained a studentship, an exhibition, or a certificate of honour at such examination shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures and classes of two of the readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

"That not more than four terms under any circumstances be dispensed with in favour of students coming from India, or the colonies, with a view to return to residence there, and that it is not expedient to dispense with any terms for such students except on the following conditions, viz.:

"1. That students from India do satisfactorily pass an examination in Hindu and Mahomedan law, the Indian Penal Code, the Code of Civil Procedure, the Intestate and Testamentary Act, and in such other codes or Acts as may from time to time become law in British India; and, in addition to such examination, do pass such examinations, and abide by all such rules and regulations as are now in force for students seeking a pass certificate, by examination, for call to the Bar."

"2. That students from the colonies do pass such an examination as is required, and do abide by all such rules and regulations as are now in force, in order to obtain a certificate of honour."

"3. Provided that each of the four Inns of Court be at liberty to dispense with the above conditions in such very special circumstances as they may think fit, and that such circumstances be stated in the certificate of call to the Bar given to every such student. The Benchers of each Inn, subject to the foregoing limitations; being guided, in the dispensations of terms, by the circumstances of each particular case."

Rules for the Examination of Candidates for Honours, or Certificates, entitling Students to be called to the Bar.

An examination will be held in next Michaelmas Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship, an exhibition, or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination, will be required to enter his name at the Treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs, on or before Thursday, the 21st October next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship, exhibition, or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Thursday, the 28th October next, and will be continued on the Friday and Saturday following, except as regards Hindu Law, &c., to be held on Monday, the 1st Nov.

It will take place in the hall of Lincoln's Inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Thursday morning, the 28th October, at ten, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at two, on Equity.

Friday morning, the 29th October, at ten, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at two, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Saturday morning, the 30th October, at ten, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at two, a paper will be given to the students, including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

Monday morning, the 1st November, at ten, on Hindu and Mahomedan law, and on the laws of India.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Saturday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary according as the student is a candidate for honours, or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned; regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship or exhibition, but only at the general examination immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

The Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

COUNTY COURTS.

CAMELFORD COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, July 22.

(Before MATHEW FORTESCUE, Esq., Judge.)

HUMPHRY BRYANT JEWELL v. JOHN TREASE AND OTHERS.

In equity—Suit for partition.

This was a suit for partition, possibly the first in the County Courts, under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 40, s. 12.

Peter, of Launceston, solicitor, represented all parties, and the cause was heard as a consent cause. The plaintiff stated that the plaintiff was seized in fee simple in possession of one moiety of a close of land called Old Park, otherwise Olda Park Meadow, situate in the parish of St. Gennys, in the county of Cornwall, and within the jurisdiction of the court; that the defendants claimed to be seized of the other moiety on certain trusts under the will of John Smeeth, which were set forth; explained the devolution of the title to this moiety, &c.; stated that the value of the fee of the entirety of the close did not exceed 500*l.*, and submitted that the plaintiff was entitled to have the said close partitioned, so that one moiety thereof might be held by him, his heirs and assigns in severalty. The prayer was that the close might be partitioned between the plaintiff and the defendants, so that the respective shares might be held in severalty by the respective parties, and their heirs and assigns respectively with all consequential directions, &c. Or, that if it appeared to the court that a sale of the said close, and a distribution or the proceeds of such sale would be more beneficial to the parties interested, then plaintiff prayed for such sale; application for a receiver, provision for costs, and further relief if necessary.

Four of the defendants were infants beneficially interested. The three first named in the plaint were executors of, and residuary devisees under, the will of the ancestor in title of the defendants.

Peter accordingly moved on petition of infants and affidavit of their mother as to fitness for assignment of adult defendants as guardians, ad litem to the infants, and the order was made.

The certificate of valuer, with plan annexed, and assent of all parties to proposed terms of partition, having been put in and filed, decree on terms of certificate was moved for and passed.

The decree, as passed, contained the necessary declaration that the infant defendants were trustees of the portion to be conveyed to the plaintiff within the intent and meaning of the Trustee Act 1850 (Bowra v. Wright, 4 De G. & Sim. 265). It further provided for the execution of the conveyance by the guardians on behalf of the infants, and for the vesting of the interests of the infants in plaintiff on execution of such conveyance, under sect. 7 of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60. Deeds to be produced as court should order, &c. Liberty to apply.

NEWBURY COUNTY COURT.

(Before H. J. STONOR, Esq., Judge.)

THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF THE BOROUGH OF NEWBURY v. FIDLER.

County Courts have no jurisdiction to try the right to a court leet, or the legality of amercements without consent.

This was an action for the recovery of 30*s.*, being three fines of 10*s.* each, amerced by the Court Leet of the borough of Newbury. The defendant is a brickmaker in the parish of Thatcham, and the fines were inflicted in consequence of certain encroachments or trespasses in the Marsh.

W. H. Cave appeared on behalf of the plaintiffs, and Pinniger for the defendant.

Cave said he believed that Mr. Pinniger was going to contend that the case was not within the jurisdiction of the court.

Pinniger observed that this was not an ordinary action for the recovery of a small sum of money claimed; but, on the contrary, involved the question of the plaintiffs' title to the franchise, which they claimed. Under the first County Court Act (1846), and the subsequent Acts, this court had no authority to try the title or right to the franchise without the consent of both parties; and he contended that there was no way of deciding the question at issue without bringing before the court the title or right to the franchise.

His HONOUR.—The first question in my consideration is, whether the title to a franchise is bona fide at issue.

Pinniger argued that the existence of the franchise must be adduced, and on that ground alone he questioned his Honour's jurisdiction.

His HONOUR.—If this franchise has been clearly exercised uninterruptedly, and without any kind of opposition whatever for a considerable period, a person merely saying that the franchise is not legal will not put the title in issue.

Cave.—You must show that the title is really in issue.

His HONOUR thought he had better hear the plaintiff's case, and then it would appear whether the title was in issue or not.

Pinniger said that if the case were gone into he should require such proof to be given of the facts as would be necessary in a Superior Court, and if it were gone into in that way his Honour would be occupied a very long time.

His HONOUR.—Of course everything must be proved in the strictest manner.

Pinniger.—If these fines have been amerced by the jury of the court leet, they ought to have gone into the hands of the "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses." I have heard Mr. Cave complain that that has not been the case when I had the honour of sitting at the council board.

Cave.—Perhaps Mr. Pinniger himself has partaken sometimes of the result of these fines (laughter). The fact is that the Liberal borough of Newbury does not pay their court leet. The fines, first of all, are supposed to go towards the necessary expenses of the court, and the residue (if any) ought to be handed over to the corporation. They (the court leet) have managed from time to time to spend the whole amount, and so there was no surplus to hand over. The plaintiffs were not bound to show the existence of the custom immemorial, but if he (Mr. Cave) assured his Honour of its existence for a reasonable period he had no doubt that the custom would be enforced. In order to explain the case, Mr. Cave commenced reading from the History of Newbury as follows:—"In the reign of King John the manor of Newbury belonged to the Earl of Perche, and was then confiscated to the Crown. In the Norman roll in the Tower, A.D. 1204, the manor was extended. The manor was regranted to the Earl of Perche, and afterwards passed through a variety of hands up to the time of Edward IV., when it reverted to the Crown, and by a grant of the first year (Charles I.) in consideration of 50*l.*, and an annual payment of 25*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, it was granted to the corporation of Newbury, and the Crown has continued to receive from the corporation the above sum." He should show also that it had been the custom of the manor to hold a court leet at certain periods, to see if any encroachments or trespasses had been made or committed, and to amerce the defaulters accordingly. On the last presentation (1868) the court leet fined the defendant in three sums of 10*s.*, for as many offences, and these were admitted. They now sued for the fines. When he (Mr. Cave) had called his witnesses, he thought he should have made out a prima facie case for the defendant, if possible, to answer.

Mr. Charles Henry Beckhouson was then sworn, and stated that he was clerk to Mr. Graham (town clerk). He had attended the court leet meetings for the past fifteen years. He produced the presentments of that body from time to time made. The corporation have acted as lords of the manor for the past thirty years, to his knowledge. He had searched for the original grant, but it was well known that it was lost; under that grant the rent of 20*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* was reserved, and it was paid every year. The last payment was in November last, by cheque sent to Mr. Benyon, and a receipt was sent back; it passed through witness's hands. The rent was sold by auction by the Crown, and Mr. Benyon became the purchaser. He produced the presentments of the court leet for the years 1799, 1844-50-54-60-68. All the intermediate ones were at the office of the town clerk. Witness attended the last meeting of the court leet in 1868, and acted at that time as deputy steward of the manor. Mr. Graham (town clerk) was steward of the court leet and court baron.

A portion of the presentment imposing the amercements in question on the defendant was then read, and also another portion stating that these amercements of 10*s.* were customary.

Cave, on looking at the presentment for 1799 and other earlier ones, observed that the word "customary" was not contained in them, but not a doubt existed that the amercement in question was reasonable and legal. This was his contention.

His HONOUR observed that the payment of 10*s.* could not be customary on account of the change in the value of money, and that point had been decided.

The witness in cross examination said: We can produce all the intermediate documents from 1799 to 1844 if you wish it. I only brought these for convenience. The court leet hold their meetings annually. I remember the case of Tucker some twenty years ago, when the question was raised whether an escheat which occurred in Newbury appertained to the lord of the manor of Donnington or of Newbury. Some years ago there was great neglect, and encroachments were made, and as they had existed for a considerable period they were allowed. With these exceptions parties have paid these amercements pretty well, but still there were two or three persons who persisted in objecting to pay, and no legal proceedings have ever been taken against them. Mr. Graham has been steward since about 1852, and he has presided at the greater number of the court leet meetings since that time. At those at which I have presided I have had no written appointment. The other defaulters mentioned in the last presentment were not amerced on account of the corporation having consented to a new road in that locality, towards which the said defaulters had subscribed.

His HONOUR having referred to the statutes, said that he thought that the title of a franchise was bona fide at issue, and that clearly he had no jurisdiction without the consent of the defendant, which was withheld. By the County Court Act 1846, s. 58, the County Court had no jurisdiction as to franchises or the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments. By the County Court Act 1856, s. 25, power was given to the court to try questions as to franchises or any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments with the consent of both parties. By the County Court Act 1867, ss. 11, 12, the court has power to try questions of title as to corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments not exceeding the annual value of 20*l.*, but this clause did not, in his opinion, extend to franchises, or, at all events, to franchises like the present, the annual value of which it was impossible to estimate. He, therefore, held that the court had no jurisdiction, and therefore he could make no order.

Cave.—If then the title to the franchise is at issue, we are justified in going to a Superior Court.

His HONOUR.—Clearly.

Cave.—Thank you, sir, that is all we want.

Pinniger applied for the attorney's fees, as he said it was a case of no ordinary nature. It was a far more difficult case to get up than a mere action for debt.

Cave objected, and said it was merely an action to recover a debt.

His HONOUR took the view of Mr. Pinniger, and advised Mr. Cave to allow the attorney's fee. The fee (15*s.*) was then allowed.

At the Stafford Assizes Samuel Foulkes, late clerk to the registrar of the Wolverhampton County Court, was sentenced to five years' penal servitude for embezzling 1600*l.*, fees and cash received from suitors.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

OFFENCES IN DIFFERENT DIOCESES.—PRACTICE.—COURT OF ARCHES.—In articles against a clerk, offences of incontinency were charged to have been committed in the dioceses of Lincoln and London. The clerk was benefited in the diocese of Lincoln, and the Bishop of Lincoln sent the case by letters of request to the Arches Court in the first instance: Held, that though where there has been a commission of inquiry, which has limited its investigation to a particular offence, the articles afterwards exhibited cannot add to the offence inquired into by the commission; another offence committed in another diocese that did not come within the scope of this inquiry; yet there is no objection to coupling in the articles offences committed in different dioceses, where the bishop sends the case by letters of request to the Court of Arches in the first instance. The Church Discipline Act by sect. 20 requires only that the corpus delicti on which the clerk is to be judged shall be shown to have been committed within two years before the service of the citation; but evidence of matters anterior to that period is not thereby excluded: (Edwards v. Moss, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 834. Priv. Co.)

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.—The Lords' Select Committee have adopted Lord Shaftesbury's Bill, and not that of the Archbishop of Canterbury, but have made some amendments in the Bill. They have struck out the clauses which proposed the trial of disputed facts before assessors or juries, three clergymen, and three magistrates. Early in the deliberations of the committee the subject of prosecutions of the clergy came under consideration, and the committee proceeded by resolutions. On the motion of Lord Carnarvon it was resolved that it be open to the laity as well as the clergy to prosecute in all cases of offences against the laws ecclesiastical. The same peer then proposed that it be resolved that, before the institution of such a suit, the consent of the bishop be obtained, with an appeal, in case of his refusal, to the archbishop; but Lord Cairns moved, as an amendment, that "suits against clerks for offences against the laws ecclesiastical shall be commenced either by the bishop of his own motion, or by three members of the Church, being inhabitant householders of the diocese: provided always, that, in the case of a charge of teaching or maintaining unsound doctrine, a written statement of the particulars on which such charge is founded shall, in the first place, be laid before the bishop, who may, if he shall think that such statement does not contain sufficient prima facie ground for proceeding, refuse his assent to the institution of the suit, subject, however, to an appeal against such refusal to the archbishop; and the appellant may appear before the archbishop either in person or by counsel on his behalf in support of the appeal." Lord Carnarvon's resolution was negatived by a vote of eight against five. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol moved to leave out "diocese;" in Lord Cairns' resolution and insert "parish;" but the motion was rejected by five against four. The Marquis of Salisbury proposed to include among the prosecutions requiring the bishop's assent such as are for "any offence against the directions of the Book of Common Prayer;" but this motion was lost on a division by ten against three. Lord Cairns' clause being on a later day formally proposed, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol moved to leave out the words "in the case of a charge of teaching or maintaining unsound doctrine;" but the motion was rejected by seven against three. The bishop then proposed, after "doctrine," to add "or of contravening the directions of the Book of Common Prayer for the performance of Divine service and the administration of the Sacraments according to the usage of the Church of England;" but the motion was rejected by eight against three. No one seems to have proposed to define the phrase, "members of the Church of England;" yet its meaning will have to be ascertained, and if it could be stated in the interpretation clause, which defines thirty-seven other terms used in the Bill, heavy expenses might be saved. The clause authorising rules and orders to be made by the two archbishops, and directing that the rules and orders be submitted to Her Majesty in Council for confirmation, is of a very comprehensive character. Earl Beauchamp made an unsuccessful attempt to have it directed that the rules and orders be laid before Parliament also. Lord Westbury obtained the addition of a proviso allowing any person affected by such rules and orders to petition to be heard before the council. The rules and orders may alter and regulate the fees on marriage licences, the abolition of which is recommended by the Marriage Law Commission. The Bill directed that such fees shall in no case exceed 40s., exclusive of stamp duty; but, on the motion of the Archbishop of York, this limitation has been struck out, the committee dividing seven against six. Lord Beauchamp proposed clauses applying to suits against bishops for offences against the laws ecclesiastical; but the clauses were rejected by a vote of five against three. The Bill now contains 113 clauses. One of them provides that on proceedings being commenced against a clergyman for "any offence" against the laws ecclesiastical he may be inhibited from performing the services of the church pending the proceedings if it appears to the bishop that scandal is likely to arise from his continuing to perform such services.

REGULATIONS OF THE INNS OF COURT.—The Regulations of the Inns of Court enact that "no attorney-at-law, solicitor, &c., and no clerk of or to any barrister, attorney, solicitor, &c. shall be admitted as a student at any inn of court for the purpose of being called to the Bar, &c., until such person shall have entirely and bona fide ceased to act or practise in any of the capacities above named or described; and if on the rolls of any court, shall have taken his name off the rolls thereof." But there is no regulation enacting that any tailor, barber, or draper, &c., before being admitted as a student shall give up his business of tailor, barber, draper, &c. Surely this is unfair, and presses hardly upon those whose whole life has been spent in the study of the law, and who would therefore reflect more credit on the Bar and on the country at large than any number of tailors and barbers. These latter might, indeed, be able to adjust their respective gowns and wigs with greater nicety than a poor attorney who has had no experience in such things; but in matters of law I doubt whether the tailor or barber with his three years' study would be comparable with the despised attorney or his clerk. The case is this:—A tradesman who wishes to raise himself in the scale of society by being called to the Bar is permitted to carry on his business during his studentship; but this privilege is denied the attorney or attorney's clerk who, before entering his name as a student, must give up his employment which, unless he have private fortune, he cannot afford to do. C. B.

[The reason of the regulation is obvious, namely, as nearly as possible to place men on an equal footing on going to the Bar. As it is, solicitors going to the Bar have an immense advantage, and unless the general system is to be changed, we do not see that, in fairness to those already at the Bar, the concession referred to should be made.—ED.]

FINAL EXAMINATION.—I am about to commence reading for my final examination, and having no one to assist me, I should be glad if you or any of your correspondents would kindly trace out a course of study for me to pursue. And at the same time to mention the most useful books for me to read with a view to passing in all the subjects required by such examination. STUDENS.

PASTURAGE ON HIGHWAYS.—I have noticed the explanations which you afforded in your issue of the 17th inst. to my letter from the Wisbech Advertiser, and infer from them that where the owner of the herbage has a keeper with his cattle who keeps them off the "central or gravelled" part, he cannot be lawfully convicted for their "straying," but I apprehend there would not be much difficulty in obtaining a conviction under the old law (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), for "wilfully obstructing the free passage of a highway," in which I am strengthened by Cockburn, C. J., who is reported to have said in Freestone v. Casswell, "it is well settled that a passenger along a highway may, if he pleases, walk or ride over these strips of grass, and they are part of the highway." I beg therefore to repeat my conviction that the owners of herbage by the sides of our ordinary highways, can only lawfully enjoy that herbage by mowing it. OBSERVER.

[A passenger has a right of way undoubtedly, but the existence of a right of way does not prevent the owner from taking the benefit of his land in any way he pleases which does not destroy the right of way or obstruct its exercise. The decision of Cockburn, C. J. simply decides that a passenger may walk on the strips of grass, not that he may, by insisting on passing over them, exclude the owner from pasturing his cattle there.—ED.]

61. DRAWING LEASES.—In drawing leases (and the same remark applies to conveyances) under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 124, must the number of sections be placed consecutively for the sake of conformity, or numbered as in the Act. For instance, take the first three covenants:—1. That the said lessee covenants with the said lessors to pay the rent. 2. And to pay taxes. 3. And to repair. Presuming the second covenant is omitted, would No. 3 covenant be described as No. 2 or No. 3?

LEX.

62. BANKRUPTCY.—SALARY IN LIEU OF NOTICE.—A and B, solicitors and co-partners, verbally engaged C, as conveying clerk, at a certain salary with a stipulation that two months' notice should be given by either party, to determine the engagement. A and B suddenly suspended business and absconded in insolvent circumstances, leaving their estate to be wound-up by their creditors. A petition in bankruptcy was immediately filed by one of the creditors, but owing to a difficulty arising which prevented an adjudication being made the proceedings became in effect nugatory, the obstacle being of a nature which could not be surmounted. Since the filing of the petition a clue to the whereabouts of the absconding debtors has been obtained (they being in the United States), and a power of attorney has been prepared and sent out for execution by them, but same has not yet been returned. A month's salary, being all that was due to C, up to the day of filing the petition, has been paid to him by a relative of A and B, and a simple receipt given for same; but C purposes sending in to, and threatening to enforce a claim against, the persons appointed to act under the power of attorney, for two months' salary in lieu of notice. Will any of your able correspondents kindly say whether (in case the estate is wound-up either in bankruptcy or under the power of attorney), C's claim is enforceable as a preferential claim, or whether he can only prove for same? And if his position would be in anywise improved by there being no further proceedings taken in bankruptcy? P.

63. CONVEYANCE.—MARRIED WOMAN.—In a conveyance by mortgagee under a power of sale (the purchase money being less than the amount due under the mortgage), exercised at the request of the mortgagors, who joined simply for the purpose of testifying such request, two of the mortgagors are married women. Is it necessary they should acknowledge the deed in the usual manner? A. J. H.

Answers.

(Q. 56.) WILL.—PERPETUITY.—I think that under the will the copyholds stood limited to B. for life, with remainder to her children successively, according to seniority, for their respective lives, with remainder to C. for life, with remainder to her children successively, according to seniority, for their respective lives, with remainder to D., in fee. Assuming that the custom of the manor admits of an entail, it cannot be successfully argued, Parr v. Swindells 4 Russ. 283, and Doe v. Gallant, 3 Ad. & El. 340, that by force of the words "and from and after the decease of all and every the said children or issue of the said B.," B. took an estate tail expectant upon the life estate of her last surviving child. The children or issue on whose decease B. and her children are to take are "the said children or issue," and the only issue previously mentioned are the children to whom life estates were limited. "Issue," therefore, appears to be used by the testator as an idle tautological synonym for "children." The cases of Walker v. Petchell, 1 C. B. 652; Doe d. Goodright v. Dunham, Doug. 264; Malcolm v. Taylor, 2 R. & M. 416; and Baker v. Tucker, 3 H. of L. Cas. 406, may be referred to. The ultimate remainder limited to D., if undisposed of by him, of course descended on his customary heir. If contrary to the view which I entertain B. should be held to have taken an estate tail vested sub modo, i.e., subject to open and let in the life estates in remainder, C. must of course be held to have taken an estate in remainder expectant on B.'s estate tail, and similar to it, and B. having never barred the remainder, C. would be now tenant for life, with remainder to her children successively, according to seniority, for their respective lives, with remainder to herself in tail. I do not, however, think that there is the least chance that such a construction can prevail. Z. Y.

THE COURTS & COURT PAPERS.

CHANCERY NOTICE.

During the Vacation, all applications to the Court of Chancery which are of an urgent nature are to be made to or at the chambers of the Vice-Chancellor Sir William Milbourne James.

All applications ex parte are to be sent to the Vice-Chancellor James, by book-post or parcel, prepaid, accompanied with the brief of counsel, endorsed with the terms of the order applied for, and an envelope capable of receiving the papers to be returned, with sufficient stamps affixed thereon, and addressed as follows:—"To the Registrar in Vacation, Chancery Registrar's Office, Chancery-lane, London, W.C."

On applications for injunctions or writs of ne exeat regno, there must be sent, in addition to the above, a copy of the bill, a certificate of bill filed, and office copies of the affidavits in support of the application.

The papers sent to the Vice-Chancellor, with any order his Honour may make thereon, will be returned direct to the registrar.

All applications for leave to give notice of motion only, may be made to the chief clerk at chambers.

The chambers of the Vice-Chancellor James will be open on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday in each week from eleven till one o'clock.

The Vice-Chancellor's address can be obtained on application at his Honour's chambers, 11, New-square, Lincoln's-inn.

SURREY SUMMER ASSIZE, 1869.

NOTICE.—ENTRY OF CAUSES.

Causes can be entered provisionally at the office of the Clerk of Assize for the Home Circuit, in London, on Monday, the 26th July, and daily thereafter until Saturday, the 31st July, inclusive, between the hours of ten and two.

They will be formally entered and put on the list at Croydon by the clerk of assize, in the order of their provisional entry, and before causes entered at Croydon.

In case any record entered in London be withdrawn before the opening of the commission at Croydon, the entry stamps will be returned.

A list of causes for trial each day will be sent to London on the evening of the previous day, and will be affixed outside the porter's lodge, Serjeants'-inn, Chancery-lane, and also outside the office of Mr. Abbott, the Under-Sheriff, No. 8, New-inn, Strand, as soon as possible after the list can be arranged.

The first day's list will not extend beyond the twentieth common jury in the list of causes provisionally entered, should there be so many. The list of causes provisionally entered may be seen at the London Office of the Clerk of the Assize.

No cause will be allowed to be entered under any circumstances after the sitting of the court.

This arrangement may not apply to future assizes.

By order of Her Majesty's Judges of Assize.

LAW SOCIETIES.

THE HAMPSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

The inaugural dinner of this society was held at the Pier Hotel, Southsea, on Thursday evening, July 21, and passed off in a very successful and agreeable manner. The want of a society of this kind has been long felt by the members of the legal Profession, and now that it has been fairly established it is hoped and expected that the advantages it offers will be generally appreciated. The objects of the society are set forth in the rules as follows:

—1. To protect and sustain the interests and character of the legal Profession, and to promote fair and honourable practice. 2. To originate, watch, discuss, and, if necessary, petition, in relation to measures producing changes in the law affecting the legal Profession. 3. To establish and maintain a law library, if and when found practicable. 4. To adopt such measures or do such acts as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of all or any of the above objects. The attendance at the opening dinner was not so numerous as had been expected, some of the members having from unavoidable causes been unable to be present. The chair was occupied by Mr. Ald. Hellard, the president of the society, and the vice-chair by Mr. Ald. Henry Ford, the vice-president; and among those present were Messrs. C. H. Binsteed, T. Cousins, hon. secretary; A. Besant, hon. treasurer; S. S. Long, J. J. Webb, T. J. Provis, Fareham; W. Reade, jun., Ringwood; E. P. Joyce, Newport; E. Goble, Fareham; S. J. Elliott, W. H. Ford, A. S. Blake, H. Reed, &c. The dinner was served in excellent style, under the personal superintendence of Miss Dare, the manageress, and the wines were of the first quality. On the removal of the cloth,

The usual toasts were proposed, and then the Chairman proposed the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Hampshire Law Society." (Applause.) He could not but express his great pleasure at seeing so many gentlemen connected with the legal profession present, because if there was one profession in which it was desirable that there should be a community of good feeling it was in that of the law, for interests were concerned deeply affecting the well-being of society—interests of a variety of kinds, often delicate in their nature, and involving momentous questions, and often dependent upon the mutual good feeling and honesty of intention which generally existed in the Profession. The well-being of society, and the interests of their clients were all concerned, and if such objects were promoted by societies of this kind it was desirable that they should be supported. (Hear, hear.) Another object which struck him as very desirable was that a society of this kind promoted, to say the least, a sort of uniformity of practice. (Hear, hear.) At times, of course, questions of what was right practice or otherwise would arise, and when gentlemen had opportunities of meeting each other and interchanging their views it would have its proper influence on all parties, and tend to produce that general reliance on, and good feeling towards, each other that they ought all to entertain. (Applause.) Mr. Cousins had kindly taken a great interest in the matter, and he would follow, and he was sure press upon them the desirability of adding to their numbers, in order to enlarge the sphere of operations of the society and extend its benefits in all respects. (Applause.)

Mr. T. Cousins, after some preliminary observations, said that they were aware that the society originated with a few gentlemen dining together, and having been put into shape and worked up from time to time it had assumed the important position in the borough it now occupied. The chairman had been pleased to pay him a compliment, but no one could possibly have paid more attention to the matter than their friend Mr. Hellard had. (Hear, hear.) If it had not been for Mr. Hellard this society would never have been in existence, and certainly would never have occupied the position it did now. (Hear, hear.) He had not only attended their general meeting, but every meeting of the committee, and they were all proud of a gentleman who occupied such an eminent position in his profession. (Applause.) One object of the society was to promote fair and honourable practice, and he would go a step further and say that he believed that in the state of public opinion with reference to changes in the law and law reforms, societies of this description were exceedingly necessary for the purpose of carefully watching all changes in law, not so much in reference to their own interests, as those of the public at large. (Hear, hear.) And after all, the Profession constituted the real legislators of the country, and led public opinion with reference to legal changes. When any change was made, it was either the Attorney-General, or Solicitor-General, or some eminent member of the legal Profession who introduced the Bill and got it passed into law. These societies were important, because by representing the opinion of the majority of the members they might influence legislation. (Hear, hear.) It was highly important that these societies should exist because they, as practical lawyers, did really know what the law ought to be, on practical and even theoretical grounds, a great deal better than many of those who had to make the laws. As to the law library he would not say a word, because they could not find the means or the disposition among their country friends to establish one at present. He thought that societies of this kind not only promoted uniformity of practice, but also that generous and kindly feeling which ought to exist among all members of the same profession. (Hear, hear.) After mentioning that a number of other gentlemen would have attended, but for circumstances over which they had no control, he said he had been asked to mention the name of their friend, Mr. Alderman Stigant, who was in a delicate state of health, and who wished him to state particularly how warm an interest he felt in the society, and how exceedingly sorry he was that he could not be there to-night. (Hear, hear.) If any little time or trouble he had spent in getting this meeting together had been productive of the slightest good, he could only say that his professional friends were perfectly welcome to it, and his reward was in seeing them present to-night. (Applause.)

Mr. Binsteed said that a very pleasing duty had been entrusted to him, and that was to propose "The President of the Society." (Applause.) Among the many objects of a society like this he felt that the most important was that of raising the tone of the character of their own body. (Hear, hear.) No body of men was so much abused as their own, and nobody was so essential to the existence, the comfort, and the welfare of all. (Hear, hear.) He believed it was quite true that they had succeeded to the position occupied by the family confessor of the Roman time. They were the depositaries of the secrets of families; they were often the depositaries of the miseries of families; and it rested with them to cure those miseries, and to compromise, and to arrange, and repair mischiefs and misfortunes that overhung families, in a vast number of circumstances. It was essential, for the welfare of their fellows, even more than for their own dignity, that their character should be maintained, and he was sure that the gentlemen who had attended the previous meetings of the society had done the best they could to maintain and elevate the character of their body by electing their friend, Mr. Hellard, as their president. (Applause.) He was sure that the election of Mr. Hellard, as president was a guarantee of the wish of all the members who had hitherto joined that the character of the association, and the honour and dignity of the Profession should be maintained, and that they should do the utmost they could to obtain the good feeling of their fellows, and to remove from public opinion the idea that they were to be "sold" for a few guineas at any time. (Hear, hear.) One constantly saw most flagitious and fraudulent cases carried on by members of their profession, simply because they were retained to do it. He hoped that that was the characteristic of some few only, and they should endeavour to impress upon the public that those individuals furnished exceptions to the rule on which their practice was maintained. (Applause.)

The Chairman said he hardly felt that he deserved their kind expression of feeling, except that having for upwards of forty years been a member of the Profession he had had some considerable experience of matters, and although his line of practice was not that which had brought him before the public so much as that of many others he had probably seen as much of the main-springs of life as most men. He quite endorsed what had been said by his friend Mr. Binsteed as to the importance of maintaining the status, honour, and position of the Profession. His wish had always been to do so—(applause)—and it would continue to be so, and anything he could do to advance the interests of a society like this he should be always ready to do. (Applause.)

Mr. W. Reade, jun., proposed, "The officers of the society." He pointed out that upon the officers the real working of the society, whether for good or evil, to a great extent depended. They had an arduous duty to perform, as they had to steer between Scylla and Charybdis. These gentlemen would, primâ facie, be responsible for the next twelve-months for the way the society went on; whether this should be the first and last dinner, or whether, as he trusted, it would be the commencement of a long series, and that the society would grow greater and greater every year, and extend throughout Hampshire those principles and feelings without which the legal Profession became a mockery and a sham. (Applause.) He felt that the existence and power of a society of this kind were essentially necessary if they wished to raise the character of this branch of the Profession. They were the most powerful body in England. The one temporal subject who took precedence of every other was the Lord Chancellor. Who made the Lord Chancellor? Popular prejudice imagined that the Queen or the Premier made him, but it was the attorneys who did so. (Hear, hear, and a laugh.) It was the attorneys who distributed the prizes at the Bar; and the members of the Bar were nothing more nor less than their tenants at will. How important, then, that the instruments from which those results spring, should be pure in every way. (Hear, hear.) They could not secure the proper working of the society without a proper staff of officers, and he was sure that they could repose implicit confidence in those they had selected. (Cheers.)

The Vice-Chairman responded, and after paying a graceful compliment to Mr. Reade for the able manner in which he had proposed the last toast, said that during the thirty-five years he had been connected with the Profession he had often thought that such an institution as this would tend to elevate and maintain the position of the Profession. The great object was not merely to secure advantages for themselves, but to promote the high and honourable character of their Profession, so as to gain something for their clients. He thought that anything that tended to elevate the character of members of the Profession must be a benefit to their clients. (Hear, hear.) Speaking on behalf of the executive officers, it would be their study to promote the objects defined so ably in the rules. Mr. Cousins had devoted a great deal of time and trouble, and all the energy he possessed, to get them together, and he had been well assisted by the president. He trusted that next year they would have a great accession of members. To-day he had received the authority of Mr. J. H. Hearn, of Newport, to put his name down as a member, and he had no doubt that when the society became known, and that it had been brought into existence, they would have a great many more members. (Hear, hear.) One great benefit to be derived from the society was that young members, on entering the Profession, would have a body to go to for their guidance and instruction. (Hear, hear.) He believed that they would gain public opinion by raising the character of the Profession. He should be too glad to assist in every possible way he could in promoting the interest and the welfare of a profession with which he had been so long connected. (Applause.)

Mr. Provis, in complimentary terms, proposed, "The Press," which was responded to by Mr. Hay and Mr. Green.

"The Ladies," was proposed in a neat speech by Mr. Blake, and after Mr. Joyce had responded, the formal portion of the proceedings was brought to a close.

TOTAL SUM ASSURED, £3,027,386. INCOME, £126,627. ASSURANCE FUND, £623,773.
NEW BUSINESS OF 1868—SUMS ASSURED, £356,833; NEW PREMIUMS, £11,318.
INCREASE OF THE ASSETS DURING THE YEAR, £67,952.

Nine-tenths of the Total Profits are divided among the Assured. Considerably more than one-tenth of the Profits is derived from Policies which do not participate in the Profits, so that the Assured have larger Bonuses than if they formed a Mutual Insurance Company and received the whole of the Profits derived from their own Policies.

The Expenses of Management are less than Four per Cent. on the Income.

The Premiums are calculated for every half-year of age.

The Conditions of the Policies allow persons whose lives are insured to Reside or Travel, without special licence or payment of an extra premium, in any part of the world, distant more than 33 degrees from the Equator.

Policies in the hands of third parties are not vitiated by suicide, or by the life assured transgressing the stipulated limits.

The business of the Society includes the granting of Loans on the Society's Policies, on Life Interests, Reversions, and other approved Securities; also the Purchase of Life Interests and Reversions, and the grant of Immediate and Survivorship Annuities.

The Annual Reports are regularly printed, with full accounts of the Receipts and Expenditure, and may be obtained by written or personal application at the Office.

THE USUAL COMMISSION ALLOWED TO SOLICITORS ON ALL POLICIES INTRODUCED BY THEM.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY POLICIES, UNFORFEITABLE, UNCONDITIONAL, AND UNCHALLENGEABLE, ISSUED BY THE PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY.

62, LUDGATE-HILL, LONDON, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1848.

The Directors of this Company, in deference to an objection not unfrequently urged by persons invited to assure, that the ordinary mode of Life Assurance is in their opinion defective or uncertain, by reason of the operation of the customary conditions, have resolved to promulgate the present tables, and to issue Assurances under them which shall be absolutely Unforfeitable, Unconditional, and Unchallengeable.

For the reason referred to, many persons hesitate or decline to assure on the ground that, in the event of inability or unwillingness to continue payment of their premiums, the Assurance will become forfeited. To this class of the public the system now introduced will especially commend itself, being entirely free from all conditions of forfeiture on account of non-payment of premium, or from any other cause whatever; while at the same time it absolutely guarantees at death, even when a default is made in payment of the premium, a fixed sum in respect of every premium paid, bearing the same proportion to the total amount assured as the number of premiums actually paid may bear to the whole number originally contracted to be paid.

Besides this important advantage, every policy will expressly state what sum can at any time be withdrawn on the discontinuance of the Assurance.

The Assured will thus always have the option of retaining either an ascertained fixed sum payable at death, or, in case of need, of withdrawing a certain amount, according to the duration of the Policy, such amounts being set forth on every Policy, and rendering unnecessary any future reference to the Company on these points, as is the case with ordinary Assurances.

Creditors assuring the lives of debtors will appreciate this feature as one greatly protective of their interests, and it will likewise commend itself to bankers, capitalists, and others who are in the habit of making advances collaterally secured by Life Policies, as they can at any time learn, by mere inspection, the exact value, either immediate or reversionary, of a Policy of this description.

Every Policy issued on this plan will be without any conditions as to voyaging, foreign residence, or other usual limitations. By this freedom from restrictions of all kinds, the objections before referred to will be entirely removed, and the Policies will become at once positively valuable as actual securities.

In addition to the foregoing statement of advantages, the number of premiums is strictly defined. The longest term provided for is twenty-five years, and the shortest five years, as shown by the Tables. Thus, bankers, creditors, and others holding Policies of this class as security, may always know the utmost amount they may be called upon to advance so as to maintain the full benefit of the Assurances—a matter of great importance where Policies are held as collateral security.

It is only necessary to add that, as a consequence of the Policies under these Tables being unforfeitable and unconditional, they will also be unchallengeable on any ground whatever. They may therefore be aptly termed Absolute Security Policies.

The Prudential Assurance Company possesses an income of 215,000*l.* a-year; its position is unquestionable; and it obtains the largest amount of new business of any office in the kingdom.

HENRY HARBEN, Secretary.

IMPERIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

CHIEF OFFICE.—No. 1, Old Broad-street, London.

BRANCH OFFICE.—No. 16, Pall-mall, London.

INSTITUTED 1820.

The outstanding sums assured by this Company, with the Bonuses accrued thereon, amounting to about 2,800,000*l.*, and the Assets, consisting entirely of Investments in first-class securities, amount to upwards of 90,000*l.*

The Assurance Reserve Fund alone is equal to more than nine times the premium income.

It will hence be seen that ample Security is guaranteed to the policy holders. Attention is invited to the prospectus of the company, from which it will appear that all kinds of assurances may be effected on the most moderate terms and the most liberal conditions.

The company also grants annuities and endowments.

Prospectuses may be obtained at the offices as above, and the agents throughout the kingdom.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

It is said that Mr. EDMOND BEALES is to be rewarded for his political services by the vacancy that will shortly occur in one of the County Court Judgeships. He has earned it, and it would be most ungrateful of the Government not to do something for him.

At the request of the Home Office assaults upon the police, which hitherto have been relegated for trial to the second court at the Middlesex Sessions, will for the future be taken in the first court. This new regulation was observed for the first time at the present sessions, and on Thursday those indictments were disposed of accordingly by Mr. Serjeant Cox, the Deputy Assistant Judge.

The Bankruptcy and Imprisonment for Debt Bills have passed through all their stages, and now only await the Royal assent.

The Select Committee on Elections proposes further work for the County Courts, which is that they should adjudicate upon disputed municipal elections. As these elections are annual, and a great deal of bribery usually goes on, this new jurisdiction might form an important item in the labours of the overloaded County Court Judges.

The Incorporated Law Society have appointed Mr. FITZROY KELLY Lecturer and Reader on Equity; Mr. HOWARD W. ELPHINSTONE on Conveyancing; and Mr. HENRY M. BOMPAS on Common Law.

THE HOME CIRCUIT.

We cannot help thinking that one of the wisest recommendations of the Judicature Commission is that which advises the abolition of the Home Circuit. At present an expensive machinery is in operation for transacting business, which at all towns save the last is limited and unimportant. The last town being arrived at, an enormous list half rotten is attacked amidst a scene of wild confusion and discomfort. We think we can undertake to say that no circuit ever boasted of such a deceptive and delusive cause list as we annually find at Croydon or Kingston, as the case may be, and we are certain that no circuit has better cause to blush for the accommodation provided for the immense professional power which is brought to bear, directly or indirectly, more frequently the latter, on the disposal of the business. A very large Bar invariably visits the last town on the Home Circuit, and on the opening of the court the scene which presents itself is a closely packed area of wigs and anxious faces. The charmed circle or square within which the few barristers sit who have business is most ingeniously rendered inaccessible save by a very narrow passage on one side. The consequence is that this passage becomes blocked up by the superabundant Bar, and those who require to consult a leader or take part in the proceedings, have to exercise their agility in leaping the barrier. To men of thirteen and fourteen stone this is a serious undertaking, and it certainly is not one which ought to be rendered necessary.

We have been speaking of the first court.
The second court, on the ground floor, is more commodious, and far better arranged. Barristers can approach and can leave their seats with facility and dignity, and the absence of overcrowding enables the proceedings to be conducted with satisfaction to all parties. This fact, however, is a trifle compared to the preponderance of inconvenience resulting from the existence of the circuit. We believe few of the members would regret its extinction, whilst it is quite obvious that London solicitors would have cause to rejoice.

JUDGES' SONS.

The present period of the year is that at which revising barristers are appointed. Revising barristerships are in the gift of the senior judge of assize, and heretofore it has been the custom for the Judges to ratify in succeeding years the appointments made by their predecessors, unless circumstances arise demanding a change. In this way it has frequently been in the power of Judges to recognise unsuccessful merit and to provide for necessitous members of circuits during the remainder of their lives. That pleasant and admirable period in the history of the Profession appears to be gone for ever, unless the next generation of Judges reverse the decree of the present. That decree appears to be that revising barristerships shall be given, in the first instance, to Judges' sons, and an example of the fidelity with which this decree is observed is afforded by the Home Circuit. The first appointment made at these assizes was in favour, not of a Judge's son proper, it is true, but of the grandson of an ex-Lord Chancellor, namely, Mr. JEMMETT, a gentleman of the Equity Bar, and, what is of more importance, as far as we are aware, quite new to the business of registration. The second appointment has, we are given to understand, been conferred upon Mr. CHANNELL, son of the learned Baron, and a third, it is stated, is to be the prize of Mr.
VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, son of the ex-judge.

Now, we will assume that these may be in themselves excellent appointments. It is hard to speak slightly of untried men, and we should not have commented upon the subject had there been vacancies to fill in the ordinary course of things. But vacancies have been created. To take an instance; a gentleman of singular ill-fortune at the bar and in his domestic circle was appointed to a revising barristership by a most kind-hearted Judge.
The gift was no mean boon, and was appreciated as such. Now he has been removed, and the grandson of Lord St. LEONARDS succeeds. It is reported to us that another gentleman of long standing, and admitted capacity and experience, has been removed, or rather passed over, in like manner.

As we have remarked, we have nothing to say against Judges' sons, they may claim to share with others the offices to which their merits and standing entitle them; but we do consider it a matter for great regret that public offices should be bestowed on them by preference.
Great indignation has been excited on the Home Circuit by these incidents; and by reason also that it was stated that the Judges had met and determined that revising barristerships are offices for which Judges' sons are fitted, and to which they ought to be appointed.

It is with much regret that we bring this matter so prominently forward. Probably small good will be effected; but we shall have discharged our duty to the Profession by doing our utmost to clear the way to promotion for the laborious and capable members of the Profession.

ARREST AND DETENTION OF BANKRUPTS.

THE facts of the recent case of Myers v. Veitch, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 848, Q. B., upon which we founded our remarks last week, a correspondent informs us, were somewhat inaccurately stated. The plaintiff, it seems, was not a debtor who had executed a composition-deed, but a bankrupt who had surrendered to the adjudication, and was under summons to appear on his last examination. He had had granted to him protection until that period in the usual way, and at the time of his arrest produced it to the sheriff's officer, but did not serve a copy thereof upon that officer, as required by the 113th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849. He was forthwith, and before he had the opportunity of obtaining a copy of the protection, lodged in Walton gaol. He thereupon obtained a copy of his protection, and served it upon the gaoler, but the latter refused to release him, and he remained in prison for several days. Upon being discharged he brought an action against the gaoler for wrongful detention, and sought, under sect. 113, to enforce the penalty of 5*l.* per day for each day he was detained. The court held that the penalty was enforceable against the sheriff's officer only, and that on the bankrupt being lodged in gaol there was no penalty enforceable against the gaoler. Our correspondent remarks that the effect of this restricted construction of the section will entail the necessity of every bankrupt being provided with a copy of his protection other than the one he usually holds, and further, he adds that there is no bankrupt at present passing through the courts who may not, providing, of course, that there is an execution issued against him, be arrested and lodged in gaol, for in no case do they provide themselves with a second copy of their protection, and there appears to be no obligation upon the sheriff's officer to wait till they can obtain one. We agree with our correspondent that the Judges appear to have taken a somewhat technical view of the section. The object of the penalty was to make the protection inviolable and ensure a bankrupt's liberty from being interfered with on his transit through the court. To limit the liability to a penalty to the sheriff's officer is to neutralise to a great extent the object of the provision, as any unfortunate bankrupt without a duplicate protection might be arrested and taken at once to prison, and kept there with impunity.

A STRANGE SENTENCE.

WE have had too much experience of the injustice with which critics who were not present at the trial find fault with the sentences of the Judges, not to feel some hesitation at noting the strange termination of a very strange case that came before Baron CLEASBY.

A gamekeeper had chased two poachers; one of them turned, deliberately took aim at him with a gun he carried, fired, and when his victim fell, went up to him and discharged the other barrel into his head, killing him instantly. This was a murder most hideous in its character, but it was converted into manslaughter by the fact that the keeper had pursued the poacher beyond the boundary of the land, and, therefore, was himself then doing an unlawful act in attempting to capture the poacher. Of course, the real character of the crime is in no way changed by this purely legal quibble. The murderer was ignorant of the nice legal distinction and it was only by accident that he killed his victim on one side of a hedge instead of on the other side of it. Nevertheless the facts plainly reduced the crime in contemplation of law from murder to manslaughter, and the jury, directed by the Judge, found accordingly. But it was manslaughter in the highest degree, and to all seeming deserved the greatest punishment that can be awarded to that offence. Morally and socially it was murder. Manslaughter is a crime that we are repeatedly told by Judges varies in degree from murder to misadventure, and requires a wide scale of punishment. If ever there was a case that called for the infliction of the highest penalty, this would appear to have been one; and so it seems thought the audience, for when they were looking for a sentence of penal servitude for life, they were astounded to hear this atrocious criminal condemned to no more than penal servitude for seven years. The public has since shared their astonishment, and the Profession is as much puzzled as the public and the press to understand the meaning of it.

THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

THE House of Lords, by reading the Married Women's Property Bill a second time, has admitted that in the interest of the female portion of the community very considerable changes in the law ought to be made. To this extent the sentiment of both Houses and of the general public is concurrent. That the existing law is accessory to many cases of hardship and cruelty towards wives, is recognised on all hands. The difficulty is in fixing the precise mode and degree in which the law should be altered, and on this very conflicting opinions may with much show of argument be entertained. As the law of property between husband and wife will not be interfered with during the present session of Parliament, but will without doubt receive very important modifications at an early period, it is a matter of some moment that the interval should not be allowed to pass over without much discussion of the best possible settlement of this most complex and embarrassing question.

We have on several occasions expressed an opinion that the changes proposed by Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY's Bill are of far too sweeping a character. The principle of that Bill is—1st, that in regard to property accrued or accruing to a woman before or after marriage, she should, notwithstanding her coverture, have all the rights and privileges of a feme sole; and, 2nd, that notwithstanding coverture, she shall be at liberty to contract, and to sue and be sued, as if she were a feme sole. The essence of the Bill may be summed up in the words "coverture shall not be any disability." We take leave to dispute the expediency of setting up any such general proposition as the basis of legislation. We cannot divest ourselves of the old-fashioned notion—a notion confirmed by universal experience—that the husband is the natural and proper head of the family, and that in some degree the wife is, and ought to be, subordinate. The real question is as to the extent to which the law should directly or indirectly lend its aid towards insuring due obedience on the part of the wife.

At the present time the law assists the husband, first, by giving him the legal custody of his wife; secondly, by giving him her property, or some estate or interest therein according to its nature; and, thirdly, by disabling the wife from entering into any contract or suing or being sued. We do not understand that there is any attempt to alter the law on the first head, yet it seems to us not a trifling anomaly, that, reversing all the traditions of our jurisprudence, property is to be regarded before personal liberty. In regard to the second head, we freely admit that some alteration is required. We believe neither in the expediency of vesting the entire personal estate of the wife in the husband as at present, nor in that of permitting the wife alone to have the use and control, the jus disponendi as well as the jus fruendi, as proposed by the Bill. It is at least worthy of consideration whether the property of the wife (other than personal chattels and personal earnings of the wife, as to which there should be special provisions), should not be vested in the wife as a feme sole at law and in equity, but without the power to alienate the same or anticipate the income therefrom during the coverture without the consent of the husband. In aliening any property except chattels personal capable of delivery, the freedom of the wife from constraint might be evidenced in the manner required by the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries. The wife without the consent of the husband might be permitted to make any lease of her lands not required by law to be in writing. As incidental to the ownership of the wife, it would be necessary to confer on her the power of contracting, and of suing or being sued in relation to her property, or the rents or management thereof.

One of the main designs of the alteration of the law is to prevent a good-for-nothing or dissolute husband from breaking up the home by selling household effects belonging to the wife; something might be done towards preventing this by enacting that personal chattels belonging to the wife should during the coverture be vested in the husband and wife jointly, and that any sale or disposition by either without the consent of the other (not being a sale in market overt to a purchaser without notice), should be ineffectual, and that on any sale by the husband without the consent of the wife, she should be empowered as a feme sole to sue him and recover damages for the unlawful conversion of the property.

Another main design of the Bill was to preserve to married women their personal earnings, although not deserted by their husbands, so as to come within the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21. Such earnings should, as it seems to us, belong to the wife by the highest of all titles, and although we cannot but feel that there are the gravest objections to conferring upon married women an unlimited power of entering into contracts, the balance of advantage appears to be in favour of enabling a married woman who has actually fulfilled her part of a contract, to sue for, or give a good receipt for, the consideration, and to hold the same as a feme sole. Under such circumstances we do not see why she might not, although not deserted by her husband, have her earnings protected in the same manner as if she had obtained a protection order under the section to which we have before alluded.

In regard to the third head:—The proposed abolition of the disability of married women in regard to contracts and actions we do not view with much favour. To suppose that the sanctity of the conjugal relationship, the peace of families, or the welfare of the state will be promoted by enabling a wife, without the consent of her husband, and in the face of his most strenuous opposition, to fetter herself with contracts, at variance possibly with her duties as a wife and mother, and by which her property may be dissipated, appears to us wholly preposterous. The same reasons which lead us to contend that a married woman ought not to have an uncontrolled power of disposition over her property during the coverture, apply, if possible, with greater weight to deprive her of the power of contracting, of suing and being sued. No legislation can prevent the husband from being practically liable for the results of his wife's contracts, if she be permitted to contract. If she cannot fulfil her engagements, in the vast majority of instances, the husband, if able, will have no option but to fulfil them himself, or satisfy the damages arising from their non-fulfilment.

The advocates of the Bill, as it stands, say that by the machinery of settlements a wife in the upper classes of society has even now, under the limitations to her separate use, the privileges of a feme sole. This is not a fair way of stating the case. Wives are protected, and protected effectually, by means of settlements; but it would be a very extraordinary marriage settlement which should limit the property of a lady where there was any possibility of her having issue, so that she might have as against the issue an uncontrolled power of disposition. No doubt such settlements have been made and will be made again; but they are altogether exceptional, and to base a general legislative enactment upon them would be ridiculous. It appears from the report of the special commission that in Massachusetts the wife has no power without the consent of the husband to dispose by gift inter vivos of real estate or shares in corporations, although it seems she may do so by will. Whether a married woman should be permitted to dispose of her property by will, and thus, if she thinks fit, to defeat her husband and children, may be a question; for our own part, we do not believe it to be expedient that as a rule she should have such a power, though there may be no objection to giving her a testamentary power, of exclusive appointment among her husband and issue. The inexpediency of going beyond the Massachusetts law in regard to her power of disposition inter vivos appears to us free from doubt. It should be remembered that the usages and feelings of Massachusetts much more nearly approximate to those of English society than do those of New York and the other more intensely democratic communities of the Far West, to the law in which, with regard to husband and wife, it is proposed that our own should be made to assimilate. As to the devolution of the wife's personality on her death intestate, we see no ground for altering the present law. An abstract notion of symmetry and equality is obviously insufficient. The point, however, is one of quite minor importance.

As to the wife's debts contracted before marriage, it is clear that if marriage is to any extent to operate as a disability, the husband, and not the creditor, ought to suffer. Where the husband satisfies such debts, there should be no dif-faculty in giving him a charge on the wife's property in order to recoup himself the amount.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

VII.—STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 34.)

This is an Act to amend the law as to the appointment of deputies to stipendiary magistrates. It repeals the 30th section of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 13, and in lieu thereof enacts that any stipendiary or police magistrate may, with approval of the Home Secretary, appoint a barrister of at least seven years' standing to act for him for a time not exceeding six weeks in any consecutive period of twelve calendar months, and in case of sickness or unavoidable absence for not exceeding three months at one time.

VIII.—SPECIAL BAILS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 38.)

After reciting that it is expedient to increase the number of persons authorised to take special bails in civil proceedings, depending in the Superior Courts of Law and in proceedings in error and on appeal, it enacts that all persons authorised to take affidavits in the common law courts may also take special bails. The word "bail" in all the Acts relating to it shall be held to include bail in error and bail on any appeal. The commissioners may receive the same fees as are payable under the Act of William and Mary for the same services or such other as the Treasury, with the approval of three Judges, may order. The rules and practice of the courts relating to bail are to apply to this Act.

But it is expressly provided by sect. 5 that no attorney or solicitor shall exercise the powers of the Act in any proceeding in which he is the attorney or solicitor of any of the parties to that proceeding, or in which he is interested.

IX.—SUNDAY AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.

(32 & 33 Vict. c. 40.)
